Who, then, will object to this species of tax? It is said the opposition comes from the tobacco-growers, and on account of this interest and the fear of seeming to levy any tax on the producers we must desist. To a similar objection when the cotton question was under consideration the distinguished chairman of the committee replied that the tax need not be paid by the planter; the cotton may be removed from one collection district to another in bond and the duties or tax will thus be practically paid by the purchaser. Under my amendment the manufacturer will virtually pay the tax on it when he removes it for consumption. Then tobacco-growers are in the ruts of usage, and must be educated to know their own interests. Nor can the consumer find fault; the duty falls on him in either instance, and if no higher it is no matter to him whether it be levied between its growth and manufacture or afterward; but the consumer really pays much less by this levy of twenty cents a pound on the raw tobacco.

The revenue commission state that 42,809.18 pounds of tobacco, "at the present rate of excise, would return an annual revenue of $15,786,795." At twenty cents per pound the consumers would pay but little over $8,000,000, and even adding twenty-five per cent. for losses in the manufacture only $12,000,000, the additional tax being necessary under the present system to make up for the amounts which escape the tax. The manufacturers are nearly prostrated at present and ask for redress. The legitimate consumption of tobacco is not more than half what it was, Government being a loser equally with the honest manufacturer. The Louisville Board of Trade reported sales of but 35,112 hogheads of tobacco for the first ten months of 1865 against 63,332 for the same months of 1864. For the year 1865 the decrease in the returns of chewing-tobacco was fifty-eight per cent., and of smoking-tobacco sixty-two per cent., and all this time many thousand employes have been thrown out of business. The excise on tobacco in the leaf is found to work well in other countries and I hope will yet be adopted here.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] will not deem me ungracious or unkind if I do not take time to reply to what he has said. I will merely say that I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment of Mr. MYERS was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On cigarettes, or small cigars, made of tobacco inclosed in a wrapper or binder, and not over three and a half inches in length, the market value of which (tax included) is not over six dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand; when the market value is over six dollars and not over ten dollars per thousand, (tax included), and on cheroots, and cigars known as short-sixes, and on any cigars made with or without pasted or twisted heads, the market value of which (tax included) is not over ten dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend this paragraph so that it shall read as follows:

twisted heads, the market value of which (tax included) is not over eight dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand; when the market value is over eight dollars and not over twelve dollars per thousand, (tax included), and on cheroots, and cigars known as short-sixes, and on any cigars, the market value of which (tax included) is not over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. For the paragraph as now amended we are very thankful, so far as it goes, because so far as it does go it rights a great wrong. But still, as it is not sufficient for all the purposes of justice, I will move to strike out this paragraph as amended, and substitute the following:

On cigarettes, or small cigars, made of tobacco, inclosed in a wrapper or binder, and not over three and a half inches in length, and on cigars made with twisted heads, the market value of which (exclusive of the tax) is not over six dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand.

On cheroots and cigars known as short-sixes, and cigars made with pasted heads, the market value of which (exclusive of the tax) is not over eight dollars per thousand, and on all cigarettes and cigars, the market value of which (exclusive of the tax) is over six dollars and not over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand.

On all cigarettes, cheroots, and cigars, the market value of which (exclusive of the tax) is over twelve dollars and not over twenty dollars per thousand, a tax of ten dollars per thousand.

On all cigarettes, cheroots, and cigars, the market value of which (exclusive of the tax) is over twenty dollars and not over forty dollars per thousand, a tax of twenty dollars per thousand.

On all cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots, the market value of which (exclusive of the tax) is over forty dollars per thousand, a tax of forty dollars per thousand.

I had the honor of having printed some time ago an amendment to this bill, which was substantially the same as the one I have just offered, except that I have changed the rate and made it exclusive of the tax instead of inclusive of it. I found that by following the idea introduced by the Committee of Ways and Means, and making the price inclusive of the tax, it would involve us in this absurdity: for instance, when the price of cigars is made up by including the tax, by imposing a tax of twenty dollars a thousand on cigars over twenty dollars a thousand, you would include the cigars originally costing six dollars a thousand in the higher classes. But the whole matter is made fair by leaving the tax entirely out of the computation of the price, and making the tax rest upon the price of the cigars exclusive of the tax, and while the same result is arrived at we are not involved in the absurdity I have stated.

Now, sir, to go back to the subject and purpose of this amendment generally, I might repeat to some extent what I said before in regard to smoking-tobacco. It is needless, however, to do so. It is sufficient to state that by the existing law, putting all upon a dead level, making all cigars pay ten dollars a thousand, you have utterly crushed out the whole western interest in the production of tobacco and its manufacture into cigars. I live in Dayton, Ohio, a little city of some thirty thousand inhabitants. Before you put your tax on as you have done, we were making there nine million cheap cigars. Now we do not make one. The whole interest has been destroyed. With the destruction of the interest in the manufacture of these common twisted-head cigars, the interest connected with the growth of the tobacco has likewise been destroyed. In the district which I represent we raise nearly one half of all the tobacco raised in Ohio; and the tobacco raised in that district, in that State, in all the western States, in the Northwest, and in Pennsylvania, is a tobacco from which are manufactured cigars of this cheap character.

By imposing a level tax, putting the same burden upon the cheap cigars used by the poor man as upon the finest cigar made of Connecticut or other leaf, you have crushed out completely the western interest; so that you are at present getting no revenue from us, while you are at the same time depriving our people of the opportunity of indulging this practice, which I do not advocate myself personally, any more than my friend from Oregon, [Mr. HENDERSON,] but which my people are interested in, because they cannot now obtain cigars at all at a price within their reach.

Now, sir, my own impression is that it might be better, if it were practicable, to levy your tax upon the leaf. Without, however, a system of domiciliary visitation all over the country and a numberless swarm of office-holders, you could not collect the tax if levied in that way. Therefore the Committee of Ways and Means perhaps properly decided not to attempt taxation on the leaf. The next best thing, probably, would be to levy your tax altogether ad valorem, making every cigar, everything connected with this interest, pay taxation in proportion to the value invested and the price at which the article might be sold. That not being done, I propose, by a system of gradation and classification, to reach as nearly as possible what would be something like an ad valorem duty.

Gentlemen of the Committee of Ways and Means and others connected with the legislation upon this subject say that you cannot resort to an ad valorem duty for fear of the numberless frauds which will be committed. I do not know how strong that argument ought to be considered. They say the same thing with reference to classification, that it opens the door for more frauds. I think, however, that by a little wholesome legislation we might prevent frauds in either case. But certainly, as a question of principle, just in proportion as you approach the levying of taxation according to the value of the articles taxed, you approach that principle of justice which every man will feel ought to be regarded in apportioning the burdens of the Government.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, we are all fully aware of the ability and the tenacity of purpose of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.] He does not yield a hair's breadth even when the committee are disposed to accommodate him. I rather think, however, that the Committee of Ways and Means have investigated this subject more extensively than the gentleman from the Dayton district of Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.] who appears to have looked at it only on the side of the lowest-priced tobacco. It is an old subject, and one which has been investigated at every session of Congress for the last four years, and one not without its perplexities. But having tested various provisions of law, tried each in turn, we ought now to profit by experience and hold fast to that which proves the best.

The gentleman's colleague [Mr. LAWRENCE] stated that the revenue commission, who had made a report on this subject, had not visited the West. The gentleman was mistaken. The revenue commission did not make any report on this subject, not having the time to devote to it. If they had had more time they doubtless would have fully investigated this question, as they did others. They commenced upon the subject, and took considerable testimony, which will doubtless be of value hereafter, if opportunity shall be given for the complete investigation of the whole question.

The gentleman from Ohio proposes to go back to a system of legislation which we have already tried and found it almost an entire failure. The universal testimony of all the assessors, collectors, inspectors, and other revenue officers here at Washington is against the proposition. Let me, as an illustration, show what the result was when we had a gradation of tax upon cigars.

Take the year 1864. The tax upon cigars at three dollars yielded about $1,200,000; at eight dollars, $1,108,743 78; at fifteen dollars, $386,978 42; at twenty-five dollars, $73,442; and at forty dollars, $9,462. This shows conclusively the result of grading the tax will be that almost every cigar taxed will be taxed at the lowest duty.

I have a letter from a tobacco manufacturer at Detroit asserting the same fact. He goes on to say:

"When I called on you Tuesday last on the tobacco tax I forgot to say a word regarding the cigar tax. I am not a manufacturer of cigars, but deal in them quite largely, and I noticed when we had the graduating tax that it made no difference what price we paid for the cigars the stamps were always the three dollar stamp. I am opposed in toto to a graduating tax. Whatever tax you put on have it uniform. If you adopt the graduated tax you will make a mistake. I believe cigars will pay a ten dollar tax easier than any other."

Now, gentlemen may suppose I am adhering a little too closely to the bill in not allowing or consenting to further exemptions and further reductions. Let me read a letter from a western collector. He says, in effect, that at the next session of Congress we shall have to go back to the old rates of taxation, and declares our bill will produce much less revenue than is anticipated. He advises that we move slowly. He also says that the Commissioner is now making a far less stringent enforcement of the law this year than last, and that this will make a wide difference in the revenue.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed entirely to the rate offered by the gentleman from Ohio, and to his whole system of estimating the amount of tax on the value of cigars excluding the tax, on the market value. There is no market value except upon cigars which have paid a tax. It is against the law that they shall be offered in market except those which have paid the tax. Therefore the gentleman's absurdity rests upon his own shoulders entirely.

Mr. PAINE. I differ altogether with the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means as to the experience which the Government has had under the late law and under the law now in force. He has told you, and others have told me twenty times since this discussion commenced, that the old cigar tax was a failure, and that the system now in force is far preferable to that or any other. Now I say, sir, that the experience under the law enacted in 1864, and in force for a great part of 1865, and the experience of the country since the law of 1865 went into force, all go to show that the old law is better than the new one. I will refer to the figures. Let us refer to the taxes collected on cigars during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865. For the first three quarters these taxes were collected under the old and not under the new law, and I call the attention of the committee to the result. The following are the figures which come to us in the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and from the assertions reiterated again and again in this House I appeal to the figures of that report. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, the old law yielded, from cigars alone, a revenue of $3,048,127 66. That law was replaced by the law now in force, which took effect April 1, 1865, that is to say, at the commencement of the fourth quarter of the fiscal year 1865. But the new law, which was in force during the last quarter, yielded only $24,348 90. Gentlemen will see that the old law was twofold more productive than the new law during the same period of time.

Now, when we come down to the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and contrast the revenue yielded by the new law, for the first three quarters ending on the 31st day of March last, with the revenue yielded in the fiscal year 1865 by the old law, which expired at the end of the first three quarters of 1865, we find the following results, which I read from a statement furnished me by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The old law yielded $3,048,126 66, and the new law only $2,556,518 70. From all these figures I say it cannot be demonstrated that the old law was a total failure and the new law a complete success. I appeal from the assumptions and assertions of those who clamor so loudly against an ad valorem or a graded tax to the facts and figures of the Commissioner himself. On the contrary, sir, considering the disadvantages under which that law operated, I declare my conviction that it unmistakably demonstrated the superiority of an ad valorem or graded tax to this dead level duty of the committee. For, under that law, where there was a gradation, and where the taxes were assessed on different values, it was, as a matter of course, necessary that there should be a vast amount of machinery suggested and perfected by experience, and put in force by well prepared regulations. But such machinery was utterly wanting. That system had to run alone, so far as regulations were concerned. It only ran three quarters of a year, and there was no perfection in the instrumentalities for working out its results.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. The distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has reminded us that my colleague [Mr. SCHENCK] adheres to all his purposes with great tenacity. Sir, it is a virtue that he has learned, or might have learned, from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means himself. If the revenue commission had made a report upon this subject of the taxation of cigars and tobacco, and if that report had been in accordance with the views of the Committee of Ways and Means, I should have hesitated somewhat before asking this committee to change it. But, as I learn from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, that commission did not investigate this subject at all. They made no report upon it; and I beg this committee, therefore, to remember that in voting down the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means they are not voting down the recommendation of the revenue commission. The single question now presented to the committee is this: shall cigars, which are manufactured out of the low-priced tobacco raised in Ohio and other western States, pay an equal amount of tax with cigars manufactured from the more expensive and valuable tobacco raised in Connecticut? That is the question presented for the consideration of the committee, and it seems to me that, as a question of naked justice, the proposition is so bold as to strike the conscience and the judgment of every man who hears me.

Mr. Chairman, the value of Ohio tobacco is generally from seven to ten cents per pound; that of Connecticut is twenty-two cents per pound. Now, if you levy the same tax on the cigars made from Connecticut tobacco that you do upon cigars made from Ohio tobacco, each costing an equal amount of labor, the result will be, as it has been under the existing law, that you give a monopoly of the market to the manufacturer of the Connecticut tobacco and drive out of the market the product of the Ohio tobacco. That has been the result under the present law. I can give a single instance in my own district, which, I apprehend, is but an illustration of what occurred elsewhere all over the western States. A farmer raised a small crop of tobacco, and during the winter went to work and manufactured it into cigars himself. When he came to hunt up the assessor, to pay the tax on the cigars, he found that he could not sell the cigars for a sufficient sum to pay the tax. The result was that he was compelled to destroy them. Now, that is to be the result of this bill, if you levy the same tax on cigars manufactured from Connecticut tobacco and those manufactured from Ohio tobacco.

The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means tells us that he is opposed to the whole system of discrimination, to the whole ad valorem system. Why, sir, this very bill makes two grades of cigars, and taxes one two dollars per thousand and the other four dollars. If the principle be correct, extend it a little further, to all grades of tobacco.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] by striking out the following:

On cheroots and cigars known as short-sixes, and cigars made with pasted heads, the market value of which (exclusive of the tax) is not over eight dollars per thousand, and on all cigarettes and cigars the market value of which (exclusive of the tax) is over six dollars and not over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand.

On all cigarettes, cheroots, and cigars, the market value of which (tax included) is over twelve dollars and not over twenty dollars per thousand, a tax of ten dollars per thousand.

On all cigarettes, cheroots, and cigars, the market value of which (tax included) is over twenty dollars and not over forty dollars per thousand, a tax of twenty dollars per thousand.

On all cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots, the market value of which (tax included) is over forty dollars per thousand, a tax of forty dollars per thousand.

And insert in lieu thereof as follows:

On all other cigars four dollars per thousand, and forty per cent. ad valorem, exclusive of the tax: Provided, That in assessing the said ad valorem duty the first ten dollar valuation shall not be assessed.

Mr. Chairman, I hardly understand why the Committee of Ways and Means, after the experiment of a year, should insist upon imposing the same amount of tax on cigars worth ten dollars and cigars worth ninety dollars. It is downright, clear, bold-faced robbery.

The result of the tax which these gentlemen propose is this: they put a tax of ten dollars on all cigars, no matter what their value. Now, in my county they made of what is called Pennsylvania seed leaf—the same tobacco that is raised in Ohio and New York—a cigar which cost, perhaps, $12 50, and was worth about fifteen dollars. In Connecticut, or where they use the foreign leaf, they make cigars ranging from thirty to ninety dollars. The same tax, ten dollars, was imposed on both. What was the result? The year before that tax was laid, my county raised $2,000,000 worth of tobacco; and this year they do not raise $2,000 worth! The whole tobacco interest of Pennsylvania and New York is crushed out for the benefit of Connecticut. I only state this fact that gentlemen may be enabled to determine whether this heavy tax, which is thus destroying the tobacco interest of a large section of country, and building up that of a very small section, should be persevered in.

I do not like the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.] He makes rests. Everything should pay according to its value. He makes a rest from ten to twenty dollars. There is no reason why cigars at fifteen and nineteen dollars should not pay in the same proportion as those at ten. But his amendment requires those priced at nineteen to pay just the same as those priced at ten. But if the price goes over that to twenty-one dollars, then the tax is doubled. Now, there is no reason for that. It is honest and just to make the article pay tax according to its value. Gentlemen tell us that you cannot enforce such a tax. Why, sir, only two pages before this in the bill, there are five articles on which you lay an ad valorem duty. Is there anything so peculiar in cigars that you cannot collect an ad valorem duty as well as you can on diamonds or anything else? Sir, there was never a system of taxation, foreign or domestic, in England or in our own country, which carried out a system of specific taxes. If you cannot make the tax specific on all articles, make it ad valorem. Tell me it is absurd to carry out this system! It was absurd under the old law because of the absurd constructions of the Department. They made constructions which gave you no tax at all. They said that it must be thirteen dollars before it could pay eight dollars. The result was that the manufacturers sold the material to the journeymen at a price agreed upon, and then the journeymen sold the manufactured article back at a price agreed upon, which price was assumed to be that upon which the tax was to be calculated.

Mr. SLOAN. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK.] will be adopted. In my judgment, upon it depends the question whether the culture of tobacco in this country shall be confined to a few localities or whether it shall extend over a very large portion of the country, as it was extending very rapidly before the last revenue law went into operation.

I expected to hear from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MORRILL,] when this amendment was proposed, the assertion which he has made, that we had tried the system of imposing taxes according to value, and it had failed. And I also expected to hear him appeal to the House, as he has done, not to go back to that system for the reason that it had been tried and had failed. Now, I deny that that system has failed; I deny that it has ever had a fair trial.

Mr. STEVENS. It never was tried.

Mr. SLOAN. Under the first law for raising revenue there was a grading of taxes upon the values of tobacco. But there was no provision whatever put into the bill for the purpose of enforcing that graduation. And a construction was put on it by the then Commissioner of Internal Revenue which prevented the collection of the various grades of duties. If there was any failure about it, it was a failure in consequence of the incompetency and stupidity, if not something worse, of the then Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The Committee of Ways and Means understand perfectly the operation of that law as it stood, and the mode in which it was evaded. Large manufacturers sold the material out of which cigars were made to their journeymen, at such price as they pleased, with the understanding that the journeymen should afterward sell back to them the manufactured article at a merely nominal price. And the then Commissioner of Internal Revenue ruled that that merely nominal price paid by the manufacturers to the journeymen for the cigars after they were made, should be conclusive evidence of the value upon which the tax was to be assessed. There was no discretion given to any Government inspector to inspect the cigars and judge himself of their price. And after an attempt, the most absurd, and, I may say, the most foolish that ever was made in the collection of revenue, it will not do for the Committee of Ways and Means to assert here that there has been a fair trial of the system of taxation according to valuations.

Now, what is the result of the system of taxation the committee now urge upon us to adopt? The tax is, say ten dollars on a thousand cigars. It takes about twenty-eight pounds of tobacco to make a thousand cigars.

Mr. GARFIELD. Twenty pounds.

Mr. SLOAN. From twenty to twenty-five pounds. That would make the tax about forty cents a pound on the tobacco used. If the tobacco from which the cigars are made is worth twelve cents a pound, that would make the price of tobacco when purchased in cigars about fifty-two cents a pound. If the tobacco used was worth six cents a pound, with the tax it would be worth in cigars about forty-six cents a pound. Remember that the cigars that are worth fifty-two cents a pound are made of tobacco worth twice as much as cigars that are worth forty-two cents a pound, for the tax added to the six cent tobacco is the same as the tax added to the twelve cent tobacco. And the difference between six cents and twelve cents a pound is the difference between a losing business and a profitable business to the producer.

Now, any person will purchase the cigar at fifty-two cents a pound rather than the cigar at forty-six cents a pound, for the one contains tobacco worth twice as much as the other. And hence the lower price cigars are entirely driven out of the market. It is a vicious system of taxation; and it is utterly surprising, with the light which the Committee of Ways and Means have upon this subject, that they should propose to continue such a system.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the paragraph proposed to be stricken out, by striking out the words "on small cigars." Of course I realize the difficulty of reconciling all parties to any tax upon cigars. But it is true in relation to the law on this subject, as it is in relation to many other subjects, that when a tax is well known, and has been practically administered over the country for a year, there should be some substantial reason given for changing it if any change is proposed.

The complaints which were made in relation to this matter have, I believe, been fully met by the proposition offered by the Committee of Ways and Means, which was to allow the tobacco made in the district of the gentleman from Ohio to be manufactured into a certain description of cigars at a very low rate of tax. By the proposition as it now stands cigarettes or small cigars, and cigars made with twisted heads—the peculiar kind manufactured in the section of country which the gentleman represents—the market value of which does not exceed eight dollars per thousand, will pay a tax of two dollars per thousand; and where the market value exceeds eight dollars and is not over twelve dollars, the tax will be four dollars. This, I think, meets all the actual wants of the gentleman's district. At any rate the Committee of Ways and Means were so informed by more than one gentleman interested in the manufacture. And the gentleman has already succeeded in reducing the tax on smoking-tobacco—if the House should allow it so to remain, as I hope it will not—from twenty cents to ten cents per pound, while as the law now stands it is twenty-five cents.

But the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PARKE] has asserted that this system of taxation which he urges has not proved a failure. I gave the facts connected with the operation of that law, showing that we received a very contemptible and insignificant sum upon all the higher rates; that the only considerable amount of revenue that we did derive from that source was at the lowest rate fixed in the tax bill, three dollars per thousand. I have the statement of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on this subject up to as late a date as March 5; and by this statement it appears that the amount of increase on cigars is five per cent.; on snuff eighty-seven per cent.; on tobacco (chewing and smoking) forty-five per cent.

In relation to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I do think that it will create a great amount of difficulty in ascertaining the value. The gentleman is mistaken if he supposes that we have no laws that are identical in principle with levying a uniform tax upon cigars. Take an article manufactured in his own district—old rye—the true "J. B.," of which the gentleman so well understands the value, which is made in these little copper stills, and sells for two dollars a gallon without any tax whatever; whereas whisky made from corn in the district of the gentleman from Peoria [Mr. INGERSOLL] will not bring more than fifteen cents per gallon without any tax. Yet we impose a uniform rate of duty upon whisky, whether made in the district of the gentleman from Pennsylvania or in that of the gentleman from Illinois.

Now, Mr. Chairman, all experience is against the system of taxation which it is urged should be applied to the subject of tobacco. The experience of the country which has been cited is directly in the teeth of the arguments, for no matter what the value of the tobacco the same rate of duty is levied.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. They raise no tobacco in England.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Chairman, I think that the committee upon examination will see that the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, to levy a tax upon the value of the cigars exclusive of the tax, is a very unwise provision. We tried that system in the beginning of the operation of the internal revenue law upon a great many articles made by manufacturers. Under that system we were exposed to every kind of fraud, which we resisted for a time by construction of the statute until the difficulty was remedied by legal enactment. Hence I think that the first thing to be agreed to is that the rule of taxation in the matter of cigars shall be the same that we apply in other cases, a tax upon the article at its value, the tax included. There is no other safe method of proceeding. Under any other system we shall experience all sorts of frauds.

Now, the committee propose that upon various kinds of cigars, the market value of which is not over eight dollars per thousand, the tax included, there shall be a tax of only two dollars, and that where the market value exceeds eight dollars, and is not over twelve dollars, the tax shall be four dollars. It seems to me that this ought to meet the requirements of those sections of the country that produce tobacco for the manufacture of cheap cigars. It seems to me this arrangement will meet all the wants of the country.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I wish to modify my amendment before the vote is taken by inserting the word "other" at the end of the eleventh line. I now move, pro forma, to strike out the last words of the paragraph, with a view simply to say I do not appreciate the force of the argument which objects to ascertaining the value exclusive of the tax. The gentleman says there is no market value until the tax is laid and included in the computation. He says there must be first a sale and the tax included to get up the market value. I think so long as the rule of subtraction is to be found in our arithmetics we can find what is the market value exclusive of so much deducted from the market value which may be the amount of the tax as easily as we can put the tax on. As a gentleman near me says, it is only a question of arithmetic, of simple subtraction and addition, and nothing else.

But the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] says it will open the door to fraud; and so does the experienced gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] who has just addressed the House. Why? Because we have not provided sufficiently against fraud in this legislation heretofore. The other day some gentlemen representing a New York tobacco interest called on me and finding I was not much impressed with the force of their argument, said, "If you will make this particular classification we will evade it, as we have done before." "How?" I inquired. "We will sell to our journeymen the leaf tobacco, let them manufacture it, then we will buy it back for just as much as will pay them reasonably their wages and call that the market value, and then we will sell for whatever we can get for it and pay the tax according to that market value."

Mr. STEVENS. That is the way in which it was done before.

Mr. SCHENCK. I say, therefore, all that is needed is to classify or adopt something approaching the ad valorem system, and have appraisements made so as to prevent these fraudulent appraisements. I will read an amendment I propose to offer further on in the bill as an amendment to the amendment intended to be moved by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE.] He proposes to require the appraisal shall be made by the inspecting and appraising officers under certain regulations, so as to prevent these fraudulent arrangements between the manufacturer and his journeymen. I propose to add to that the following:

And in addition to other regulations it shall be the duty of the inspector or assessor who appraises any cigars, cigarettes, or cheroots, to examine the manufacturer thereof or his agent under oath, which oath shall be administered by the inspecting and appraising officer and reduced to writing, and signed by such manufacturer or his agent with a view to ascertaining whether such manufacturer has any interest direct or indirect in any sale that has been made or any resale to be made of said cigars, cigarettes, or cheroots, by the concealment of which he seeks to obtain a false, fraudulent, or deceptive appraisalment.

I know oaths in custom-houses and under excise laws are taken most loosely and seem to have but little binding force ordinarily upon consciences; but oaths may be prescribed connected with a system of appraisalment, and the party shall endanger himself and put himself in jeopardy of the penitentiary if he undertakes to commit a fraud.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me some gentlemen have been laboring under erroneous ideas. I believe if the committee generally understand the question they will be in favor of that form of tax that will produce the most revenue.

Now, for one, whatever course may be adopted, if we can encourage our home industry in producing the article by a certain system of taxation and at the same time secure the most revenue I believe the great majority will be in favor of that system whatever it may be. It is true that this or that individual may be in favor of a particular plan, because it is bounded by his own particular section. But I wish the committee for a moment to look at the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.] The gentleman complains, as I understand him, of the present tax on account of the fact that the article of tobacco which sells for ten cents a pound is taxed the same as that which sells for twenty cents. But what is the remedy he proposes? The gentleman's amendment does not obviate the difficulty. He proposes by his amendment to tax the individual who manufactures cigars worth $12 50 a thousand just as much as the one who manufactures cigars worth twenty dollars. Or if one manufacturer makes cigars worth forty dollars a thousand and another makes cigars worth forty-one dollars the gentleman would make the latter pay forty dollars extra tax, thereby carrying out the very plan and system which he objects to under the present law.

The gentleman says that under the present law he who raises tobacco worth ten cents a pound pays the same tax as he who raises tobacco worth twenty cents. And yet he brings in an amendment which proposes that the man who manufactures cigars worth forty dollars a thousand shall pay twenty dollars tax, but he who makes cigars worth $40 50 a thousand shall pay forty dollars tax. What is that but introducing the same principle which he objects to under the present law?

I wish to say a word in regard to the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] He says that the system which has been adopted has destroyed the trade in Pennsylvania, while it had operated in favor of tobacco-growers in Connecticut. Now, the fact is that in the Connecticut valley there was only one half the tobacco raised last year that was raised the year before, and scarcely a pound of it has been sold. While the gentleman's constituents complain about having their tobacco on hand, and not being able to sell it, the same fact is true in regard to the raisers of tobacco through the Connecticut valley, and instead of its being worth forty to fifty cents a pound they would be glad to sell it now at from twenty to twenty-five cents.

Mr. STEVENS. I would inquire whether they are planting tobacco this year.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. They did not plant last year, owing to the tax, but about one half what they planted the previous year, and the probability is this year they will not plant more than one half what they did last year. The gentleman asks, where is the difficulty? The constituents of the gentlemen from the West have their tobacco on hand and have not been able to sell it. The same is true in the Connecticut valley. Where, then, is the difficulty? It lies, not in the excess of tax, but under the tariff. As has been demonstrated during the past year imported cigars pay a tax of about ten dollars a thousand, and that is just about the amount of the excise tax. Accordingly they have been imported from Havana cheaper than the manufacturer can afford them here. And thus foreign cigars have come in and have taken the place of our own manufactured cigars. There is the difficulty. What, then, is the remedy? Raise the tariff. Make it so that he who uses tobacco shall be obliged to use the American production, and then you will find a very great difference in the state of things.

But now look at the bill as it stands. The fine-cut chewing-tobacco of about the same quality that is used in making the best cigars pays a tax of forty cents a pound, and it takes of this tobacco after the waste is thrown out about ten pounds to make a thousand cigars.

Now, under the present tax, take the very best cigars that are manufactured and you tax it a dollar a pound, while the same article in the form of fine-cut chewing-tobacco pays only forty cents.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAINE. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] It seems to me that it must be entirely acceptable to him in principle.

Mr. SCHENCK. After consultation with our friends from the West, I have concluded to accept the amendment proposed to my amendment by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCHENCK's amendment as modified was read, as follows:

On cigarettes, or small cigars, made of tobacco, inclosed in a wrapper or binder, and not over three and a half inches in length, and on cigars made with twisted heads, the market value of which (exclusive of the tax) is not over six dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand.

On all other cigars four dollars per thousand and forty per cent. ad valorem. Provided, That in assessing the said ad valorem duty the first ten dollars valuation shall not be assessed.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I move to strike out the last word of that amendment.

I have felt some regret, Mr. Chairman, at hearing the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] speak upon this question, as it seemed to me, under the influence of localities. The gentlemen seemed to vie with each other in the ambition to advertise to the country through the columns of the Globe that they grow a very inferior quality of tobacco in their States. [Laughter.] One would be satisfied, from listening to their arguments, that the article which they raise in their respective States is hardly fit to be boiled up into a concoction to kill the nits on their calves. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. Let me say to my friend from Connecticut that I admit that they raise tobacco and onions in his State far superior to those we raise in Pennsylvania.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. If that be so, I want to know why it is that the gentleman envies us the superiority of our products.

The hour of half past four o'clock having arrived, the Speaker resumed the chair, and the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

TAX BILL.

Mr. DAVIS moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending question was on the following amendment offered by Mr. SCHENCK:

Strike out from line twenty-two hundred and nine to twenty-two hundred and eighteen inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On cigarettes, or small cigars, made of tobacco, inclosed in a wrapper or binder, and not over three and a half inches in length, and on cigars made with twisted heads, the market value of which (exclusive of the tax) is not over six dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand.

On all other cigars four dollars per thousand, and forty per cent. ad valorem, exclusive of the tax: Provided, That in assessing the said ad valorem duty the first ten dollars valuation shall not be assessed.

Mr. SCHENCK. Having accepted the amendment proposed to my amendment by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] all that confusion which arose from having the expression "exclusive of the tax" instead of "the tax inclusive" is done away with. I am willing, therefore, to accommodate that portion of my amendment which remains, which is only one clause, to the ideas of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and although he is not here I will make that concession to him, and modify my amendment to that it shall read "the tax included," and provide that the tax shall be eight dollars instead of six dollars.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. Not to be outdone in generosity by my friend, the learned gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] who admitted this afternoon that my State can beat his in growing onions, I will admit before the whole House that Pennsylvania can beat Connecticut in raising cabbages. [Laughter.] And I will admit that my learned friend represents the largest onion-consuming constituency in the world, as the uncooked article when sliced up is so very nice to flavorsour-kront. [Renewed laughter.] And I will say in the hearing of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SLOAN] that his State has very many advantages over mine, of which he has cause to be proud. His constituents can raise, peradventure, a hundred bushels of corn per acre, while mine can raise scarcely ten bushels per acre. I know very well that his constituents pay an income tax upon this, but they do not pay any tax unless their gains shall exceed $1,000 a year.

I hardly know what acknowledgment I ought to make to the two learned gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK and Mr. LAWRENCE] for having advertised Connecticut tobacco, unless I admit what is generally conceded and understood, that the State of Ohio is great, if not the greatest in the business of producing wines.

I ought, perhaps, to apologize to the House for having detained them so long with these remarks. But the fault lies at the door of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] for he introduced into the debate the savory subject of leeks or onions, and I was compelled to reply to him.

Now, the State of Connecticut does not seek to obtain any advantage over the middle or western States; nor is she willing that they shall obtain any unjust advantage over her. This paragraph, as amended on the motion of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MORRILL,] if I understand it, does not confer any advantages at all upon Connecticut with reference to this article of tobacco. And if the people of Connecticut, by their diligence and industry, have succeeded by long experience in raising a better article of tobacco upon her sterile soil, covered with rock, than can be raised on the rich soil of Pennsylvania, all I can say is, that other parts of the country, if opened to fair competition, will, within a short time, within a year or two, be enabled to go ahead of Connecticut in this interest. And I think it would be no more than just for me to say in the hearing of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] that if the rich soil of his State is not adapted to the raising of tobacco, then they ought to abandon that business and raise more corn and more wheat.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK as modified at the suggestion of Mr. STEVENS.

Mr. PAINE. I rise to propose an amendment to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] referred this afternoon. His amendment having been modified by accepting the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] I move to amend it by adding to it the following:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such regulations for the inspection and valuation of cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, and the collection of the tax thereon, as shall in his judgment be most effective in the prevention of inequalities and frauds in the payment of such tax: Provided, That such regulations shall not be in violation of law.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have an amendment to offer to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] which I understand he is willing to accept.

Mr. STEVENS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] that he better not embarrass the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] by offering his amendment at this time. He can offer it afterward as a new amendment if this shall be adopted.

Mr. PAINE. I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK.

Mr. DEMING. I move, pro formâ, to strike out the word "ten" and insert "five." So much has been said in this debate, since the subject of the battle of cigars has been introduced, about Connecticut tobacco, Connecticut seed leaf, and Connecticut cigars, that a stranger present in this Hall would suppose that it was the purpose of legislation on internal revenue here to strike down an interest which is assumed to be a flourishing one.

Now, it seems to me that if, in spite of all the changeable legislation upon the subject of tobacco and cigars, the Connecticut tobacco interest has contrived to live, but live at a "poor, dying rate," this is no reason why it should be either envied or assailed.

It has been stated here, and I presume stated correctly, that in Ohio and in the Northwest the tobacco and cigar interests are entirely broken down and dilapidated. We have even been told by one gentleman that in his city of thirty thousand inhabitants, where, previous to this taxation, they manufactured nine million cigars annually, they do not manufacture even one at the present time. Well, now, I am ready to assume all this as true. But I know very well this is the universal cry and the universal appeal of all interests that are attempting to escape taxation; and I must accept all these statements of constituents with many grains of allowance.

It has also been assumed here that the tobacco interest of the Connecticut valley is in a vastly flourishing condition, so as to excite the envy of the Northwest. I wish to state that this assumption is entirely unfounded—that the tobacco and cigar interests of the Connecticut valley were never more depressed than they are at the present time, and that we have no reason whatever to exult over our western brethren. The truth is that the tobacco interest in this country universally is depressed—the result, in my judgment, of four causes: first, excessive taxation; second, a low tariff; third, the poor condition of last year's crops; and fourth, the excessive influx of southern tobacco in consequence of the cessation of hostilities. The remedy is, not to tinker your revenue law every session for the purpose of elevating the interest of one section of the country to the depression of another, but in the first place to raise the tariff, and in the next place to wait for better crops and until the laws of trade shall regulate a glutted market.

Let me say, in regard to the amendment proposed by my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, which has been accepted by my friend from Ohio, that its effect will be to destroy entirely the manufacture of the higher grades of cigars. But notwithstanding this taxation, we can enter into competition with you of the West in the manufacture of the lower grades of cigars. I doubt very seriously whether by this taxation you are promoting your own interests; for the Connecticut seed leaf, which is the subject of so much envy here, goes in large quantities to Cincinnati, to Chicago, to Detroit, and is there employed by cigar manufacturers for the purpose of manufacturing the higher grades of cigars. It goes also to Philadelphia and to Pittsburg; and while my distinguished friends are attempting to protect the cigar interests of some country districts, they are breaking up the manufacture of the higher grades of cigars in the cities. It is fortunate for us that no system of legislation can render western tobacco as marketable as eastern tobacco, unless you adopt some system of legislation for preventing the soil of the Connecticut valley from growing better tobacco than the western soil. Now, it seems to me, that instead of varying your legislation, as you do, session after session, for the purpose of accommodating some local interests, you should wait until the laws of trade can regulate all the discrepancies of which you complain. I know very well that the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will utterly destroy the manufacture of the higher grades of cigars and turn the whole cigar interest of the country into the manufacture of cheap cigars.

I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio by striking it out and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

On cigarettes, or small cigars, made of tobacco, inclosed in a wrapper or binder, and not over three and a half inches in length, and on cigars made with twisted heads and on cheroots and on cigars known as short-sixes, the market value of which is not over eight dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand.

On all other cigarettes and cigars, the market value of which is over eight dollars and is not over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand.

On all other cigarettes and cigars a tax of four dollars per thousand, and in addition forty per cent. ad valorem on the value beyond twelve dollars per thousand, to be assessed on the excess beyond twelve dollars per thousand.

I believe the amendment I offer covers the object of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] I think it speaks for itself, and I will make no further remarks.

Mr. STEVENS. It does not quite come up to my idea, because it says twelve instead of ten. It makes the tax more severe than I would make it. I ask my friend from Ohio whether it does not give us as much as we can get. I am willing to accept it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am inclined to think it effects the object. It affords a little more room for the manufacture of cigars. I accept it with the understanding that it shall remain open to my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] to make his amendment.

Mr. PAINE. I hope my friend from Ohio will accept the amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I accept it, and yield the floor to the gentleman from Wisconsin to offer his amendment in regard to appraisement, without which I think this legislation will not be perfect.

Mr. PAINE. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I had better offer my amendment hereafter as an independent proposition. I will offer it hereafter, when the gentleman can submit his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, in the multitude of amendments I fail to see any improvement of the bill reported to the House, while I feel quite sure the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] and his coadjutors are destined to triumph in anything he shall demand. I shall content myself, so far as representing the Committee of Ways and Means, in having a vote in the House on whatever proposition may be introduced into the bill.

I am quite satisfied gentlemen are mistaken that it is the excise law which has really caused the depression in the tobacco trade. It is universal. It pervades all sections of the country. It is as much felt in the Connecticut valley as in Ohio or in Wisconsin. The difficulty, whatever gentlemen may say, was that at the close of the war, a large amount of tobacco was let loose from the South. Gentlemen may suppose tobacco can be grown in latitude forty-five or forty as cheaply as at the South, but they are mistaken. They will always produce tobacco at the South, especially the lower grades, cheaper than it can be done at the North. It has been in consequence of this influx of tobacco from the South that the tobacco trade has been depressed.

I will say, in addition, that the provision these gentlemen wish to put upon the law now exists, and hence our woes, for the cigars imported are imported under the lowest valuation. We have no cigars paying a duty above the rate of fifteen dollars. It will operate in the same way if this provision be adopted.

There is another thing in regard to the introduction of foreign cigars. They are smuggled in. I wish some process could be found out by which we could prevent the large amount of smuggling now practiced. I have had occasion to say before the amount of smuggling of cigars is immense. I believe the regular steamships from New York to Cuba smuggle in more cigars than pay the duty.

And I will say further, in relation to this subject of cigars, that gentlemen must understand the pipe has grown somewhat more fashionable since the war, and that many who used cigars now use pipes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEVENS. I move pro formâ to strike out the word "the."

I want to state to the gentleman from Vermont facts are better than argument. He attributes the depression of the tobacco trade to the conclusion of the war in the South. If he will inquire he will find that in August, nine months before the war closed, every tobacco shop in my county shut up. There was not a single man who did not sell out because of the law.

Mr. SCHENCK. The tobacco of the South no more comes in competition with ours than cotton with wheat. Theirs is a gummy tobacco, used for plug and cavendish, and not fit for smoking, while ours is fit for smoking and not for chewing-tobacco.

Mr. STEVENS. It is very clear that the tobacco which we raise in Pennsylvania and Ohio, and all the West except Kentucky, is what is called the seed leaf, and the cigars made of that tobacco sell at twenty dollars a thousand, and it costs $12 50 to make them, independent of the tax. But the tobacco of Kentucky, except the Clarksville tobacco, is always in hogsheads for exportation, and does not come in competition with the seed leaf of any kind whatever.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether at the time of the depression to which he alludes there was not in the market a greater amount of manufactured cigars than there ever had been before, manufactured in anticipation of the tax.

Mr. STEVENS. Undoubtedly, but could they have gone on and made them under the ad valorem tax? As it was, it was impossible to go on because the direct tax, together with the cost, was more than they could sell the cigars for.

Mr. MORRILL. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Does he not know the fact that in every instance where we increase largely our duties upon any article the effect of it is to stop or check business for a time?

Mr. STEVENS. I know it is so, and therefore the best way to get a greater number of cigars made is to take off the tax altogether. Under the prior law there were over five hundred million cigars made. Last year there were but three hundred and twenty-seven millions returned.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I would ask the gentleman if it is not the fact that cigars are offered in New York at this time at a less price than they can possibly be produced in this country.

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot tell about that. It may be true. I suppose there is a great deal of smuggling in New York. I have no doubt they carry it on to a considerable extent.

Mr. MORRILL. Now that the war is at an end.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] on the announcement he has just made, that the war is at an end. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir; I understand it is not at an end.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. You said so.

Mr. STEVENS. No, my friend behind me said it was at an end. I believe the war is just beginning—the copperheads on one side and the patriot armies on the other. [Laughter.] [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I wish to call the attention of the House to some statistics. Some were given by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE.] I have some here coming from the internal revenue department, which I think will not be disputed.

The number of cigars manufactured under a graduated scale, similar to the one introduced by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] that is, under the law which was passed two years ago, was 530,491,902. Under that graduated scale the revenue derived was $2,667,405 19. Last year, under the specific duty of ten dollars, the whole number of cigars manufactured was 258,086,763. It will be noticed that that is less than half the number manufactured two years ago. But the revenue derived last year from less than half the quantity manufactured the year before was $2,580,867 63. In a word, to sum it all up, members of the House will see that less than half the quantity produced an equal amount of revenue under this specific act.

Now, I wish to state this to show that what I said when I was up before to-day was correct. No person in this House, probably, believes that a less number of cigars were smoked during the past year than the year before. That a far less number was smoked two years ago than were used previous to any tax, no one will deny. But that the number smoked has decreased during the past year, when the tax was simply ten dollars a thousand, no one will maintain. How, then, do you account for the discrepancy that less than one half the quantity of cigars have paid the duty? Simply from the fact that such has been your tariff that a great amount of cigars used in this country have come in under a duty of ten dollars a thousand, making the tariff correspond to the excise tax. Accordingly, about half the cigars used during the past year have been manufactured abroad and imported into this country.

Well, the result has been this: that the raisers of tobacco not only in the West, but also in the Connecticut valley, have been unable to sell their tobacco to the manufacturer. When they go to him and ask him to purchase their tobacco the manufacturer in New York says, "No, we can import cigars at a less price than we can purchase your tobacco and pay the tax." Why? Because the tariff duty costs about the same as the excise tax, and cigars can be made at a less cost in foreign countries. Accordingly, the imported cigars take the lead in the market. But although we have manufactured half the quantity we have received the same amount of revenue as we had under the old law.

Now, what is the remedy for this evil? It is under the tariff. And here is a point upon which we shall not be divided by any sectional interest. When the question comes up in regard to the tariff, if there is a manufacture that is confined to New England, Pennsylvania, or any other particular section, the question is forced upon us as a sectional one, and it is objected that we are building up one section at the expense of another. I rejoice to know that this is a question in which every portion of the West as well as New England, Pennsylvania, and New York is interested. I doubt not we will unite together on this question, and that the tariff will be fixed as it should be, and we shall all agree at least on one point, namely, that if the community will use tobacco, if they will smoke and chew, let them use our own productions, let them use those we raise on our own soil, whether in the West or in the East.

One word further. If the tax is to be altered, instead of being forty per cent. ad valorem, as my colleague [Mr. HOOPER] proposes by his amendment, if you are going to get a revenue it ought not to be more than twenty per cent.

Just look at the tax on smoking-tobacco. The amendment which has been adopted is ten cents a pound. Now, the man who raises tobacco can sell it for smoking-tobacco, the same quality which he has to pay four dollars a pound for if it is manufactured into cigars, and pay his ten cents a pound. Now, I wish to call the attention of every member of the House to this fact, that those who use this article when they can get it by paying ten or twenty cents a pound and use it in this manner, are not going to pay from two to four dollars a pound manufactured into cigars.

Mr. STEVENS. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, merely for the purpose of saying that I listened with great interest to the remarks made by my colleague, [Mr. WASHBURN,] because he has vindicated the importance of an amendment which I intended to propose before the section was passed. I will read it now for information:

Provided, That the tax assessed and paid on cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes of domestic manufacture under this act shall also be assessed and paid on all imported cigars in addition to any duties imposed on the same under the tariff.

That I think will obviate the objection raised by my colleague. I wish to refer to another remark of my colleague in reference to the effect of the different rates of duties on cigars. He will find on looking at the return from the internal revenue department that all the cigars manufactured were gradually getting into the lowest rate of duty; that manufacturers were getting up cigars upon which the duty assessed was only three dollars.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Will my colleague [Mr. HOOPER] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I desire to ask my colleague this question: as he has proposed an ad valorem duty, then why not dispense with any other duty but a simple rate of ad valorem duty, so that we can understand it? Put all upon the single basis of thirty per cent. ad valorem duty, and have no other duty. Then if cigars cost ten dollars a thousand, they will pay thirty per cent. upon their value; if they cost fifty dollars a thousand they will also pay thirty per cent. upon their value. If you are going to have an ad valorem principle why not have one single rate of duty?

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] will allow me to answer his colleague, [Mr. WASHBURN,] I will say that this is prepared with a view to prevent frauds where the price is less than twelve dollars a thousand. The rest pay a tax of forty per cent. ad valorem on the excess over twelve dollars a thousand.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] has answered the question so successfully that I need say nothing further in reply to it.

But I wish to call attention to the effect of the valuation under the old system; if cigars were valued at twelve dollars a thousand, as it stands in the bill, the duty is four dollars a thousand, leaving net to the manufacturer the sum of eight dollars. If the value of the cigars is thirteen dollars, then the duty is ten dollars per thousand, leaving only three dollars to the manufacturer. Therefore if he increases the quality of his cigars so as to make them worth a dollar more than those he pays a tax of four dollars upon, he will get five dollars less for his own use than for the cheaper cigars, for by so doing he brings them under the operation of a higher rate of duty. And this ad valorem duty obviates that objection.

The great objection to the old system of fixing the duty upon the valuation was that you had to leave a space of five, six, or ten dollars to take up the difference in the value. Now, let us refer to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] as at first proposed.

It says, "on cigars valued over twelve and not over twenty dollars, a tax of ten dollars per thousand." That would leave the cigar costing thirteen, fourteen, sixteen, eighteen, or nineteen dollars a thousand to bring less to the manufacturer than the cigar costing twelve dollars a thousand. Again, he says, "on cigars valued at over twenty and not over forty dollars, a tax of twenty dollars per thousand." And there the difficulty is increased. On a cigar costing twenty-five dollars a thousand the manufacturer would realize only five dollars besides the tax. This forty per cent. tax obviates that difficulty.

Mr. CONKLING obtained the floor, and said: I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER,] for I desire to hear what he has to say on this subject.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I do not know but what I have said about all that I desired to say. I merely wanted to call the attention of members to the objections to the change of duty with the change of valuation. Until the value of the cigars had very much increased, without reaching the next higher rate of duty, the manufacturer received much less from them in consequence of their being subject to a higher rate of duty. If members have listened to me I think they will perceive the weight of those objections, and that this system now proposed will entirely obviate the difficulty.

Mr. CONKLING. I would ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER,] be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hooper,] as the Chair understands, merely read his amendment for information, and not for the action of the House.

Mr. CONKLING. I mean the one that he offered, and which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] accepted.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MORRILL. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER,] whether the tax is to be collected on the market value including the tax, or excluding the tax.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. If the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will tell me how it is in regard to every other article in the tax bill I will answer his question. I think in reference to every other article in the tax bill it is not so stated whether the tax is included in or excluded from the value. It is so in regard to the tax on manufactures of every description.

Mr. MORRILL. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the tax on manufactures is on the amount of sales.

Mr. STEVENS. How is it on diamonds and other precious stones?

Mr. MORRILL. On the sales.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Then I suppose the market value of cigars would be fixed by the actual sales, as there is a section in the bill which provides that the taxes shall be paid on the sales.

Mr. MORRILL. I perceive after all the resolution and tenacity of purpose of my friend from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] that it was not so much for the interest of Ohio and other interests that he was suffering so much grief; but it was because other parts of the country were happy; it is that which made him so miserable. It was for the purpose of getting a little more tax laid upon Connecticut seed-leaf tobacco. However, I think it is useless for us to continue this argument any further. I have little doubt the amendment will carry. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate upon this paragraph and the pending amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pending paragraph of the special order terminate in one half minute after the committee shall resume the consideration of the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending question was upon the motion of Mr. SCHENCK to strike out the paragraphs relating to cigars, cheroots, &c., and insert the following in lieu thereof:

On cigarettes, or small cigars, made of tobacco, inclosed in a wrapper or binder, of not over three and a half inches in length, and on cigars made with twisted heads, and on cheroots and on cigars known as short-sizes, the market value of which is not over eight dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand.

On all other cigarettes or cigars, the market value of which is over eight dollars and not over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand.

On all other cigarettes and cigars a tax of four dollars per thousand, and in addition forty per cent. ad valorem on the value beyond twelve dollars per thousand, to be assessed on the excess beyond twelve dollars per thousand.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the whole of it, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

And be it enacted, That in lieu of all other taxes or imposts upon tobacco, the same shall be taxed in the hands of the growers at the rate of twenty cents per pound.

The amendment of Mr. WRIGHT to the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK, and being taken, upon a division there were—ayes 46, noes 48.

Before the result was announced,

Mr. SCHENCK demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs SCHENCK and BRANDEGEE were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 46.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent to have the privilege of offering the following amendment hereafter. It was the intention of the committee to have inserted the provision in the bill:

Provided, That the taxes assessed and paid on cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes of domestic manufacture, under this act, shall also be assessed and paid on all imported cigars in addition to any duties imposed on the same under the tariff.

Mr. STEVENS. It ought to provide the same amount of tax.

There was no objection, and the amendment was reserved.

Mr. PAINE. I now offer my amendment.

Add to the amendment last adopted:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe such regulations for the inspection and valuation of cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, and the collection of the tax thereon, as shall in his judgment be most effective for the prevention of inequalities and frauds in the payment of such tax: Provided, That such regulations shall not be in violation of law.

Mr. SCHENCK. I offer the following as an amendment to the amendment:

And in addition to other regulations it shall be the duty of the inspector or assessor who appraises any cigars, cigarettes, or cheroots, to examine the manufacturer thereof for his agent, under oath, which oath shall be administered by the inspecting and appraising officer, and reduced to writing, and signed by such manufacturer or his agent, with a view to ascertaining whether such manufacturer has any interest, direct or indirect, in any sale that has been made, or any resale to be made of said cigars, cigarettes, or cheroots, by the concealment of which he seeks to obtain a false, fraudulent, or deceptive appraisalment.

Mr. PAINE. I accept the amendment as a modification of my own.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the amendment be reserved with the one I have just withheld.

There was no objection, and it was agreed to accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section ninety-nine be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that there shall be paid on all sales made by brokers and bankers, whether made for the benefit of others or on their own account, the following taxes and rates of tax, that is to say: upon all sales and contracts for the sale of stocks, bonds, foreign exchange, gold and silver bullion and coin, uncurrent money, promissory notes or other securities, a tax at the rate of one cent for every hundred dollars of the amount of such sales or contracts; and on all sales and contracts for sale negotiated and made by any person, firm, or company, not taxed as a broker or banker, of any gold or silver bullion, coin, uncurrent money, promissory notes, stocks, bonds, or other securities, not his or their own property, there shall be paid a tax at the rate of five cents for every hundred dollars of the amount of such sales or contracts; and on every sale and contract of sale, as aforesaid, there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill or memorandum of such sale or contract, on which there shall be affixed a lawful stamp or stamps in value equal to the amount of tax on such sale, to be determined by the rates of tax before mentioned; and in computing the amount of the stamp duty or tax in any case herein provided for, any sum less than $100 or any fractional part of $100 of value or amount on which tax is computed, shall be accounted as $100. And every bill or memorandum of sale or contract of sale, before mentioned, shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale or contract, and the matter or thing to which it refers. And any person or persons liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or any one who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person or persons who shall make any such sale or contract, or who shall, in pursuance of any sale or contract, deliver or receive any stocks, bonds, bullion, coin, uncurrent money, foreign exchange, promissory notes, or other securities, without a bill or memorandum thereof as herein required, or who shall deliver or receive such bill or memorandum without having the proper stamps affixed thereto, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a penalty of $500 for each and every offense where the tax so evaded, or attempted to be evaded, does not exceed $100, and a penalty of $1,000 when such tax shall exceed $100, which may be recovered with costs of suit in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in the district, at any time within one year after the liability to such penalty shall have been incurred; and one half of the penalty recovered shall be awarded by the court to the person or persons who, in the judgment of the court, shall have first given the information of the violation of the law for which recovery is had. And the provisions of law in relation to stamp duties in schedule B of the act to which this is an amendment, shall apply to the stamp taxes herein imposed upon sales and contracts of sales made by brokers or bankers, and others as aforesaid. And there shall be paid on all sales by commercial brokers of any goods, wares, or merchandise a tax of one twentieth of one per cent. upon the amount of such sales; and at the end of every month or within ten days thereafter, every commercial broker shall make a list or return to the assistant assessor of the district of the gross amount of such sales as aforesaid for the preceding month, with the amount of tax which has accrued or shall accrue thereon, in form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and pay to the collector the amount of tax thereon before the end of the month.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend as follows: line twenty-two hundred and twenty-five, after the word "brokers," strike out the word "and" and insert "banks or;" line twenty-two hundred and twenty-seven, strike out "and rates of tax;" line twenty-two hundred and twenty-nine, strike out "uncurrent money;" line twenty-two hundred and thirty-three, strike out "tax" and insert "paying a special tax;" line twenty-two hundred and thirty-four, after the word "broker," insert "bank or;" same line, after the word "bullion" insert "foreign exchange;" line twenty-two hundred and forty-six, strike out the words "any sum less than $100 or;" line twenty-two hundred and sixty-nine, strike out "in the district;" line twenty-two hundred and seventy-eight, after the word "brokers" insert the word "banks;" and lines twenty-two hundred and eighty-two and twenty-two hundred and eighty-three, strike out "at the end of every month or within ten days thereafter" and insert "on or before the 10th day of each month."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to insert in line twenty-two hundred and sixty-two, after the word "thereto," these words, "with intent to evade the provisions of this act."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. COOK. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the paragraph the following:

Provided, That in estimating sales of goods, wares, and merchandise for the purposes of this section, any sales made by or through another broker on commission shall not again be estimated and included as sales by the party for whom the sale was made.

This precise provision has been incorporated in another section of this bill on page 48. The effect of it is to prevent duplicate taxes. All the produce of the western country is sold, in the first place, to persons who purchase at the depots and villages on the canals and railroads of the country. That produce is sold through commission merchants at Chicago or Buffalo or St. Louis. Under the ruling of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue heretofore, a duplicate tax upon such sales has been paid—one eighth charged to the first purchaser, one tenth charged upon the same sale through the broker. This amendment is offered to prevent the duplication of these taxes. I will state, also, that the amendment has been submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means and approved by them.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think that the gentleman misunderstands what it was to which the Committee of Ways and Means agreed. When a commission merchant takes out a license as a wholesale dealer, if a sale is made through another commission merchant, and he pays the tax as a wholesale dealer, the tax is not duplicated; but a sale by a broker, like an auctioneer, is a distinct and separate way of selling, and that mode of selling is taxed under this bill. It was not intended that the wholesale dealer, selling through a broker or selling by auction, should be exempt from tax as a wholesale dealer.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to understand more clearly from the gentleman from Massachusetts the views of the committee on this question. If a merchant, for instance, at Chicago buys ten thousand bushels of wheat, which he ships to a broker at Buffalo, where the wheat is sold, does the person at Chicago pay the tax, and also the broker at Buffalo? If the gentleman intends to be understood to say that under the bill as it stands the tax is to be duplicated in this way, then I certainly think the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois should be adopted, because the person who purchases the wheat at Chicago does so for the purpose of selling it at Buffalo through an agent. The sale at Buffalo is in fact a sale by the merchant at Chicago. Yet, as I understand, it is proposed to duplicate the tax by taxing the whole amount of the sale made by the broker at Buffalo, and also requiring the shipper at Chicago to pay the tax on the whole amount there. That is not right.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. In reply to the gentleman from Iowa, I wish to state that we had before us merchants from Chicago, who directed the attention of the committee to this very subject, and who were entirely satisfied with the provision which we inserted on the fifty-eighth page, commencing on the nine hundred and seventy-sixth line, the effect of which is, that if they send to a commission merchant at Buffalo to sell for them, the tax shall not be duplicated in estimating their sales. But the business of a broker and the business of an auctioneer were considered entirely distinct from that of a merchant who takes out his license as a wholesale dealer; and the tax paid by the broker or by the auctioneer was considered as an additional tax to the tax paid by the commission merchant, so that if a merchant chooses to sell through a broker or through an auctioneer, the tax is to be paid.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But, Mr. Chairman, the difficulty is, that when the sale is made through a broker both the broker and the owner of the goods are required to pay a tax, though it is but one sale. The party in Chicago does not sell to the broker in Buffalo, but ships to him a cargo of wheat to be sold for him. It is one transaction.

Mr. COOK. For the purpose of saying a word further on this subject, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. The proviso on page 48 effects a very different tax from the one imposed in the section under consideration. For the purpose of fixing the amount of license to be paid by the wholesale dealer or by the broker, the sale, according to the proviso on the forty-eighth page, is not to be counted twice. Now, for the purpose of fixing the tax on sales, to be paid by the broker and the merchant, the same sale ought not to be counted twice. The effect of it is, that upon every pound of produce raised in the western country a tax is duplicated every time the produce changes hands between the producer and the final market. This is a tax which has worked oppressively and grievously. It is not just. Notwithstanding the remark of my friend from Massachusetts, I undertake to say that this provision was brought to the attention of the Committee of Ways and Means. The gentleman misapprehends, I think, the intention of the committee in relation to this subject. The very place where the amendment should come in, and the very words in which it should be couched, were certainly agreed upon between the committee and myself.

I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I renew the amendment to the amendment, that I may have the opportunity to say a word or two on this subject.

I am in favor of this amendment, because I believe that these taxes, as provided in this section, have become burdensome and interfere directly with trade. There is, first, as the gentleman from Iowa has stated, a revenue tax paid by the owner. Then there is a tax levied upon the broker, who receives upon his sales but a half percent. commission. The tax levied upon that commission is, under the terms of this bill, one twentieth of one per cent. For example, a commercial broker sells $500,000 worth of goods, upon which he receives a commission of one half per cent., which is $2,500. That broker is taxed upon his sales one twentieth of one per cent., so that he pays to the Government $250 out of his $2,500—an enormous and most unjust rate of taxation. I think there is no part of this bill which burdens trade as much as this. I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will prevail, because it will facilitate the interchange of commodities between the West and the East.

I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COOK. In order to obviate the objection of the gentleman from Massachusetts, while still accomplishing my purpose, I modify my amendment so as to read as follows:

Provided, That in estimating sales of goods, wares, and merchandise for the purposes of this section, any sales made by or through another broker upon which a tax has been paid shall not be estimated and included as sold by the broker for whom the sale was made.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think that is correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I move to amend by inserting after the word "thereto," in line twenty-two hundred and sixty-two, the words "with intent to evade the payment of said tax;" so that the clause will read as follows:

Who shall deliver or receive such bill or memorandum without having the proper stamps affixed thereto with intent to evade the payment of said tax, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a penalty of $500, &c.

This, as will be observed, is in substance the same amendment that was offered by my friend from New York, [Mr. DAVIS.] If the section as it stands is designed to impose these heavy penalties upon a mere inadvertence in the omission of the proper stamp, if it means for example to impose a penalty of $1,000 for a mistake in the quality of the stamp which is put upon the note, without regard to the intent of the party incurring the penalty, then I say that such legislation is without any precedent, and is unjust and tyrannical. Sir, the language employed here either is designed to impose this penalty where the omission occurs from mere inadvertence or it is not so designed. If such is not the purpose, then there is no harm in the amendment, and it ought to be adopted. But if the object is to impose such heavy penalties as these upon a mere inadvertence which may happen to any man engaged in business, then I say it is impolitic and unjust.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I fear that the amendment goes further than the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires. I think that it would certainly throw upon the Government the whole burden of proof that fraud was intended.

Mr. THAYER. I think that it would be the opinion of any lawyer, upon a question of this kind, that the omission of the stamp would give rise to a prima facie inference that the neglect was intentional with the purpose of evading the tax, and the only effect of the amendment is to throw open for explanation the conduct of the party prosecuted for the penalties. That is the only effect of the amendment. Without the amendment the penalty is incurred whether the intent to evade the revenue laws existed or not. With the amendment the man who willfully violates the law is equally exposed to punishment as now.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not suppose that it would be possible to convict a man of a crime unless it could be shown that there was a willful purpose to commit the crime. But I think this amendment will weaken the provision very much, as, if I understood it, it throws the burden of proof on the Government.

Mr. HALE. I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I think the objection to his amendment may be obviated by a very simple change. I suggest to the gentleman that instead of inserting his amendment where he proposes, he add at the end of line twenty-two hundred and seventy-four this proviso:

Provided, That if it shall appear that the omission was without intent to evade the provisions of this section the penalty shall not be incurred.

Mr. THAYER. I will accept that modification of my amendment. My only intention is to screen those who act in good faith.

Mr. PRICE. I had such an amendment written out and intended to offer it. It is in these words:

Provided, The said omission to affix the stamp shall be with the intention to defraud the Government.

Mr. THAYER. I will offer the amendment in this shape. I move to insert at the end of line twenty-two hundred and seventy-four the following:

Provided, That when it shall appear that the omission to affix the proper stamp was not with the intent to evade the provisions of this section, said penalties shall not be incurred.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend on page 100 by inserting in line twenty-two hundred and seventy-two, after the word "awarded," the words "and distributed;" and by striking out after the word "court" the words "person or persons," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "between the United States and the informer, if there be one, as provided by law;" and also by striking out in line twenty-two hundred and seventy-one the words "one half of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to strike out the following clause:

And one half of the penalty recovered shall be awarded by the court to the person or persons who, in the judgment of the court, shall have first given the information of the violation of the law for which recovery is had.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think those words have been stricken out already.

The CHAIRMAN. The clause has just been amended. The Clerk will report it as it now stands.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the penalty recovered shall be awarded and distributed by the court between the United States and the informers, if there be any, as provided by law.

Mr. WRIGHT. My motion is to strike out that clause as amended, and I am moved to do it because I think the principle is a wrong one.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rise to a point of order. The clause objected to has just been voted in, and a motion to strike it out is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey is not in order.

Mr. MYERS. In line twenty-two hundred and eighty-one I move to strike out the words "one twentieth of one per cent.," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "at the rate of one cent for every $100;" so that the clause will read:

And there shall be paid on all sales by commercial brokers of any goods, wares, or merchandise, a tax at the rate of one cent for every $100 upon the amount of such sales, &c.

Mr. Chairman, I use these words because they are the words used in the tax provided for on page 99 in reference to stock-brokers and gold-brokers. There is no reason why commercial brokers should pay five times as much as stock-brokers; neither is there any reason why they should pay five times as much as commission merchants are required to do by another section of this act.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I concur entirely with my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order in concurring. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I may say—

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I did not concur in my colleague's amendment, but only in some of his expressions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understood the gentleman, and the floor has been given to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL. I will give the gentleman from Pennsylvania a part of my five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Which part? [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. Well, the first part. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out "one twentieth" and insert "one fortieth," so as to make the tax "one fortieth of one per cent." I do it because I think the amendment of my colleague [Mr. MYERS] goes further than the House is willing to go. I think the House would be willing—I hope so at least—to go for one fortieth of one per cent.

A few moments ago I stated the burdensome character of the tax imposed on commercial brokers by this section. Out of $2,500 profit the commercial broker has to pay one tenth part, or $250. My amendment proposes that he shall only pay $125.

Mr. MORRILL. Let me have the rest of my five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I think that this is a burdensome tax, and I hope the House will so amend the section as to take only $125 instead of $250.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot give the gentleman any more of my time.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I will give you as much time as you wish. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to say that I had a letter yesterday from one of the largest commercial brokers in New York, and the tax here imposed is entirely satisfactory to him.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I can explain that.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the committee will not reduce the tax.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Let me

answer that reference to the New Yorker. The New Yorkers charge the tax to the owners, whereas in all other cities it is not charged to the owners.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The amendment of Mr. MYERS was then disagreed to.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move the following amendment:

Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to sales of flour, wheat, pork, and beef.

Mr. Chairman, I move that for the reason the articles mentioned are articles of prime necessity for poor men. They are substantial provisions every man has to have. And this tax comes out of the men who produce them or who consume them. In either case it is unjust. The farmers in the West are taxed most unmercifully. [Laughter.] Gentlemen who own large manufactories in the East may laugh, but I repeat there are no people so unmercifully taxed as the farmers of the West. They are taxed upon all the articles of husbandry. They are taxed upon everything they wear. They are taxed upon every particle of leather and every stitch of clothing. You tax the farmer again and again; he is taxed upon his income, and if he has a large family you do not allow enough above a thousand dollars to support them. You tax them upon every bushel of wheat. You tax them upon every hog they raise for market. You tax them on the sale of all these articles of beef, pork, and flour. These sales are always managed through brokers. Beef, pork, and flour are shipped to Chicago and Buffalo to be sold by these brokers, and this tax reverts and is deducted from the value of the goods to the producer. It is out of the producer or the consumer and is wrong in either case.

Mr. MORRILL. This is an old acquaintance which has been thoroughly discussed and every time defeated. The taxing of these articles when sold by brokers does not come out of the producer, but the sales reached are those made for the purposes of speculation. Daily in New York these contracts are made as in gold or bullion for the purposes of speculation. Beef, pork, and flour largely change hands in expectation of a rise or fall in the market. It is such sales as these that this tax reaches—very small on legitimate trade and none too large when it reaches speculators in bread and meal. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, including schedule A and inserting in lieu thereof the following.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

That there shall be levied, annually, on every carriage, gold watch, and billiard table, and on all gold or silver plate, the tax or sums of money set down in figures against the same, respectively, or otherwise specified and set forth in schedule A, hereto annexed, to be paid by the person or persons owning, possessing, or keeping the same on the 1st day in May, in each year, and the same shall be and remain a lien thereon until paid.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I move to strike out the words "gold watch," "gold and silver plate." I do this because I regard it as a petty, annoying tax, unworthy the system we are inaugurating at the present time. I find the whole revenue from gold watches was only $9,000, and from gold and silver plate $117,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am sorry to see the distinguished gentleman from New York deserting the committee. What can better bear taxation than gold watches, gold and silver plate, and luxuries indulged in by rich people?

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE A.
Carriage, phaeton, cart, hackney coach, or other like carriage, and any coach, hackney coach, omnibus, or four-wheeled carriage, the body of which rests upon springs of any description, which may be kept for use, for hire, or for passengers, and which shall not be used exclusively in husbandry or for the transportation of merchandise, valued at exceeding $500 and not above $500 each, including harness used therewith, six dollars.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Carriages of like description, valued above $500, each ten dollars.

On gold watches, composed wholly or in part of gold or gilt, kept for use, valued at $100 or less, each one dollar.

On gold watches, composed wholly or in part of gold or gilt, kept for use, valued at above $100, each, two dollars.

Billiard tables, kept for use, ten dollars.

Provided, That billiard tables kept for hire, and upon which a special tax has been imposed, shall not be required to pay the tax on billiard tables kept for use, as aforesaid, anything herein to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. ROSS. I move in line twenty-three hundred and twenty to insert after the word "use" the word "each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On plate, of gold, kept for use, per ounce troy, fifty cents.

On plate, of silver, kept for use, per ounce troy, five cents.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That silver spoons or plate of silver used by one family to an amount not exceeding forty ounces as aforesaid, belonging to any one person, plate belonging to religious societies, and souvenirs and keepsakes actually given and received as such and not kept for use; also, all premiums awarded as a token of merit by any agricultural society, corporation, or association of persons, for any purpose whatever, shall be exempt from duty.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert in lieu of the last word "duty" the word "tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That sections one hundred and one and one hundred and two be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following as a substitute for the next paragraph in the bill. It contains a few changes:

That section one hundred and three be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: That every person, firm, company, or corporation owning or possessing or having the care or management of any railroad, canal, steamboat, ship, barge, canal-boat or other vessel, or any stage-coach or other vehicle engaged or employed in the business of transporting passengers for hire, or in transporting the mails of the United States upon contracts made prior to the passage of this act, or any canal, the water of which is used for mining purposes, shall be subject to and pay a tax of two and one half per cent. of the gross receipts from passengers and mails of such railroad, canal, steamboat, ship, barge, canal-boat, or other vessel or such stage-coach or other vehicle: Provided, That the tax hereby imposed shall not be assessed upon receipts for the transportation of persons or mails between the United States and any foreign port; but such tax shall be assessed upon the transportation of persons from a port within the United States through a foreign territory to a port within the United States, and shall be assessed upon and collected from persons, firms, companies, or corporations within the United States, receiving hire or pay for such transportation of persons or mails: Provided also, That any person or persons, firms, companies, or corporations, owning, possessing, or having the care or management of any toll-road, ferry, or bridge, authorized by law to receive toll for the transit of passengers, beasts, carriages, teams, and freight of any description, over such toll-road, ferry, or bridge, shall be subject to and pay a tax of three per cent. of the gross amount of all their receipts of every description; but when the gross receipts of any such bridge or toll-road, for and during any term of twelve consecutive calendar months, shall not exceed the amount necessarily expended to keep such bridge or road in repair, no tax shall be assessed upon such receipts during any month next following any such term: And provided further, That all such persons, firms, companies, and corporations shall have the right to add the tax imposed hereby to their rates of fare whenever their liability thereto may commence, any limitations which may exist by law or by agreement with any person or company which may have paid or be liable to pay such fare to the contrary notwithstanding: And provided further, That no tax under this section shall be assessed upon any person, firm, company, or corporation whose gross receipts do not exceed $1,000 per annum.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If I understand this proposition it will impose this tax upon the gross receipts of the railroads, steamboats, or canal companies for carrying passengers or freights. That is the effect of it. It will require the payment of two and a half per cent. upon the gross receipts from the carrying of freights and passengers. The object of the committee is, I suppose, to assess the tax merely on the receipts from passengers.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. There is one feature of this amendment that I would like to understand. I do not understand that this is a tax upon these companies. It provides—

That all such persons, firms, companies, and corporations shall have the right to add the tax imposed hereby to their rates of fare whenever their liability thereto may commence, any limitation which may exist by law or by agreement with any person or company which may have paid or be liable to pay such fare to the contrary notwithstanding.

This is simply a tax upon their customers. I would like to have it explained by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I will modify my amendment by inserting after the words "gross receipts" the words "from passengers and mails." I have only to say that the law is left exactly as it now is with the exception of exempting all freights, and the provision objected to by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HOTCHKISS,] which authorizes the railroads to add this tax to their rates of fare, is one that has always existed, and is more required in the gentleman's own State, New York, than in any other.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means a question.

Mr. MORRILL. Wait until I have answered the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SPALDING. Well, let us vote down the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman will keep his temper until I reply to the gentleman from New York, he shall have a chance. The gentleman from New York knows very well that in his own State the roads are restricted—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPALDING. I hope this amendment will not prevail. I am opposed to it. If I understand it correctly, it is the very provision we discussed here two years ago for one or two days, and the chairman of the committee then yielded to us and put this tax in another shape in his bill. It now purports to be a tax upon the gross receipts of steamboats, railroads, &c., from passengers, but really, according to the amendment, there is very little difference made between passenger steamers and freight steamers. It will be a tax of two and a half per cent. upon the gross receipts of all railroads, freight steamers, canal-boats, and everything else. The bill which is sought to be amended is tolerably distinct.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman will see that, as modified, it only applies to receipts from passengers and mails.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SPALDING. Certainly, sir.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. This is a very important section, and I suggest that it be passed over informally, and that in the mean time the amendment offered be printed.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I have moved an amendment to strike out the provision which imposes a tax upon passengers. The gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, says that in my State we need this provision. In that he is mistaken. In my State we have restricted the railroad companies to a certain charge upon passengers per mile, and we intend to hold the companies to that charge.

Mr. MORRILL. That was before any tax was levied.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Precisely, and this steps in between the company and its passengers and changes the contract. We have provided by the legislation of the State of New York that these companies must abide by the provisions of their charters. We have more recently provided that no men shall ride upon their roads without paying their fares. I ask that my amendment be printed, together with that of the gentleman from Vermont.

The section was then passed over informally.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Would it be in order to ask the consent of the committee that the amendments offered be printed?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee can give their consent, but that would not be an order to print.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and seven be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person, firm, company, or corporation owning or possessing or having the care or management of any telegraphic line by which telegraphic dispatches or messages are received or transmitted, shall be subject to and pay a tax of three per cent. on the gross amount of all receipts of such person, firm, company, or corporation.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by adding to the paragraph the following proviso:

Provided, That no returns shall be required of receipts not subject to tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and eleven be amended by inserting after the words "proprietors, managers, or agents of lotteries" the words "and all lottery ticket dealers."

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and ten be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of one twenty-fourth of one per cent. each month upon the average amount of the deposits of money, subject to payment by check or draft, or represented by certificates of deposit or otherwise, whether payable on demand or at some future day, with any person, bank, association, company, or corporation engaged in the business of banking; and a tax of one twenty-fourth of one per cent. each month, as aforesaid, upon the capital of any bank, association, company, or corporation, and on the capital employed by any person in the business of banking beyond the amount invested in United States bonds; and a tax of one twelfth of one per cent. each month upon the average amount of circulation issued by any bank, association, corporation, company, or person, including as circulation all certified checks and all notes and other obligations calculated or intended to circulate or to be used as money, but not including that in the vault of the bank, or redeemed and on deposit for said bank; and an additional tax of one sixth of one per cent. each month upon the average amount of such circulation, issued as aforesaid, beyond the amount of ninety per cent. of the capital of any such bank, association, corporation, company, or person. And on the first Monday of each month a true and accurate return of the amount of circulation, of deposit, and of capital, as aforesaid, and of the amount of notes of State banks or State banking associations paid out by them for the previous month, shall be made and rendered in duplicate by each of such banks, associations, corporations, companies, or persons to the assessor of the district in which any such bank, association, corporation, or company may be located, or in which such person may reside, with a declaration annexed thereto, and the oath or affirmation of such person, or of the president or cashier of such bank, association, corporation, or company, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that the same contains a true and faithful statement of the amounts subject to tax as aforesaid, and shall transmit the duplicate of said return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and within twenty days thereafter shall pay to the said Commissioner of Internal Revenue the taxes by law prescribed upon the said amounts of circulation, of deposits of capital, and of notes of State banks and banking associations paid out as aforesaid; and for any refusal or neglect to make or to render such return and payment as aforesaid, any such bank, association, corporation, company, or person so in default, shall be subject to and pay a penalty of $200, besides the additional penalty and forfeitures in other cases provided by law; and the amount of circulation, deposit, capital, and notes of State banks and banking associations, as aforesaid, in default of the proper return, shall be estimated by the assessor or assistant assessor of the district as aforesaid, upon the best information he can obtain; and every such penalty, together with the taxes, may be recovered for the use of the United States in any court of competent jurisdiction. And in the case of banks with branches, the tax herein provided for shall be imposed upon the circulation of each branch, severally, and the amount of capital of each branch shall be considered to be the amount allotted to such branch; and so much of an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means for the support of the Government," approved March 3, 1863, as imposes any tax on banks, their circulation, capital, or deposits, other than is herein provided, is hereby repealed: Provided, That this section shall not apply to associations which are taxed under and by virtue of the act "to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof." And the deposits in associations or companies known as provident institutions or savings banks, having no capital stock and doing no other business than receiving deposits to be loaned or invested for the sole benefit of the parties making such deposits, without profit or compensation to the association or company, shall be exempt from tax or duity on so much of their deposits as they have invested in securities of the United States, and on all deposits less than $500 made in the name of any one person: And provided further, That any bank ceasing to issue notes for circulation, and which shall deposit in the Treasury of the United States, in lawful money, the amount of its outstanding circulation, to be redeemed at par, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, shall be exempt from any tax upon such circulation.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the committee that I do not expect that we shall be able to get through with this paragraph to-night. But I desire to offer some amendments which I think will not be objected to by any one, and then I will move that the committee rise. I move to amend the paragraph near the beginning by inserting the word "average" before the words "amount invested in United States bonds."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting the words "paid out" after the words "and the amount of circulation, deposit, capital, and notes of State banks and banking associations," near the middle of the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. And in the same sentence I move to amend by striking out the words "together with the taxes," before the words "may be recovered for the use of the United States in any court of competent jurisdiction."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend still further by inserting at the close of the first proviso the following:

But the returns required to be made by such provident institutions and savings banks after July, 1866, shall be made on the first Monday in January and the first Monday in July in each year, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I would suggest to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that another amendment should be made, so as to make the proviso read, "associations or companies known as provident institutions, savings banks, savings funds, or savings institutions." These associations are known by that name among us. Of course it will make no difference in the operation of this act.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, (at five minutes to ten o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. COBB: The memorial of M. Bolles, and others, for an increase of import duties on metallic zinc.

By Mr. CULLOM: A petition signed by numerous citizens of Sangamon county, Illinois, in favor of protection of American wool.

Also, another petition from citizens of same county, calling upon Congress to impose a tax of two dollars upon dogs.

By Mr. RICE, of Maine: The petitions of E. F. Bradbury, and others, and J. W. Wood, and others, of Dexter, Maine, asking for amendment of tariff laws so that American laborers in manufacturing establishments shall be protected "to the extent of the difference of the cost of capital and labor here and abroad, with the addition of the taxes paid by American industrial products from which the foreign are free."

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 23, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of manufacturers of stoves, praying that the tax on stoves may be reduced; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COWAN presented the petition of employes in John Wood & Brother's Pennsylvania Iron Works at Conshohocken, Pennsylvania, and the petition of Samuel Riddle, Wright Turner, and others, of Delaware county, Pennsylvania, praying for an increase of the tariff for the protection of American industry; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HENDERSON presented additional papers to accompany the petition of J. H. Ellis, paymaster, United States Army, to be reimbursed for Government moneys stolen from him at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of citizens of the State of Oregon and Washington Territory, praying for an appropriation by Congress for the payment of the claims growing out of the war to repel Indian invasions in 1855 and 1856, in accordance with the award of a commission authorized by act of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, presented the petition of Margaret A. Farran, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 492) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 564) to annul the thirty-fourth section of the declaration of rights of the State of Maryland, so far as it applies to the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom were referred sundry petitions and memorials, praying for the equalization of bounties to soldiers in the late war, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Sarah A. Brewer, widow of Major Brewer, late paymaster United States volunteers, praying for a pension, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Sarah A. Holland, praying for a pension, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Good, praying for a pension, reported adversely thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 337) to incorporate the National Gas-Light Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 338) for the relief of Henry Great-house and Samuel Kelly; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 598) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 142) authorizing the Postmaster General to pay additional salary to letter carriers in San Francisco.

THE METRIC SYSTEM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In compliance with the order of the Senate directing the Chair to appoint a select committee on coins and weights and measures to consider several bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives on that subject, the Chair will announce the appointment of Mr. SUMNER, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. MORGAN, Mr. NESMITH, and Mr. GUTHRIE.

CORNELIUS B. GOLD.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 453.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 453) for the relief of Cornelius B. Gold, late acting assistant paymaster United States Navy.

It directs the proper accounting officers of the Government, in the settlement of the accounts of Cornelius B. Gold, late acting assistant paymaster United States Navy, to allow a credit of $510 09 for clothing abstracted from a store-room in his charge while on duty in Mobile bay in the spring or summer of 1865; but no credit is to be allowed until the proper officers of the Government shall be satisfied by full and complete proof of the loss of the clothing herein referred to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bill and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 598) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 142) authorizing the Postmaster General to pay additional salary to letter carriers in San Francisco—to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

BRIDGE AT WINONA.

Mr. NORTON. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 263.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 263) to authorize the Winona and St. Peter's Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi river and to establish a post route, the pending question being on the amendment offered by Mr. Howe, in section one, line nine, after the word "Wisconsin" to insert "or between La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin, and the opposite bank of said river, in the State of Minnesota, as may be agreed by the Legislatures of Minnesota and Wisconsin;" so as to make the section read:

That the Winona and St. Peter's Railroad Company, a corporation existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Minnesota, be, and the same is hereby, authorized and empowered to erect, maintain, use, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi river, between the city of Winona, in the State of Minnesota, and the opposite bank of said river, in the State of Wisconsin, or between La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin, and the opposite bank of said river, in the State of Minnesota, as may be agreed by the Legislatures of Minnesota and Wisconsin, subject to the conditions and limitations hereinafter provided, &c.

Mr. NORTON. I do not desire to discuss this amendment any further. The Senate perhaps will remember all that was said on the subject the other day. I will state, however, that the effect of this amendment will be to open a controversy between the Legislatures of the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota that must inevitably result in a failure to construct a bridge at all connecting the roads either at La Crosse or at Winona. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HOWE. I cannot assent to that view of the effect of this amendment. It is not offered with any such design. It is offered for the simple purpose of allowing each of the two States to have a voice in settling the point at which these crossings shall be made. If the effect, however, were to be such as the Senator from Minnesota suggests, it seems to me that would be a conclusive reason why the Senate should not refuse to adopt it, because then the Senate would be inevitably placing itself in the attitude of imposing a burden upon one State in behalf of another or of a locality in another State, which I take it the Senate does not choose to do.

Mr. NORTON. Just one word. The railroad systems of the State of Minnesota and of the State of Wisconsin have settled the points at which these crossings ought to be; and it does not depend, and it ought not to depend, upon the Legislature of either of these States. The construction of the railroads of the State of Minnesota, according to the system of that State, makes it necessary to have a bridge at Winona; the railroad system of the State of Wisconsin may make it necessary to have one at La Crosse. The systems of these two States ought to settle the question as to the points where bridges are necessary, and it ought not to be made to depend upon the local interests or a clashing between the interests of the two States. As I said the other day, the Senate will remember, there is no company in the State of Minnesota authorized to construct a road on the west bank of the river from Winona to La Crosse; and without that, the proposition to Minnesota to make the crossing of the Winona and St. Peter's railroad at La Crosse would be simply nonsense, because we have no company in Minnesota authorized to construct a road there.

Mr. HOWE. The fact that there is no company in Minnesota authorized to build a road down the west bank of the river to a point opposite La Crosse is an argument which may be brought to bear in its full force upon the Legislature of Wisconsin, and it is to that Legislature I wish it referred. I do not wish the Senate of the United States to be influenced by that argument. If under the influence of it the Legislature of Wisconsin see fit to accept a bridge across the river at Winona they can do it; but it is not an argument why the Senate should impose one upon the State against her wish. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Several SENATORS. What is the question?

Mr. HOWE. Senators tell me they do not know what the question is. I will state it. The bill as it stands authorizes the building of a bridge across the Mississippi river at Winona. If this amendment be adopted it will authorize the building of a bridge either at Winona or at La Crosse, which is about twelve miles due south from Winona, at one or the other of these points as shall be agreed upon by the Legislatures of the two States.

Mr. MORRILL. Suppose the Legislatures cannot agree?

Mr. HOWE. In that event it would not authorize the building of a bridge at either point; but we suppose that the two States know better for themselves than we can know whether they want a bridge across the river and where they want it.

Mr. NORTON. For the purpose of correcting a false impression that might be made by the remark of the Senator from Wisconsin that La Crosse is twelve miles due south of Winona, I desire to state that the fact is that by the course of the river it is forty miles from Winona to La Crosse, the river running in a southeasterly direction. The distance is forty miles; at least it has been so understood ever since I have been in that country.

Mr. RAMSEY. By land it is thirty-five miles according to recent survey.

Mr. NORTON. To get to the point on the La Crosse road at which we wish to intersect the La Crosse road on the east side of the river is fifteen miles further by La Crosse than it would be to build a bridge at Winona and go from there to that point on the La Crosse road, so that if the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is adopted Minnesota will be so far in the power of Wisconsin that she may possibly, in order that we may get an eastern connection, compel us to build fifteen miles more of road and at an expense of nearly three quarters of a million dollars more. That will be the position in which Minnesota will be if the amendment of the Senator be adopted.

Mr. HOWE. As to the geography of that country, I have stated that one of these points was twelve miles due south of the other. La Crosse, to be sure, is further east than Winona, but both of these roads are tending east. Just how far it is by the river I am not prepared to say. I understand it is twenty-nine miles. I concede that the Senators from Minnesota ought to know better than myself about that, however; they have traveled it oftener. But I hold in my hand a township map. There are two roads making to the Mississippi river, one touching opposite to La Crosse, and one at Winona. Due south of Winona these two roads are about a township and a half apart, being about nine miles distant from each other. That one touches the river further east than the other makes no figure in the case, because let the traffic come in on which road it will, it wants to come East, and it is not of any importance to that traffic whether it crosses the river on one meridian of longitude or the other.

Mr. NORTON. It makes no difference whether we cross at one point or the other, provided we have a road built, or some company has authority to build one to that point. We have no company in Minnesota authorized to build a road from Winona down to La Crosse.

Mr. HOWE. Provided the two States should agree to cross the river at La Crosse, then it would impose upon the St. Peter's company, which is the company now desiring to cross at Winona, the obligation of building nine miles to connect with the southern road instead of building twenty-seven miles, I think it is, to connect with the La Crosse road on the east side of the river.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Conness, Edmunds, Fessenden, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Sumner, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Cragin, Davis, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Norton, Ramsey, Riddle, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Williams—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Harris, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Nye, Saulsbury, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, and Wright—14.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to offer another amendment providing that the bill shall not take effect until the consent of the Legislature of Wisconsin is obtained.

Mr. NORTON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves further to amend the bill by inserting at the end of the third section the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall not go into effect until the consent of the Legislature of Wisconsin is first obtained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to amend the second section of the bill by striking out all after the word "act" in the twenty-first line down to and including the word "bridge" in the twenty-fourth line; also, by striking out the word "it" in the twenty-fifth line and inserting the word "aid;" and then by striking out all of the section after the thirty-first line. I ask the Secretary to read the section as it will stand if amended as I propose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question will be on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not wish the Senate to concur in the amendment made in Committee of the Whole to the second section. I propose to amend that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As an amendment to the amendment made in Committee of the Whole, the motion of the Senator is of course first in order. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was after the word "act" in the twenty-first line of the second section to strike out the following words: "may, at the option of the company building the same, be built as a draw-bridge, with a pivot or other form of draw, or with unbroken or continuous spans; provided, that if the said bridge;" in line twenty-five to strike out the word "it" and insert the word "and;" and also to strike out the proviso beginning at the thirty-second line in the following words:

And provided also, That if any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans of not less than one hundred and sixty feet in length in the clear between piers on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining spans to the draw shall not be less than two hundred and fifty feet; and said spans shall not be less than thirty feet above low-water mark, and not less than ten above extreme high-water mark, nearing to the bottom chord of the bridge, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under the permanent spans of said bridge, except when trains are passing over the same; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draws after the passage of trains.

So that the section will read:

That any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, and shall not be of less elevation in any case than fifty feet above extreme high-water mark as understood at the point of location, to the bottom chord of the bridge, nor shall the spans of said bridge be less than two hundred and fifty feet in length, and the span over the main channel of the river shall be three hundred feet in length, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to have a direct vote of the Senate upon the proposition of building draw-bridges upon the Mississippi river, and the motion that I now make to amend the second section of this bill presents that naked question. If my amendment be adopted, no draw-bridge can be built at this point. The Senate passed a bill a few days ago enabling a company to build a draw-bridge or a bridge with continuous spans at Quincy; but I hope, from what I understand, that it will not meet with the concurrence of the other branch of Congress, if it be in order thus to refer to that branch, or at least it is somewhat doubtful. I desired, when that bill was before the Senate; to prevent the construction of draw-bridges upon the river at all; and I should like very much now for the Senate to come to a direct vote upon the question of the propriety of building draw-bridges upon that river.

I do not wish to detain the Senate, but I will state in addition to what I said the other day when a similar question was pending, that I learn that a gentleman at St. Louis proposes to construct there a bridge with continuous spans of four hundred feet, and guaranties the passage over it of the heaviest freight trains that are run upon any roads whatever.

Mr. COWAN. The Niagara bridge is eight hundred feet.

Mr. HENDERSON. But he proposes to do it with an iron truss bridge, not a wire bridge; and I understand he states that he prefers building a continuous span of four hundred feet to building two spans of two hundred feet each, and being required of course, as he would be, to build an additional pier in the river, that he can do it with much less cost of construction than would be required to put down the additional pier. I understand that one of the best mechanics in the State of Missouri, and a man who has proved his ability to comply in every respect with his contracts, has consented to enter upon the work. I know it was objected, a few days ago when this question was under consideration, that such a bridge could not be built. This bill proposes only a span of three hundred feet. That fallacy has been disproved in the building of the bridge at Steubenville, Ohio. It is demonstrated beyond doubt that the most perfect structure can be made with spans of three hundred feet, and that it will have sufficient strength to bear the very heaviest burdens.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSEY] has proposed a resolution that I think this body ought to adopt before going into this business of bridging with pontoon bridges, as it were, the Mississippi river. He proposes to have a scientific board established to go out and examine the Mississippi river, and see at what points it may be safely bridged, and report the character of the bridges that under the circumstances ought to be constructed. It was strenuously urged the other day when a similar proposition was before the Senate that one bank of the Mississippi is always low, and that therefore it will be impossible to build these high bridges. It seems to me better to intrust the matter to a board of scientific men, a board of engineers. It could be done without cost to the Government, because we have the engineers here and we are paying them their salaries. They could very well discharge that duty. Let them go out and report to this body at the next session whether this thing is practicable or not. But, strange to say, the Senate of the United States, without ever having suffered a thing of this sort to be done before in all our history, all at once enters upon a scheme of bridge building upon the Mississippi river, laying down, as it were, pontoon bridges of a permanent character over that river at almost every conceivable point. Now, it is seen that so soon as the proposition of the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] has been adopted to build a bridge at Quincy, my constituents of course ask that one be built at Hannibal, within thirty miles of that town. It is then proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] to build a bridge also at Burlington, and immediately upon the passage of that proposition a movement is made by the honorable Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NORTON] for a bridge at Winona, and of course the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] desires that La Crosse shall have the same privilege. We shall have propositions for not less than one hundred bridges across this river.

I will state further that there is no use of haste in this matter. The Mississippi river is now perhaps as high as it usually gets at this season of the year. It is all over the bottom lands everywhere. It is very high at the points where it is now proposed to throw these structures. Nothing can be done this summer toward bridging. No progress can be made in bridging the Mississippi river between now and next December; and why not let the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSEY] press his resolution, and have a board to go and examine, and let us act with some prudence, with some caution, with some discretion, when we act upon a question of such great importance as the bridging of that stream?

The commerce upon the Mississippi river to-day is more than all the foreign commerce of this country. There are not less than from thirty to forty thousand miles of navigable water upon the Mississippi river and its tributaries—not less than thirty-two thousand miles of navigable waters; and we propose, by establishing the precedent in the case of bridging the Mississippi, to allow the bridging of every one of those streams. It is a question of very great importance and I see no necessity, while the water is now from five to six feet over the bottom lands of the Mississippi river, for the Senate hastening to a conclusion upon this subject.

I do not object to the railroads of this country having every facility for crossing the navigable streams of the country. Indeed, I desire that it shall be done. I certainly want communication from the West to the East, and while I am acting as a member of this body or in any other capacity I will do nothing to obstruct commerce in its way from the West to the East or from the East to the West. It is a thing we want; but is it not going too far to say that the Mississippi river, a great river navigable for three thousand miles by the largest class of steamers, shall be covered over at every little town with a permanent pontoon bridge? Our eastern friends ought not to ask that, with the idea that it will largely benefit the railroads that point in their direction, and that it will facilitate commerce in that direction instead of toward the southern country.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is it the East that is proposing to do this?

Mr. HENDERSON. No, it is our western friends. The Senator from Maine suggests very properly that it is not so much our eastern friends who are urging the passage of these measures as unfortunately the inhabitants of the little towns along the Mississippi river. I do think that our western friends ought to act with a little more prudence and a little more caution in matters of this character. Nothing can be lost between now and next December, and let us adopt the proposition of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. RAMSEY,] and if the engineers report between now and next December that it is impossible to build other than draw-bridges upon the Mississippi, I shall consent to do it.

I do not know that I can add anything more to what I have said. I regret very much that I have to trouble the Senate on this subject. I feel a very great interest in it, but I have no other interest than any other citizen of the great West. I have no interest in any railroad company or steamboat company upon the earth, not a dollar's worth of interest in anything of the sort; but as a western man I do feel an interest in preventing the pontoon bridging of the Mississippi river. I know that draw-bridges have been built upon navigable waters; but originally when that was done it was required that the draw should always be open except when trains were crossing on the bridge. I allude to this in order to show Senators what progress we are making on this subject. I say that originally it was required that the draw should remain open at all times except when trains were crossing the bridge, and then, and then only, was it closed, so as to leave the river open to navigation. But how is it in this bill? How was it in the bill which we passed the other day? The draw is required to be closed at all times except when steamboats are passing. We are conferring privileges upon the railroad companies and gradually making inroads upon the navigable waters of this country and closing them up. It cannot be denied that this is the course now being pursued. Perhaps the railroad companies deserve these privileges; it may be that they offer facilities for trade and travel to further the commercial intercourse of the country that the rivers do not offer; but I beg leave to differ from Senators when they thus insist. I know that all heavy freight can be carried upon the Mississippi river for one third of the money that any railroad company can carry it. I know that a barrel of pork or a barrel of whisky can be carried from St. Louis to New Orleans, and from New Orleans around to the city of Boston, for one third of the money for which it can be carried by any railroad company in this country directly; and it can be carried in that way for one third of the money, even after you have bridged the Mississippi river. That shows most clearly that we ought to be prudent and careful how we close up this great navigable thoroughfare. We are navigating the Missouri river now by a regular line of packets, thirty-two hundred and forty miles above the city of St. Louis, up to Fort Benton, and even above Fort Benton; and why are these great streams to be closed up by low bridges, the draws of which are required at all times to be closed, except when steamers are passing? If bridges can be built with a continuous span of three hundred feet, so as to accommodate the railroads, I say it ought to be done. I have before stated to the Senate that a mechanic has asserted at St. Louis that he will build bridges with a span of four hundred feet, and they now propose to go on and construct a bridge at St. Louis with continuous spans of four hundred feet and fifty feet above high-water mark. That will accommodate the steamboat interest and the railroad interest, too.

Mr. President, if my proposition is adopted it only requires these bridges, if built between now and next December, to be built with continuous spans. I hope the Senate will consider the matter a little more seriously than it considered the proposition pending the other day. It can do this bridge company no harm, because they can do nothing between now and next December except to procure stone for the building of the piers, and that will answer just as well for a continuous-span bridge as for a bridge with a pivot and draw. The Mississippi river is so high that no pier can be built between now and next December. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NORTON] will scarcely contradict me on this point. Nothing can be done between now and next fall. The consent of the Wisconsin Legislature has yet to be obtained, as I understand, before this bridge can be built at all, by an amendment already adopted, and I wish to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin when the Legislature of that State again meets.

Mr. HOWE. In January.

Mr. HENDERSON. In January next. This consent, then, cannot be had before next January. My amendment cannot harm the object of the Senator from Minnesota. If it be the desire of western members on this great river to bridge it in this way, I must submit; but I do enter my most solemn protest, as I have already entered it, against this work of constructing pivot and draw-bridges on that great river.

I have alluded to the increasing commerce of the country. In thirty years from to-day we shall all see how unnecessary and how idle and how absurd it was to construct these bridges, because by that time it will have been demonstrated by the American mechanics that bridges can be built with a span of four hundred feet to accommodate both the steamboat and the railroad interests of the country. It will have been demonstrated by that time that there was no necessity for building these pontoon bridges and fastening them to the banks of the river, thus obstructing the current of this great stream. This will be demonstrated in the next thirty years, and then we shall have to regret our folly in having filled the river with these structures.

The Legislature of Wisconsin does not meet till next January, so that nothing can be lost by my proposition. Let us send some engineers out to the Mississippi river, and let the Senate be informed on the subject. If continuous-span bridges can be erected, let that commission so report, and I for one shall say amen, and pledge the Senate that I shall make no further opposition to bridging the river. If they say that pivot and draw-bridges can be built, be it so; but if they say that continuous-span bridges can be built, I ask whether there is a Senator in the hearing of my voice who will then consent to construct these low bridges. I hope not. Sir, you are now putting in the way of the great lumber interest of Wisconsin obstructions that will seriously damage the commercial interests of that State and seriously damage the commercial interests of that great northwestern country; and yet Senators seem to think they are hastening to do them a great benefit. I cannot so think. I wish I could so think, provided they are right and I am wrong; but until I am further satisfied, I cannot believe that we are doing any good to the Northwest and the West by this course of proceeding.

The board proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSEY] can report by next December; and as the Legislature of Wisconsin does not meet until January, the Senate may be informed on the subject long before permission to build the bridge can be obtained from the State of Wisconsin. Of course no company would be foolish enough to proceed with the construction of this great bridge under an act of Congress alone. They must have an abutment upon the soil of Wisconsin, and they must get the consent of the State of Wisconsin before they dare put an abutment upon her soil or within the jurisdiction of that State, and her consent cannot be obtained before next January.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Could they not erect the bridge if they owned the land on each side?

Mr. HENDERSON. I doubt that very much. I do not think a man by merely owning land within the sovereignty of a State has a right, by virtue of that, to erect a corporation endowed with the franchise of constructing a bridge and taking tolls on it. I think, under all the circumstances, that if this company insist on building the bridge between now and next January, if they insist on getting a part of the material there, it should be with the understanding that it shall be a continuous-span bridge until we can know more about this matter. It is of very great importance, in my judgment of vast importance; and yet we considered it the other day in the course of an hour and passed a bill setting the precedent for bridging this great stream with these pontoon bridges, as I call them. They are an immense obstruction; I have been so told since the passage of that bill by steamboat men. In fact the Chamber of Commerce of St. Louis has sent a large delegation here to protest against it in the name of the people of the West. I cannot say how far they represent the interest of the people of the West, but they are very earnest about it. Gentlemen may say it is because St. Louis is deeply interested in this matter. St. Louis has no more interest in it than any other part of the great West; any other portion of it is just as much interested as St. Louis; but they come here protesting and saying that with a span of one hundred and sixty feet, as we provided the other day, bridges on the river will materially and permanently injure commerce upon the river.

We can lose nothing by adopting my amendment and saying that if this company proceed to build at all until we can get a report, it shall be a continuous-span bridge, and I hope the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSEY] will push his resolution, urge it forward, and let the board proceed to the West to report upon this important question. It is an important matter, and it ought to be looked into with more care than we seem disposed to look into it now. I know that the learned Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COWAN,] three years ago, discussed the question on behalf of his State in regard to the bridging of the Ohio river. Now they are proceeding to put up the right sort of structures on the Ohio river. Why not compel it to be done upon the Mississippi river? They are not putting up pivot and draw-bridges upon the Ohio river, but bridges that accommodate the commerce upon that river as well as the commerce across the river. It can be done, and done easily, and done to the great satisfaction, not only of the people of the West, but the people of this entire country. These great navigable streams, made by nature, are better than the railroads, even if they were made by the hand of the Almighty. As I have before said, you have nothing to do but to construct the cars to run upon these navigable streams, and companies and individuals can carry freight and passengers cheaper than the railroads, yea, for one third the cost of carrying them upon railroads. Why, then, shall we obstruct these great arteries of commerce made to our hands by nature and by the beneficence of the Almighty? Why shall we, in our puny efforts to make better the commercial channels made by Him, go to work and obstruct those channels, and say to man that we have improved upon the works of nature? Mr. President, let us keep these channels, and let us build others. I do not object to building others; but my desire is to put no obstruction in the way of commerce, either upon the rivers or upon the railroads.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President, I will vote for the amendment with great pleasure. I have had some considerable experience in the navigation of the western rivers, and I have a very clear and distinct opinion of my own that nothing could be more mischievous to the interests of the carrying trade of the country than the construction of bridges of the kind described by the Senator from Missouri, and especially when there is no necessity that they should be so erected. I have no hesitation in saying that it would be better for the United States to-day to appropriate $1,000,000 for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi river, ninety feet, or one hundred feet, if you please, above low-water mark, with a span of six or seven hundred feet; it would be a saving to the country, on the whole, if we were to appropriate $1,000,000 to build a bridge of that kind, rather than build a draw-bridge upon a stream of that character. A draw-bridge is well enough upon tide-water, well enough upon still water; but it is impossible to protect the commerce of a river as against these draw-bridges in a sharp current at different stages of the water. I have no doubt that western men will regret their action in a very short time if they allow these great streams to be obstructed by erections of this kind.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I move to postpone the present and all prior orders, and that the Senate take up House joint resolution No. 127.

Mr. SUMNER. What is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the joint resolution will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SUMNER. The question, I think, is on proceeding to the consideration of that resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Michigan is that the Senate postpone the present and all prior orders, and proceed to the consideration of the House joint resolution the title of which has just been read.

Mr. SUMNER. So I understood. Of course that opens no question of the merits, and I do not propose to say anything on the merits. I know not that I shall be able to take any part in this debate; but I cannot allow the resolution to be taken up without expressing my own individual opinion that it would be better if its consideration were postponed still longer. I believe that the country has gained much by the postponement that has already been had. On a former occasion I stated that we were able to have a better proposition at the end of April than we had at the end of March, and I believe now we shall be able to accept a better proposition just as the weeks proceed. We shall be better prepared for this question next week than we are this week, and the week after next we shall be better prepared than next week.

Why, sir, here is a vast mass of testimony which has been taken. It has been laid in dribbles, if I may so express myself, before Congress and the country, and never gathered together as a whole; it has never been analyzed; no conclusions have been presented from that testimony; and yet I take it that testimony was taken for some purpose, doubtless to enlighten Congress and enlighten the country; but the Senate is now asked to proceed without the opportunity of considering that testimony in any mature form. I think, sir, it is a mistake that we are asked to proceed with it under such circumstances. I think, sir, that delay for the arrangement of that testimony, and to the end that it may be presented in proper form for our consideration would be wisdom. I think it would be the highest statesmanship. I think from a consideration of that testimony we shall be prepared to decide better than we are now, not only what we ought to do, but what we can do. For instance, here is a very considerable question which we shall be called to discuss, as to the extent to which certain persons engaged in the rebellion shall be excluded from the suffrage. I doubt not that the Senate is better prepared to discuss that question this week than it was last week, and I am sure it will be better prepared to discuss it next week than this week; and my reason is that the evidence on the subject is daily accumulating. It so happens that I heard last evening, myself, very important testimony from gentlemen in whom I have very peculiar confidence, just from the South, with regard to public opinion there, especially among those who have been recently in rebellion, all tending to show the necessity of some counteracting regulations or requirements on our part.

I say such evidence is constantly accumulating. I wish that Congress may have the full benefit of it, to the end that what we do shall be well done. The question is presented whether we shall proceed on a principle of inclusion or of exclusion. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] adopts the principle of inclusion without exclusion. There are others who are disposed to adopt the principle of exclusion without inclusion; in other words, they would exclude certain rebels, but would not include those loyal persons whose misfortune it is that they were born with a skin not colored like our own. Now, sir, for myself it seems to me we have got to adopt both principles, the principle of inclusion and the principle of exclusion; but I do not think that the Senate is at this moment so well informed with regard to the facts which necessarily underlie the decision of that very great question. It is one of the greatest questions that has ever been presented in the history of our country or of any country. It should be approached carefully and solemnly, and with the assurance we have before us by all the testimony, all the facts, everything that by any possibility can shed any light upon it. Have we all that testimony? I doubt; and I content myself now with simply entering my own individual caveat against what seems to me the something like precipitation with which the measure is hurried.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know, sir, that I shall take any part whatever in the discussion of the resolution which is now proposed to be taken up in the Senate. That will depend on circumstances not entirely within my control. But with reference to taking it up this morning, I beg leave to say that I differ entirely with the honorable Senator from Massachusetts as to the propriety of proceeding with it at the present time. The matter has been very long under consideration. If he has not informed himself of the amount of the testimony and of what the testimony is that has been taken, it is surely his own fault, because, not only has the principal part of the testimony been published in the newspapers, but it has been published in numbers or sheets and laid upon the tables or sent to Senators; and I presume he has received it, with others. If he wants it in a form all together, he can get that readily, but not bound. I suppose he would not require it to be bound before he reads it, and I believe that a copy unbound has been furnished to each Senator; I have received one.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There has been time enough to bind it. It could have been bound by this time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. A few numbers might; but the fact is that there are certain other papers to be included with the testimony that are not ready; for instance, there is an index to be prepared. There is no difficulty about that; and the complaint of the honorable Senator, I think, is not well founded in regard to there not having been ample opportunity for every Senator to inform himself, if he was so disposed, of the testimony. I agree with him, however, in one thing, and that is, that we have gained by delay. The Senate will remember that at one time we were pushed very hard in all the newspapers in the country to have immediate action on the subject. It was necessary, however, to take testimony, and the progress of taking that testimony and its publication have had the most beneficial effect in informing the mind of the country and satisfying everybody, I think, that the matter has been better understood in consequence of the course that was adopted by the committee from necessity, because the committee was unable to come to a conclusion for the want of testimony in the first place.

Now, sir, as to taking more testimony, some time or other, some point must be fixed at which it should be closed; and that was fixed by the committee, and its determination has been acted upon. If we adopted the advice of the Senator from Massachusetts, to wait until we got every particle that by any possibility might throw light on the subject, we should wait until the next century, perhaps; there is no knowing how often witnesses might turn up, or what they might desire to say. The committee were satisfied that it had gone far enough, affording the most ample opportunity to everybody that desired to testify or desired to produce testimony. There has been no exclusion of anything that has been offered that looked as if it had a bearing on the subject.

We are late in the session. The House of Representatives passed this resolution two weeks ago, or perhaps more. It has been delayed here longer than it would have been, owing to circumstances to which it is not worth while now to allude. I thought it well, as chairman of the committee, that the resolution, after having been passed by the House of Representatives, should lie upon our table for awhile in order to give gentlemen ample opportunity to consider it, and then that a day should be fixed sufficiently far off to enable every one to know that the question was to come up. That time has come, and has passed by a couple of days; and late as we are in the session, with so much to do, so much upon our hands which is obstructed in a measure by this question, it is my deliberate judgment, and it was the deliberate judgment of all the members of the committee on the part of the Senate, that it should have been taken up last Monday.

I agree that public opinion is very apt to be changeable on such subjects; and as public opinion is apt to be changeable, I think we may as well follow our own judgments. It has appeared to do well hitherto, and I am inclined to think that we who have the management of the business know just as well as anybody else when it is advisable to take it up and what it is advisable to do. I can relate one anecdote which shows precisely how this matter is understood. A leading paper in the West, a very important paper, within a short time after the appointment of the committee of fifteen—I think within some two or three weeks afterward, but it may have been a month or two—came out with an article headed, "A Policy Wanted," and it blamed Congress exceedingly for not proceeding to act and define a policy on this subject. The argument was that the President had defined his policy, and that everything was going wrong because Congress had no policy; that it must at once bring in resolutions fixing what it intended to do and have it settled. I thought it was rather unkind to the committee that a leading newspaper should comment in the style it did upon the proceedings of Congress without knowing what the difficulties were, or really what the questions were, and how much embarrassment there was in arriving at a conclusion. But, sir, it went along until about a month ago or less, when the same paper came out with an article saying, "Don't be in too much of a hurry about this business; take time; there is no trouble about it; the country is gaining by delay; have the thing well understood and well matured before you act; don't be in a hurry." This was in the same paper; whether it was written by the same hand or not I do not know. Where there are so many different opinions, and in the same press, too, very often, I come to the conclusion which I expressed before, that we may just about as well exercise our own judgment and do the best we can and leave the results to the future.

Now, sir, as I hope Congress may adjourn some time from the 1st to the middle of July, as I think it ought to do, and may if it attends to its business properly, and if nothing occurs to render a longer session necessary, I think we have arrived now—the last week in May—at a time when we ought to have this question out of the way. We may not agree with the other House in some points. In that case the resolution will have to go back to the House. The discussion upon it will take some time. While it remains undisposed of it stands in the way of other business. I should dislike very much to see a question of this importance crowded into the heel of the session. When it is a matter upon which we have resolved to act and settle before Congress adjourns, if we can settle it, we had better not leave it to the hurry of hot weather and a time when we may all be more impatient than we ought to be in considering a question of so much importance. I hope, therefore, that it will be proceeded with this morning.

Mr. SUMNER. I did not intend, and I hope I was not understood to make any formal opposition to proceeding with this measure. All that I aimed to do was to express an individual opinion which I have very strongly—I cannot help it—with regard to the time when it is best to consider the subject. I may be in error; it is probable that I am in error, since I find that most of those about me have a different opinion, and I am sure that have substantially at heart the same objects as myself. Most probably I am in error; but I have performed my duty, and in a humble way satisfy myself by making this declaration. I have ventured to file a caveat—perhaps that is too strong a term to use for so simple an expression as I intend now—but I did wish to bring the Senate seriously to consider whether they had before them all the evidence so arranged, with all its conclusions and results presented to them which they thought it best to have before they proceeded to the final decision of this great question. I must say I think they have not. However, others do not agree with me.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts to what time he would propose to postpone the consideration of this measure. In asking the question, I desire also to say that I agree with the Senator from Maine that Congress ought to adjourn at as early a day as he has suggested. Unquestionably this measure has to be considered before the adjournment. We know that practically, and I am in favor of meeting it at some early day, because I do not want to be kept here, personally, and I do not suppose other Senators desire to be kept into the very hot weather of the summer in this city. If the Senator from Massachusetts proposes a reasonable postponement, whatever reasons may govern him, whether they be different from those that may govern myself or not, I would be inclined to vote with him, but not for any very long postponement of it. If it could be postponed until the next session, I perhaps would agree to that, but to postpone it to the month of July, I would not agree to.

Mr. SUMNER. Does the Senator desire an answer?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUMNER. I did not propose any motion. The Senator asks me a question. That I will answer with great pleasure. As far as I can pretend to determine or have an opinion, from the business of the Senate, I do not suppose the Senate can adjourn before the latter part of July. I have supposed that we should not get to such a point in our business that we ought to leave here till then. I have thought, then, that this great question of reconstruction ought to be reserved as the last serious considerable subject for discussion before we leave. I have thought, therefore, it might perhaps be taken up properly during the last half of June, some three or four weeks from now; believing, as I do, that at that time we shall be better instructed on the general subject, better prepared to harmonize and to adopt a policy which will be most truly beneficent to the country. I am sure that the country is ready to adopt any policy which this Congress puts forth, and the stronger it is the better. The country is stronger than Congress, and I believe that Congress will be stronger than it is now if we wait till those very heats of summer which Senators so much deprecate.

Mr. CONNESS. Considering how long we have waited before action on this question, and how impatiently the country has waited, I must express the hope that the waiting will be brought to an end, and that we shall now come to deliberate and final action as soon as we can upon the great question before us. It will be remembered that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts advises us that his opposition to considering this question now is not a formal opposition; it is but an informal opposition that the Senator makes. That is not a distinction without a difference, it is true, for it furnishes sufficient difference to invite the proposition for delay from the other side. I hope the Senator will not be gratified. Indeed, I know he does not want to be gratified. I know in saying that I assume something; that is, I assume to know the Senator's mind better than he speaks it this morning; but it will be remembered that he spoke with a divided mind, and so advised us. It was not a formal opposition. It was but his informal opposition this morning to the consideration of the question; and in obedience to the idea that seems to have invested him for some time past, that the more delay we have the better we shall be prepared; that the longer we postpone the greater will be the result of our wisdom when we deliberate; that with that postponement we shall have more inclusion than exclusion, to use the Senator's terms. The Senator from Nevada and his inclusion will be the more welcomed by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts and appreciated, and the exclusion of the honorable Senator from Indiana, who leads the other side so well upon questions of the character now before us, will be, in a smaller degree, included in the result and the sum total of our judgment. But that these things may happen, that is to say, that we shall have the promise of their happening and occurring, given us by the honorable Senator, I am not, for one, willing to delay any longer. I am very glad to see that the Senator does not launch the thunders of his opposition to proceeding this morning. I knew that he would agree to go on, with an unwilling, half reluctant, half consenting, protesting, delightful enjoyment that we were to begin. That being the temper of the Senator, and I think the temper of the Senate and the country being to proceed, I should not feel at liberty to delay even for five minutes longer. Therefore I must express the hope that we shall now proceed with this great and greatest of questions that has ever been presented to the American people for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the resolution from the House of Representatives proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 85) for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida; asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GEORGE W. JULIAN of Indiana, Mr. JOHN H. RICE of Maine, and Mr. ADAM J. GLOSSBRENNER of Pennsylvania, managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 318) to authorize the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 193) for the relief of Mrs. William L. Herndon; and

A bill (H. R. No. 558) to amend the charter of the Washington Gas-Light Company.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. COOPER, his Secretary, announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed, on the 21st instant, the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. No. 132) to prevent and punish kidnapping;

An act (S. No. 186) amendatory of an act to provide for the reports of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States;

An act (S. No. 316) to establish a post route from West Alburg, Vermont, to Champlain, in the State of New York, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 61) to extend the time for the construction of the first section of the Western Pacific railroad.

HOMESTEADS IN SOUTHERN LAND STATES.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 85) for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, and,

On motion of Mr. KIRKWOOD, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the President pro tempore be authorized to appoint the managers at said conference on the part of the Senate.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 127) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which was read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two thirds of both Houses concurring,) That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three fourths of said Legislatures, shall be valid as part of the Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE —.

SEC. 1. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within the Union, according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But whenever, in any State, the elective franchise shall be denied to any portion of its male citizens not less than twenty-one years of age, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation in such State shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens not less than twenty-one years of age.

SEC. 3. Until the 4th day of July, in the year 1870, all persons who voluntarily adhered to the late insurrection, giving it aid and comfort, shall be excluded from the right to vote for Representatives in Congress and for electors for President and Vice President of the United States.

SEC. 4. Neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation already incurred, or which may hereafter be incurred, in aid of insurrection or of war against the United States, or any claim for compensation for loss of involuntary service or labor.

SEC. 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I regret that the state of the health of the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] who is chairman, on the part of the Senate, of the joint committee of fifteen, is such as to disable him from opening the discussion of this grave and important measure. I was anxious that he should take the lead, and the prominent lead, in the conduct of this discussion, and still entertain the hope that before it closes the Senate will have the benefit of a full and ample statement of his views. For myself, I can only promise to present to the Senate, in a very succinct way, the views and the motives which influenced that committee, so far as I understand those views and motives, in presenting the report which is now before us for consideration, and the ends it aims to accomplish.

The joint resolution creating that committee intrusted them with a very important inquiry, an inquiry involving a vast deal of attention and labor. They were instructed to inquire into the condition of the insurgent States, and authorized to report by bill or otherwise at their discretion. I believe that I do not overstate the truth when I say that no committee of Congress has ever proceeded with more fidelity and attention to the matter intrusted to them. They have been assiduous in discharging their duty. They have instituted an inquiry, so far as it was practicable for them to do so, into the political and social condition of the insurgent States. It is very true, they have not visited any localities outside of the city of Washington in order to obtain information; but they have taken the testimony of a great number of witnesses who have been summoned by them to Washington, or who happened to be in Washington, and who had some acquaintance with the condition of affairs in the insurgent States. I think it will be the judgment of the country in the end that that committee, so far as the procuring of testimony upon this subject is concerned, has been not only industrious and assiduous, but impartial and entirely fair. I know that such has been their aim. I know that it has not been their purpose to present to Congress and the country in their report anything unfair or one-sided, or anything of a party tendency. Our anxiety has been to ascertain the whole truth in its entire length and breadth, so far as the facilities given us would warrant.

One result of their investigations has been the joint resolution for the amendment of the Constitution of the United States now under consideration. After most mature deliberation and discussion, reaching through weeks and even months, they came to the conclusion that it was necessary, in order to restore peace and quiet to the country and again to impart vigor and efficiency to the laws, and especially to obtain something in the shape of a security for the future against the recurrence of the enormous evils under which the country has labored for the last four years, that the Constitution of the United States ought to be amended; and the project which they have now submitted is the result of their deliberations upon that subject.

The first section of the amendment they have submitted for the consideration of the two Houses relates to the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several States, and to the rights and privileges of all persons, whether citizens or others, under the laws of the United States. It declares that—

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

It will be observed that this is a general prohibition upon all the States, as such, from abridging the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the United States. That is its first clause, and I regard it as very important. It also prohibits each one of the States from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or denying to any person within the jurisdiction of the State the equal protection of its laws.

The first clause of this section relates to the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States as such, and as distinguished from all other persons not citizens of the United States. It is not, perhaps, very easy to define with accuracy what is meant by the expression, "citizen of the United States," although that expression occurs twice in the Constitution, once in reference to the President of the United States, in which instance it is declared that none but a citizen of the United States shall be President, and again in reference to Senators, who are likewise to be citizens of the United States. Undoubtedly the expression is used in both those instances in the same sense in which it is employed in the amendment now before us. A citizen of the United States is held by the courts to be a person who was born within the limits of the United States and subject to their laws. Before the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, the citizens of each State were, in a qualified sense at least, aliens to one another, for the reason that the several States before that event were regarded by each other as independent Governments, each one possessing a sufficiency of sovereign power to enable it to claim the right of naturalization; and, undoubtedly, each one of them possessed for itself the right of naturalizing foreigners, and each one, also, if it had seen fit so to exercise its sovereign power, might have declared the citizens of every other State to be aliens in reference to itself. With a view to prevent such confusion and disorder, and to put the citizens of the several States on an equality with each other as to all fundamental rights, a clause was introduced in the Constitution declaring that "the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States."

The effect of this clause was to constitute ipso facto the citizens of each one of the original States citizens of the United States. And how did they antecedently become citizens of the several States? By birth or by naturalization. They became such in virtue of national law, or rather of natural law which recognizes persons born within the jurisdiction of every country as being subjects or citizens of that country. Such persons were, therefore, citizens of the United States as were born in the country or were made such by naturalization; and the Constitution declares that they are entitled, as citizens, to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States. They are, by constitutional right, entitled to these privileges and immunities, and may assert this right and these privileges and immunities, and ask for their enforcement whenever they go within the limits of the several States of the Union.

It would be a curious question to solve what are the privileges and immunities of citizens of each of the States in the several States. I do not propose to go at any length into that question at this time. It would be a somewhat barren discussion. But it is certain the clause was inserted in the Constitution for some good purpose. It has in view some results beneficial to the citizens of the several States, or it would not be found there; yet I am not aware that the Supreme Court have ever undertaken to define either the nature or extent of the privileges and immunities thus guaranteed. Indeed, if my recollection serves me, that court, on a certain occasion not many years since, when this question seemed to present itself to them, very modestly declined to go into a definition of them, leaving questions arising under the clause to be discussed and adjudicated when they should happen practically to arise. But we may gather some intimation of what probably will be the opinion of the judiciary by referring to a case adjudged many years ago in one of the circuit courts of the United States by Judge Washington; and I will trouble the Senate but for a moment by reading what that very learned and excellent judge says about these privileges and immunities of the citizens of each State in the several States. It is the case of Corfield vs. Coryell, found in 4 Washington's Circuit Court Reports, page 880. Judge Washington says:

"The next question is whether this act infringes that section of the Constitution which declares that 'the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States?'"

"The inquiry is, what are the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States? We feel no hesitation in confining these expressions to those privileges and immunities which are in their nature fundamental, which belong of right to the citizens of all free Governments, and which have at all times been enjoyed by the citizens of the several States which compose this Union from the time of their becoming free, independent, and sovereign. What these fundamental principles are it would, perhaps, be more tedious than difficult to enumerate. They may, however, be all comprehended under the following general heads: protection by the Government, the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the right to acquire and possess property of every kind, and to pursue and obtain happiness and safety, subject nevertheless to such restraints as the Government may justly prescribe for the general good of the whole. The right of a citizen of one State to pass through or to reside in any other State, for purposes of trade, agriculture, professional pursuits, or otherwise; to claim the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus; to institute and maintain actions of any kind in the courts of the State; to take, hold, and dispose of property, either real or personal, and an exemption from higher taxes or impositions than are paid by the other citizens of the State, may be mentioned as some of the particular privileges and immunities of citizens which are clearly embraced by the general description of privileges deemed to be fundamental, to which may be added the elective franchise, as regulated and established by the laws or constitution of the State in which it is to be exercised. These, and many others which might be mentioned, are, strictly speaking, privileges and immunities, and the enjoyment of them by the citizens of each State in every other State was manifestly calculated (to use the expressions of the preamble of the corresponding provision in the old Articles of Confederation) 'the better to secure and perpetuate mutual friendship and intercourse among the people of the different States of the Union.'"

Such is the character of the privileges and immunities spoken of in the second section of the fourth article of the Constitution. To these privileges and immunities, whatever they may be—for they are not and cannot be fully defined in their entire extent and precise nature—to these should be added the personal rights guaranteed and secured by the first eight amendments of the Constitution; such as the freedom of speech and of the press; the right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the Government for a redress of grievances, a right appertaining to each and all the people; the right to keep and to bear arms; the right to be exempted from the quartering of soldiers in a house without the consent of the owner; the right to be exempt from unreasonable searches and seizures, and from any search or seizure except by virtue of a warrant issued upon a formal oath or affidavit; the right of an accused person to be informed of the nature of the accusation against him, and his right to be tried by an impartial jury of the vicinage; and also the right to be secure against excessive bail and against cruel and unusual punishments.

Now, sir, here is a mass of privileges, immunities, and rights, some of them secured by the second section of the fourth article of the Constitution, which I have recited, some by the first eight amendments of the Constitution; and it is a fact well worthy of attention that the course of decision of our courts and the present settled doctrine is, that all these immunities, privileges, rights, thus guaranteed by the Constitution or recognized by it, are secured to the citizen solely as a citizen of the United States and as a party in their courts. They do not operate in the slightest degree as a restraint or prohibition upon State legislation. States are not affected by them, and it has been repeatedly held that the restriction contained in the Constitution against the taking of private property for public use without just compensation is not a restriction upon State legislation, but applies only to the legislation of Congress.

Now, sir, there is no power given in the Constitution to enforce and to carry out any of these guarantees. They are not powers granted by the Constitution to Congress, and of course do not come within the sweeping clause of the Constitution authorizing Congress to pass all laws necessary and proper for carrying out the foregoing or granted powers, but they stand simply as a bill of rights in the Constitution, without power on the part of Congress to give them full effect; while at the same time the States are not restrained from violating the principles embraced in them except by their own local constitutions, which may be altered from year to year. The great object of the first section of this amendment is, therefore, to restrain the power of the States and compel them at all times to respect these great fundamental guarantees. How will it be done under the present amendment? As I have remarked, they are not powers granted to Congress, and therefore it is necessary, if they are to be effectuated and enforced, as they assuredly ought to be, that additional power should be given to Congress to that end. This is done by the fifth section of this amendment, which declares that "the Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article." Here is a direct affirmative delegation of power to Congress to carry out all the principles of all these guarantees, a power not found in the Constitution.

The last two clauses of the first section of the amendment disable a State from depriving not merely a citizen of the United States, but any person, whoever he may be, of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or from denying to him the equal protection of the laws of the State. This abolishes all class legislation in the States and does away with the injustice of subjecting one caste of persons to a code not applicable to another. It prohibits the hanging of a black man for a crime for which the white man is not to be hanged. It protects the black man in his fundamental rights as a citizen with the same shield which it throws over the white man. Is it not time, Mr. President, that we extend to the black man, I had almost called it the poor privilege of the equal protection of the law? Ought not the time to be now passed when one measure of justice is to be meted out to a member of one caste while another and a different measure is meted out to the member of another caste, both castes being alike citizens of the United States, both bound to obey the same laws, to sustain the burdens of the same Government, and both equally responsible to justice and to God for the deeds done in the body?

But, sir, the first section of the proposed amendment does not give to either of these classes the right of voting. The right of suffrage is not, in law, one of the privileges or immunities thus secured by the Constitution. It is merely the creature of law. It has always been regarded in this country as the result of positive local law, not regarded as one of those fundamental rights lying at the basis of all society and without which a people cannot exist except as slaves, subject to a despotism.

As I have already remarked, section one is a restriction upon the States, and does not, of itself, confer any power upon Congress. The power which Congress has, under this amendment, is derived, not from that section, but from the fifth section, which gives it authority to pass laws which are appropriate to the attainment of the great object of the amendment. I look upon the first section, taken in connection with the fifth, as very important. It will, if adopted by the States, forever disable every one of them from passing laws trenching upon those fundamental rights and privileges which pertain to citizens of the United States, and to all persons who may happen to be within their jurisdiction. It establishes equality before the law, and it gives to the humblest, the poorest, the most despised of the race the same rights and the same protection before the law as it gives to the most powerful, the most wealthy, or the most haughty. That, sir, is republican government, as I understand it, and the only one which can claim the praise of a just Government. Without this principle of equal justice to all men and equal protection under the shield of the law, there is no republican government and none that is really worth maintaining.

The second section of the proposed amendment reads as follows:

SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within the Union, according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But whenever, in any State, the elective franchise shall be denied to any portion of its male citizens not less than twenty-one years of age, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation in such State shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens—

That is, citizens as to whom the right of voting is denied or abridged—shall bear to the whole number of male citizens not less than twenty-one years of age.

It is very true, and I am sorry to be obliged to acknowledge it, that this section of the amendment does not recognize the authority of the United States over the question of suffrage in the several States at all; nor does it recognize, much less secure, the right of suffrage to the colored race. I wish to meet this question fairly and frankly; I have nothing to conceal upon it; and I am perfectly free to say that if I could have my own way, if my preferences could be carried out, I certainly should secure suffrage to the colored race to some extent at least; for I am opposed to the exclusion and proscription of an entire race. If I could not obtain universal suffrage in the popular sense of that expression, I should be in favor of restricted, qualified suffrage for the colored race. But, sir, it is not the question here what will we do; it is not the question what you, or I, or half a dozen other members of the Senate may prefer in respect to colored suffrage; it is not entirely the question what measure we can pass through the two Houses; but the question really is, what will the Legislatures of the various States to whom these amendments are to be submitted do in the premises; what is it likely will meet the general approbation of the people who are to elect the Legislatures, three fourths of whom must ratify our propositions before they have the force of constitutional provisions?

Let me not be misunderstood. I do not intend to say, nor do I say, that the proposed amendment, section two, proscribes the colored race. It has nothing to do with that question, as I shall show before I take my seat. I could wish that the elective franchise should be extended equally to the white man and to the black man; and if it were necessary, after full consideration, to restrict what is known as universal suffrage for the purpose of securing this equality, I would go for a restriction; but I deem that impracticable at the present time, and so did the committee.

The colored race are destined to remain among us. They have been in our midst for more than two hundred years; and the idea of the people of the United States ever being able by any measure or measures to which they may resort to expel or expatriate that race from their limits and to settle them in a foreign country, is to me the wildest of all chimeras. The thing can never be done; it is impracticable. For weal or for woe, the destiny of the colored race in this country is wrapped up with our own; they are to remain in our midst, and here spend their years and here bury their fathers and finally repose themselves. We may regret it. It may not be entirely compatible with our taste that they should live in our midst. We cannot help it. Our forefathers introduced them, and their destiny is to continue among us; and the practical question which now presents itself to us is as to the best mode of getting along with them.

The committee were of opinion that the States are not yet prepared to sanction so fundamental a change as would be the concession of the right of suffrage to the colored race. We may as well state it plainly and fairly, so that there shall be no misunderstanding on the subject. It was our opinion that three fourths of the States of this Union could not be induced to vote to grant the right of suffrage, even in any degree or under any restriction, to the colored race. We may be right in this apprehension or we may be in error. Time will develop the truth; and for one I shall wait with patience the movements of public opinion upon this great and absorbing question. The time may come, I trust it will come, indeed I feel a profound conviction that it is not far distant, when even the people of the States themselves where the colored population is most dense will consent to admit them to the right of suffrage. Sir, the safety and prosperity of those States depend upon it; it is especially for their interest that they should not retain in their midst a race of pariahs, so circumstanced as to be obliged to bear the burdens of Government and to obey its laws without any participation in the enactment of the laws.

The second section leaves the right to regulate the elective franchise still with the States, and does not meddle with that right. Its basis of representation is numbers, whether the numbers be white or black; that is, the whole population except untaxed Indians and persons excluded by the State laws for rebellion or other crime. Formerly under the Constitution, while the free States were represented only according to their respective numbers of men, women, and children, all of course endowed with civil rights, the slave States had the advantage of being represented according to their number of the same free classes, increased by three fifths of the slaves whom they treated not as men but property. They had this advantage over the free States, that the bulk of their property in the proportion of three fifths had the right of representation in Congress, while in the free States not a dollar of property entered into the basis of representation. John Jacob Astor, with his fifty millions of property, was entitled to cast but one vote, and he at the ballot-box would meet his equal in the raggedest beggar that strolled the streets. Property has been rejected as the basis of just representation; but still the advantage that was given to the slave States under the Constitution enabled them to send at least twenty-one members to Congress in 1860, based entirely upon what they treated as property—a number sufficient to determine almost every contested measure that might come before the House of Representatives.

The three-fifths principle has ceased in the destruction of slavery and in the enfranchisement of the colored race. Under the present Constitution this change will increase the number of Representatives from the once slaveholding States by nine or ten. That is to say, if the present basis of representation, as established in the Constitution, shall remain operative for the future, making our calculations upon the census of 1860, the enfranchisement of their slaves would increase the number of their Representatives in the other House nine or ten, I think at least ten; and under the next census it is easy to see that this number would be still increased; and the important question now is, shall this be permitted while the colored population are excluded from the privilege of voting? Shall the recently slaveholding States, while they exclude from the ballot the whole of their black population, be entitled to include the whole of that population in the basis of their representation, and thus to obtain an advantage which they did not possess before the rebellion and emancipation? In short, shall we permit it to take place that one of the results of emancipation and of the war is to increase the Representatives of the late slaveholding States? I object to this. I think they cannot very consistently call upon us to grant them an additional number of Representatives simply because in consequence of their own misconduct they have lost the property which they once possessed, and which served as a basis in great part of their representation.

The committee thought this should no longer be permitted, and they thought it wiser to adopt a general principle applicable to all the States alike, namely, that where a State excludes any part of its male citizens from the elective franchise, it shall lose Representatives in proportion to the number so excluded; and the clause applies not to color or to race at all, but simply to the fact of the individual exclusion. Nor did the committee adopt the principle of making the ratio of representation depend upon the number of voters, for it so happens that there is an unequal distribution of voters in the several States, the old States having proportionally fewer than the new States. It was desirable to avoid this inequality in fixing the basis. The committee adopted numbers as the most just and satisfactory basis, and this is the principle upon which the Constitution itself was originally framed, that the basis of representation should depend upon numbers; and such, I think, after all, is the safest and most secure principle upon which the Government can rest. Numbers, not voters; numbers, not property; this is the theory of the Constitution.

By the census of 1860, the whole number of colored persons in the several States was four million four hundred and twenty-seven thousand and sixty-seven. In five of the New England States, where colored persons are allowed to vote, the number of such colored persons is only twelve thousand one hundred and thirty-two. This leaves of the colored population of the United States in the other States unrepresented, four million four hundred and fourteen thousand nine hundred and thirty-five, or at least one seventh part of the whole population of the United States. Of this last number, three million six hundred and fifty thousand were in the eleven seceding States, and only five hundred and forty-seven thousand in the four remaining slave States which did not secede, namely, Delaware, Maryland, Kentucky, and Missouri. In the eleven seceding States the blacks are to the whites, basing the calculation upon the census of 1860, nearly as three to five. A further calculation shows that if this section shall be adopted as a part of the Constitution, and if the late slave States shall continue hereafter to exclude the colored population from voting, they will do it at the loss at least of twenty-four Representatives in the other House of Congress, according to the rule established by the act of 1850. I repeat, that if they shall persist in refusing suffrage to the colored race, if they shall persist in excluding that whole race from the right of suffrage, they will lose twenty-four members of the other House of Congress. Some have estimated their loss more and some less; but according to the best calculation I have been able to make, I think that will be the extent. It is not to be disguised—the committee have no disposition to conceal the fact—that this amendment is so drawn as to make it the political interest of the once slaveholding States to admit their colored population to the right of suffrage. The penalty of refusing will be severe. They will undoubtedly lose, and lose so long as they shall refuse to admit the black population to the right of suffrage, that balance of power in Congress which has been so long their pride and their boast.

It will be observed, however, that this amendment does not apply exclusively to the insurgent States, nor to the slaveholding States, but to all States without distinction. It says to all the States, "If you restrict suffrage among your people, whether that people be white or black or mixed, your representation in Congress shall be reduced in proportion to that restriction." It holds out the same penalty to Massachusetts as to South Carolina, the same to Michigan as to Texas.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, I wish to inquire whether the committee's attention was called to the fact that if any State excluded any person, say as Massachusetts does, for want of intelligence, this provision cuts down the representation of that State.

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly it does, no matter what may be the occasion of the restriction. It follows out the logical theory upon which the Government was founded, that numbers shall be the basis of representation in Congress, the only true, practical, and safe republican principle. If, then, Massachusetts should so far forget herself as to exclude from the right of suffrage all persons who do not believe with my honorable friend who sits near me [Mr. SUMNER] on the subject of negro suffrage, she would lose her representation in proportion to that exclusion. If she should exclude all persons of what is known as the orthodox faith she loses representation in proportion to that exclusion. No matter what may be the ground of exclusion, whether a want of education, a want of property, a want of color, or a want of anything else, it is sufficient that the person is excluded from the category of voters, and the State loses representation in proportion. The principle applies to every one of the States in precisely the same manner. And, sir, the true basis of representation is the whole population. It is not property, it is not education, for great abuses would arise from the adoption of the one or the other of these two tests. Experience has shown that numbers and numbers only is the only true and safe basis; while nothing is clearer than that property qualifications and educational qualifications have an inevitable aristocratic tendency—a thing to be avoided.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the word "abridged" before he passes from that branch of the subject. I should like to understand the operation intended by that expression.

Mr. HOWARD. The word "abridged" I regard as a mere intensive, applicable to the preceding sentence, "but whenever, in any State, the elective franchise shall be denied to any portion of its male citizens not less than twenty-one years of age, or in any way abridged" to any portion of its male citizens not less than twenty-one "except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation in such State shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens"—that is, the number of citizens, as to whom it is either denied or abridged—"shall bear to the whole number of male citizens not less than twenty-one years of age."

I suppose it would admit of the following application: a State in the exercise of its sovereign power over the question of suffrage might permit one person to vote for a member of the State Legislature, but prohibit the same person from voting for a Representative in Congress. That would be an abridgment of the right of suffrage; and that person would be included in the exclusion, so that the representation from the State would be reduced in proportion to the exclusion of persons whose rights were thus abridged.

Mr. STEWART. Take a case of this kind: suppose that in the South they should allow the negroes to vote who had been in the Army, or who had educational qualifications; would those who did vote be included in the basis of representation, or would that be an abridgment of that class of persons so that they would all be excluded?

Mr. HOWARD. It is not an abridgment to a caste or class of persons, but the abridgment or the denial applies to the persons individually. If the honorable Senator will read the section carefully I think he will not doubt as to its true interpretation. It applies individually to each and every person who is denied or abridged, and not to the class to which he may belong. It makes no distinction between black and white, or between red and white, except that if an Indian is counted in he must be subject to taxation.

But as to the principle of representation, I beg to call the attention of Senators to two passages which I will read from the Writings of Mr. Madison, whose reflections upon the right of suffrage were at once the most enlightened and profound, to show what were his ideas respecting the right of suffrage and the persons to whom it ought to be granted. It applies to this whole subject. They apply as well to the negro as to the white man. Mr. Madison has been discussing the question of confining the right of suffrage to freeholders, and he observes:

"Confining the right of suffrage to freeholders and to such as hold an equivalent property, convertible, of course, into freeholds. The objection to this regulation is obvious. It violates the vital principle."

Here my honorable friend from Massachusetts will observe what I regard as the vital principle of republican government; it is not representation because of taxation; it is this—"the vital principle of free government, that those who are to be bound by the laws ought to have a voice in making them."

That is the point; that those who are to be bound by the laws ought to have a voice in making the laws.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the honorable member read from Madison's Writings?

Mr. HOWARD. The fourth volume of Madison's Writings, page 25.

Mr. SUMNER. Is that applicable to all without distinction of color?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly it is, and whether they can read and write or not. The point is that the person who is bound by the laws in a free Government ought to have a voice in making them. It is the very essence of republican government. Again he observes, page 27:

"Under every view of the subject it seems indispensable"

I wish the attention of my honorable friend from Maryland to this, for I know how much he reverences the character and talents of James Madison—

"Under every view of the subject!"

"Every view of the subject," not a partial view, but every view which had presented itself or could present itself to the mind of that great man—

"it seems indispensable that the mass of citizens should not be without a voice in making the laws which they are to obey, and in choosing the magistrates who are to administer them. And if the only alternative be between an equal and universal right of suffrage for each branch of the Government, and a confinement of the entire right to a part of the citizens, it is better that those having the greater interest at stake, namely, that of property and persons both, should be deprived of half their share in the Government, than that those having the lesser interest, that of personal rights only, should be deprived of the whole."

Now, apply that great principle as broadly as it is laid down by Mr. Madison on the page from which I have read, and how can any man of true republican feeling, attached to the essential principles of our system of government, refuse the right of suffrage to the whole negro population as a class?

Mr. JOHNSON. Females as well as males?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Madison does not say anything about females.

Mr. JOHNSON. "Persons."

Mr. HOWARD. I believe Mr. Madison was old enough and wise enough to take it for granted there was such a thing as the law of nature which has a certain influence even in political affairs, and that by that law women and children were not regarded as the equals of men. Mr. Madison would not have quibbled about the question of women's voting or of an infant's voting. He lays down a broad democratic principle, that those who are to be bound by the laws ought to have a voice in making them; and everywhere mature manhood is the representative type of the human race.

I have but very little to say, Mr. President, as to the third section of this amendment. It reads as follows:

Sec. 3. Until the 1st day of July, in the year 1870, all persons who voluntarily adhered to the late insurrection, giving it aid and comfort, shall be excluded from the right to vote for Representatives in Congress and for electors for President and Vice President of the United States.

It is due to myself to say that I did not favor this section of the amendment in the committee. I do not believe, if adopted, it will be of any practical benefit to the country. It will not prevent rebels from voting for members of the several State Legislatures. A rebel, notwithstanding this clause, may vote for a member of the State Legislature. The State Legislature may be made up entirely of disloyal elements, in consequence of being elected by a rebel constituency. That Legislature when assembled has the right, under the Constitution, to appoint presidential electors itself if it shall choose to do so, and to refuse to refer that question to the people. It is the right of every State. It is very probable that the power of the rebel States would be used in exactly that way. We should therefore gain nothing as to the election of the next or any future President of the United States. Rather than this, I should prefer a clause prohibiting all persons who have participated in the rebellion, and who were over twenty-five years of age at the breaking out of the rebellion, from all participation in offices, either Federal or State, throughout the United States. I think such a provision would be a benefit to the nation. It would ostracize the great mass of the intelligent and really responsible leaders of the rebellion.

Mr. CLARK. I will state to the Senator that I have drawn an amendment something of this kind, which I will read, to see how it would meet his view, if he will permit me at this time:

That no person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress or permitted to hold any office under the Government of the United States who, having previously taken an oath to support the Constitution thereof, shall have voluntarily engaged in any insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or given aid or comfort thereto.

That would exclude all those who had taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, thereby acknowledged their allegiance to that Government, and had proved false to that oath by joining the rebellion.

Mr. HOWARD. I am by no means sure that I should not be quite willing to support such an amendment as that suggested by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the honorable member from New Hampshire inform me whether he proposes to offer that as an amendment?

Mr. CLARK. That was my idea in drawing it.

Mr. HOWARD. The fourth section of this amendment declares that—Neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation already incurred, or which may hereafter be incurred, in aid of insurrection or of war against the United States, or any claim for compensation for loss of involuntary service or labor.

I take it for granted that no member of this body would oppose the adoption of this section of the amendment. I do not believe the people of the United States will object to declaring that the whole of the rebel debt shall be eternally repudiated and extinguished—a debt contracted in the prosecution of the most wicked war with which the earth was ever cursed, against a Government that was never felt by them except in the benefits it conferred. Such a debt can never be assumed or paid by the loyal people of the United States, and if suffered to remain in quasi existence it can only be left in that condition as a subject of political squabbling and party wrangling.

The assumption of the rebel debt would be the last and final signal for the destruction of the nation known as the United States of America. Whatever party may succeed in so wicked a scheme, by whatever name it may be called and under whatever false guises or pretenses it may operate, if it succeed in assuming this indebtedness, puts an end first to the credit of the Government, and then, as an unavoidable consequence, to the Government itself. I do not propose to spend time upon this branch of the subject. I simply refer to it as a necessity of such magnitude as in my judgment to demand our action and the action of the States of the Union without delay. It is necessary to act, to extinguish this debt, to put it beyond the pale of party controversy, to put it out of sight, and to bury it so deep that it can never again be raised to life in such manner as to become a theme of party discussion. The amount of that debt is probably not less than five billion dollars. We do not know its exact amount, and I am not sure that it is possible ever to ascertain it; but if there should ever be a fair prospect of its assumption by the United States or by the States it is perfectly certain that the evidences of it would multiply thicker than the leaves in Vallombrosa. Those evidences are a great curiosity in the history of commercial affairs. I hold in my hand a specimen of the confederate currency. I will read it for the information of Senators and to give it a permanent registration among our proceedings:

RICHMOND, December 1, 1862.

No. 81413.

Six months after the ratification of a treaty of peace between the Confederate States and the United States of America, the Confederate States of America will pay to the bearer on demand $100.

Signed by the Treasurer and countersigned by the Register of the Confederate States of America, at Richmond.

Such is the kind of commercial security upon which the rebellion was chiefly waged against us. The confederacy issued its promises payable six months after a treaty of peace should be ratified between these States and the United States. I hardly think that in a lawyer's office that would be regarded as negotiable paper. I doubt very much whether the bearer of such a security would be able to sue upon it, even in a court of South Carolina. It is payable not exactly upon the happening of a contingency, but upon the happening of what is and ever will be a total impossibility. "Six months after a treaty of peace." It is not yet due, and of course never will become due. It was never expected to become due by any man who had a thimble-full of brains; but was used as part of that vast system of humbug, deception, and imposture by which the southern people were deluded. Their bogus government never expected to pay it.

Sir, the peace of the country ought not to be disturbed or jeopardized by the agitation of any such question as the assumption of the rebel debt. It becomes the character and dignity of the Government, which has spent so much of treasure and blood in putting down this wicked rebellion, to give an assurance to the people of the United States, whether loyal or disloyal, and to all the people of the civilized world, that this rebel debt thus contracted is never to be paid, that it shall never be recognized as the foundation of any claim or any contract whatever; and such an assurance will be also an especial compensation to the holders of the "cotton loan" in England, which has created so much sensation both on the other side of the Atlantic and on this. I confess I am not without a little anxiety on this point. I wish to give those martyrs to the cause of the "confederate States of America," those who so generously lent that mushroom government their cold cash upon the promises contained in the cotton bonds, a final assurance as to the real value of their securities, and that they are never to look to the United States or to any State of the Union for indemnity on account of moneys advanced by them in the piratical scheme of destroying the Government of the United States. Sir, I do not believe in paying traitors, nor do I believe in indemnifying men abroad who, with their eyes open and a malignity in their heart beyond all parallel, gave them aid and comfort. Nor do I see the propriety of keeping this question open before the country, and enabling the foreign holders of cotton bonds to keep the political atmosphere of this country in a turmoil for the future with a view ultimately of getting their pay from somebody. It is time for us to put our hands upon this whole thing and to extinguish all hope.

The next clause is a very simple one. I have already remarked upon it; and shall spend no more time upon it. It gives to Congress power to enforce by appropriate legislation all the provisions of this article of amendment. Without this clause, no power is granted to Congress by the amendment or any one of its sections. It casts upon Congress the responsibility of seeing to it, for the future, that all the sections of the amendment are carried out in good faith, and that no State infringes the rights of persons or property. I look upon this clause as indispensable for the reason that it thus imposes upon Congress this power and this duty. It enables Congress, in case the States shall enact laws in conflict with the principles of the amendment, to correct that legislation by a formal congressional enactment.

Mr. WADE. I move to amend the joint resolution by striking out all after the word "article" in line eight, and substituting the proposition which I send to the Chair to be read.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

SEC. 1. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of persons born in the United States or naturalized by the laws thereof; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

SEC. 2. No class of persons as to the right of any of whom to suffrage discrimination shall be made, by any State, shall be included in the basis of representation, unless such discrimination be in virtue of impartial qualifications founded on intelligence or property, or because of alienage, or for participation in rebellion or other crime.

SEC. 3. The public debt of the United States, including all debts or obligations which have been or may hereafter be incurred in suppressing insurrection or in carrying on war in defense of the Union, or for payment of bounties or pensions incident to such war and provided for by law, shall be inviolable. But debts or obligations which have been or may hereafter be incurred in aid of insurrection or war against the United States, and claims of compensation for loss of involuntary service or labor, shall not be assumed or paid by any State nor by the United States.

SEC. 4. The Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article.

Mr. WADE. I do not rise now for the purpose of arguing this question at any length; and it is with very great deference that I offer an amendment to the proposition reported by the committee who have had this particular subject under consideration so long. I know that they are infinitely more competent than I am to deal with it; but there are so many conflicting views in regard to this whole matter, and it is so vitally important to the interests of the country that we get the proposition upon which we shall unite as near right as we can, that after all it seems to me to be proper that every Senator who believes he can by possibility improve the plan which has been brought forward by the committee should offer his amendment for the consideration of the body. I do not know that the proposition which I have now submitted will be deemed an improvement upon what they have brought forward; but nevertheless there are some things in it that appear to me to be better, and an improvement upon their report.

In the first section of the proposition of the committee, the word "citizen" is used. That is a term about which there has been a good deal of uncertainty in our Government. The courts have stumbled on the subject, and even here, at this session, that question has been up and it is still regarded by some as doubtful. I regard it as settled by the civil rights bill, and, indeed, in my judgment, it was settled before. I have always believed that every person, of whatever race or color, who was born within the United States was a citizen of the United States; but by the decisions of the courts there has been a doubt thrown over that subject; and if the Government should fall into the hands of those who are opposed to the views that some of us maintain, those who have been accustomed to take a different view of it, they may construe the provision in such a way as we do not think it liable to construction at this time, unless we fortify and make it very strong and clear. If we do not do so there may be danger that when party spirit runs high, it may receive a very different construction from that which we would now put upon it. I find that gentlemen doubt upon that subject, and I think it is very easy now to solve that doubt and put the question beyond all cavil for the present and for the future.

In the first clause of the amendment which I have submitted, I strike out the word "citizens," and require the States to give equal rights and protection of person and property to all persons born in the United States or naturalized under the laws thereof. That seems to me to put the question beyond all doubt.

The Senator from Maine suggests to me, in an undertone, that persons may be born in the United States and yet not be citizens of the United States. Most assuredly they would be citizens of the United States unless they went to another country and expatriated themselves, if they could do so by being adopted in that other country by some process of naturalization that I know nothing about; for I believe the countries of Europe—certainly it is so in England—have always held that a person born within the realm cannot expatriate himself and become a citizen of any other country or owe allegiance to any other country. I think, then, the first section of my amendment covers the whole ground.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Suppose a person is born here of parents from abroad temporarily in this country.

Mr. WADE. The Senator says a person may be born here and not be a citizen. I know that is so in one instance, in the case of the children of foreign ministers who reside "near" the United States, in the diplomatic language. By a fiction of law such persons are not supposed to be residing here, and under that fiction of law their children would not be citizens of the United States, although born in Washington. I agree to that, but my answer to the suggestion is that that is a simple matter, for it could hardly be applicable to more than two or three or four persons; and it would be best not to alter the law for that case. I will let it come under that well-known maxim of the law, de minimis lex non curat. It would make no difference in the result. I think it better to put this question beyond all doubt and all cavil by a very simple process, such as is the language of the first section of the amendment I have offered. I do not know that the corresponding section reported by the committee would leave the matter very doubtful; but that which I have proposed is beyond all doubt and all cavil now and hereafter, and it is as easy to adopt it as it is the other. I regard it as an improvement, and therefore I think it ought to be adopted.

The second section is in regard to the apportionment of representation; and here I like the provision I have proposed better than the corresponding one of the committee. There is no doubt or cavil about it; and it contains some elements which I think make it entirely preferable to the other proposition. There are some reasons, and many believe there are good reasons, for restricting universal suffrage, and upon such principles as not to justify the inflicting of a punishment or penalty upon a State which adopts restricted suffrage. It is already done in some of the New England States—in Massachusetts, for instance. I believe the constitution of that State restricts the right of suffrage to persons who can read the Constitution of the United States and write their names. I am not prepared to say that that is not a wise restriction. At all events, a State has the right to try that experiment; but if she tries it, under the report of the committee she must lose, in the proportion that she has such persons among her inhabitants, her representation in Congress. I do not think that ought to be so. I think we should leave the subject open to the States to act as they see fit about it. I think my amendment in this respect is plainer and more practicable than the proposition of the committee. The entire population is taken, in the first instance, as a basis. The census always discriminates between the black and the white population, and it makes several other discriminations; and therefore it is, and will be at all times, perfectly easy and practicable to ascertain exactly how much of the population of a State shall be counted in the basis of representation under my amendment. Under the other proposition, it seems to me, you must have a census commission all the time in operation in order to keep pace with the variations that will take place from time to time.

Under this amendment you ascertain the classes of the population, and when any discrimination shall be made upon any of these subjects the whole of that particular class will be excluded. There is only one question to be determined. If the exclusion is because of race or color, the question is what amount of colored population is there in the State, and in exactly that proportion she is to lose representation. If any class is deprived of the privilege of voting there should certainly be some restriction on the representation of the State which excludes them. In that particular I think my amendment is a great improvement on the provision reported by the committee. My amendment is such that a calculation can very easily be made of what the restriction of representation is under it. I have not myself calculated it; but we know that some of the States would lose more than half their representation; South Carolina would, and I think Mississippi would, and some other of the States would lose largely if they excluded their colored population from voting; and I think they ought to be restricted in the proportion that the excluded portion bear to the whole.

In the next place, my amendment prohibits and renders null and void all obligations incurred in rebellion and insurrection against the United States or for the purpose of aiding rebellion or insurrection; and in that particular it is precisely the same as the corresponding section of the original proposition which was so eloquently defended and enforced by the Senator from Michigan. I agree with all that he said on that subject, and the proposition reported by his committee and the one I have submitted are the same in that respect; but then my amendment goes to another branch of this business almost as essential as that. It puts the debt incurred in the civil war on our part under the guardianship of the Constitution of the United States, so that a Congress cannot repudiate it. I believe that to do this will give great confidence to capitalists and will be of incalculable pecuniary benefit to the United States, for I have no doubt that every man who has property in the public funds will feel safer when he sees that the national debt is withdrawn from the power of a Congress to repudiate it and placed under the guardianship of the Constitution than he would feel if it were left at loose ends and subject to the varying majorities which may arise in Congress. I consider that a very beneficial provision, which is not in the original proposition.

This section of my amendment goes further, and secures the pensioners of the country. We ought to do something to protect those wounded patriots who have been stricken down in the cause of their country, and to put the security of their pensions and their means of support beyond the power of wavering majorities in Congress, who may at some time, perhaps, be hostile to the soldier. In the condition of things around us we have no great guarantee now that rebels will not ere long be in these Halls, deadly hostile to everything that shall benefit the soldier who was used as an instrument in their downfall and their conquest. Let the policy which I understand to be that now prevailing at the other end of the avenue be adopted, and we have no security and no guarantee that the widow of your dead soldier, who died in the cause of his country, will not be deprived of the pittance that we give her as a support. I am anxious to put the pensions of our soldiers and their widows and children under the guardianship of the Constitution of the United States. They ought to be there, along with your public debt. I think no gentleman will deny that it is very essential that the debt incurred in this war should be placed under the protection of the Constitution of the United States, especially when we are now prosecuting a doubtful war with your Executive as to whether open and hostile rebels shall not have seats in Congress. If they are admitted here to act with their sympathizers at the North, who have constantly opposed every policy that looked to the remuneration of those engaged in the war on our part, who have been opposed to every war measure, who voted against paying your Army in the field, or doing anything to defend the country, what will be the result? Under the dictation of such a policy, should it prevail, who can guaranty that the debts of the Government will be paid, or that your soldiers and the widows of your soldiers will not lose their pensions? I hope that whether my amendment be adopted or not, any amendment to the Constitution which shall finally prevail will contain a clause like this.

Mr. President, I have stated nearly all the differences between my amendment and the proposition of the committee. I have left out of the amendment the third section of the resolution, because as the Senator from Michigan has said it does not seem to me to amount to much. Practically I do not believe it would have any effect. I am for excluding those who took any leading part in the rebellion from exercising any political power here or elsewhere now and forever; but as that clause does not seem to effect that purpose, and will probably effect nothing at all, I do not think it is of any consequence that it should have a place in the measure. I hope another clause will be placed there by the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire. I shall be very glad to see that adopted either as an amendment to my proposition, if it should prevail, or, if not, as an amendment to the original proposition.

I have seen other suggested amendments which I should like to have prevail. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] has submitted a proposition which in my judgment is of the most important and essential character. Could my voice and my vote prevail to give efficacy to his proposition, he should not fail to have it. I am for suffrage to our friends in the South, the men who have stood by us in this rebellion, the men who have hazarded their lives and all that they hold dear to defend our country. I think our friends, the colored people of the South, should not be excluded from the right of voting, and they shall not be if my vote and the votes of a sufficient number who agree with me in Congress shall be able to carry it. I do not agree in this particular with the Senator from Michigan. He yields to the provision in the committee's resolution on the subject reluctantly, because he does not believe three fourths of the States can be got to ratify that proposition which is right and just in itself. My own opinion is that if you go down to the very foundation of justice, so far from weakening yourself with the people, you will strengthen yourself immensely by it; but I know that it is not the opinion of many here, and I suppose we must accommodate ourselves to the will of majorities, and if we cannot do all we would, do all we can. I propose for myself to contend for all I can get in the right direction, and finally to go with those who will give us anything that is beneficial. That is my doctrine. I wish and I hope that on due reflection the Senate will adopt the amendment of the Senator from Nevada, at least as an alternative to some of these propositions, leaving the States to take his proposition if they will in lieu of the one we give to them. I should like to see even that, for I believe they would take his in preference to the one we shall probably give them.

But, sir, notwithstanding I say all this, I am not finding fault with the doings of the committee. I know the difficulties of their task. I know the great variety of opinions that prevail on this subject. I know its importance. I know that the committee has been most unreasonably assailed from outside because it has not earlier brought forth its measures. My only wonder is that they could finish their labors and bring forward these propositions one after another as they have done, and so satisfactorily as they have. When I offer this amendment of mine, I only do it for the consideration of the Senate, and not because I have the vanity to suppose that I could improve anything they had agreed upon. It may be that after men have struck out a course of proceeding, have broken the road, and submitted their doings to us, it is easy to criticise and sometimes easy to amend. That is all I claim. I do not suppose that if I had been on the committee I could have drawn up a proposition so good as this is that they have brought forward; and yet it seems to me, having the benefit of what they have done, that looking it over, reflecting upon it, seeing all its weak points, if it have any, I could, without having the ability of that committee, suggest amendments that would be beneficial. I trust I have done so, or certainly I would not have brought this forward. If it meets the approval of the Senate I shall be glad, because to me it seems to be better; but if not, I shall go for their proposition. All I wished to do now was barely to bring my amendment before the Senate and submit it for their consideration. Hereafter, perhaps, I may or may not have something more to say about it.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator from Ohio intends to press this amendment to a vote I trust he will consent to some modification of it. In the second section I think the word "property" should be stricken out. That section reads, "no class of persons as to the right of any of whom to suffrage discrimination shall be made by any State shall be included in the basis of representation, unless such discrimination be in virtue of impartial qualifications founded on intelligence or property, or because of alienage, or for participation in rebellion or other crime." I certainly think we ought not to put the word "property" as a qualification for suffrage in this country into the Constitution of the United States. If we are to have anything of that kind I think it should be a qualification on account of taxation, not on account of property, but taxation, paying a proportionate part to support the Government. I do not think such a qualification as this should go in the Constitution, and I cannot vote for this proposition as against the proposition of the committee. Then there are words in the third section that I think should be stricken out. Those words are, "and shall not be taxable by any State."

Mr. WADE. Those words are not in the amendment I have offered. They were in the amendment as first submitted and printed, but they are stricken out of the amendment as now offered.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the proposition had better be printed as it now stands amended.

Mr. WADE. Very well.

Mr. WILSON. I am very glad that the Senator from Ohio has stricken out those words which were in his original amendment. I wish simply to say upon that point, that for one, I can consent to vote for no proposition that does not go squarely to the country, that the national debt hereafter created shall be taxed like all other property. I do not believe in the wisdom of having two or three thousand millions of capital in this country placed beyond taxation. We did it in time of war, in an hour of need. I will adhere to that with all fidelity. It is as sacred as any pledge we ever made, as sacred as the blood of our soldiers. But I will consent to no measure that changes one dollar of that property into a new loan, and does not subject it to taxation equally and like all other property. I believe the safety of the debt itself demands that.

Mr. WADE. Nothing more need be said about taxation, for that is not in the amendment I have offered. It was in the printed copy I first submitted; but on consideration I struck that out, thinking the amendment would be better without it, more acceptable to the Senate, and certainly more acceptable to myself. As to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts that the word "property" should be stricken out I will say that there is no member of the Senate more opposed to making a property qualification for voting than I am. I never would vote for it nor submit to it if I could help it. But it is presented here only as one of those alternatives which the States may adopt. Some of them have adopted it before, and may do so again. It is only to be left optional with them to do this and other things. We do not recommend that they should do it; we do not recommend even an educational basis; we simply present the matter to the States. As a general thing the bias of my mind is entirely in favor of free suffrage to every man who is subject to the laws, in the language of Madison. That is the principle which would govern me if the matter were left to me; but we are now legislating with regard to the States, giving them a right to fix this matter for themselves.

If the State of which I am a member, where I could reach it, should undertake to prescribe a property qualification, you would find me opposed to it all the time. I am not very averse to an amendment of my proposition which shall strike out the word "property." I simply thought it would be as well to leave that matter to the States and not to restrict their representation if they should adopt a property qualification applied to all, giving equal suffrage, making no class discrimination. I am not very much opposed to striking out the word "property;" I should not like to lose a vote for my amendment on that account, although I did not suppose it was placed in my amendment in such a position as to subject me to the suspicion of being in favor of the property qualification. If the Senate is opposed to it, I am perfectly willing that that word shall be stricken out, as I think it can be without mutilating my amendment. I now move that the amendment be printed in the form in which I have submitted it.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. As amendments are being offered, I desire to submit an amendment, for the purpose of having it printed, to the second section of the article reported by the committee, and also an amendment to the third section.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the reading of them.

The Secretary read the amendment proposed by Mr. WILSON to the second section, which was to strike out the section and in lieu of it to insert the following words:

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers; but if in any State the elective franchise is or shall be denied to any of its inhabitants, being male citizens of the United States, above the age of twenty-one years, for any cause except insurrection or rebellion against the United States, the basis of representation in such State shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of male citizens so excluded shall bear to the whole number of male citizens over twenty-one years of age.

Mr. WILSON. Before the other amendment is read, I wish to state in a single word the distinction between the proposition just read and the section of the committee's proposition for which it is offered as a substitute. In the original proposition the language is "citizens of the State," in this it is "inhabitants being male citizens of the United States." I think the distinction is of vital importance. Now, let the Secretary read my other proposition.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment, which was to strike out section three, and in lieu of it to insert the following:

That no person who has resigned or abandoned or may resign or abandon any office under the United States, and has taken or may take part in rebellion against the Government thereof, shall be eligible to any office under the United States or of any State.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say in regard to this proposition, which I desire to have printed, that I am in favor of striking out the third section of the proposition of the committee, and I prefer simply to strike it out rather than to insert anything in place of it; but I submit this motion so that if we are to have anything inserted in its place, we shall give the people an opportunity of voting upon a proposition which says that the men who resigned or abandoned offices under the Government of the United States, whether civil or military, and engaged in rebellion, shall never hold any office under the Government of the United States, or under any State.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to suggest to my friends that if they desire to offer amendments it would be better to move each amendment separately, either in the place of some section in the resolution reported by the committee, or as an addition. The difficulty of presenting propositions together as a substitute for the whole is that we are compelled to vote upon them as a whole. If a Senator wishes to substitute one provision for another, let that be a motion distinct by itself.

Mr. WILSON. Mine is.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But the honorable Senator from Ohio has moved a substitute for all the five sections of the article reported by the committee. Perhaps I might vote for some one of the sections he proposes, but I cannot for all together. The purpose can be accomplished by simply moving one section as a substitute for another, or by offering his amendments as additional provisions.

Mr. WADE. Well, I can take that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HENDRICKS in the chair.) But one of the amendments proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts is now in order. The Chair understands the Senator, however, to propose his two amendments simply with a view of their being printed. Is there any objection to the reception of both amendments with a view to their being ordered to be printed?

Mr. CLARK. I suppose these amendments are all offered for the purpose of bringing them to the knowledge of the Senate and having them printed, and that no rule of the body will be enforced upon them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If that be the unanimous wish of the Senate, it will be so ordered.

Mr. CLARK. I propose to offer as an amendment to the third section the proposition which I read some time ago to the Senate, but it would not be in order for me to do so now if any rule of the Senate was to be enforced upon it. I desire to offer an amendment to the third section, for the purpose of having it printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the order will first be made to print the amendments submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to offer this as a substitute for the third section of the committee's resolution:

No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or be permitted to hold any office under the Government of the United States, who, having previously taken an oath to support the Constitution thereof, shall have voluntarily engaged in any insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or given aid or comfort thereto.

I wish also to propose an amendment to the section in regard to the rebel debt, in these words:

Debts incurred in aid of rebellion or war against the United States are illegal and void, shall not be enforced in any court, or assumed or paid by the United States or any State, or by its authority; nor shall any compensation ever be made for the loss or emancipation of any slave.

I prefer to make the provision in regard to the rebel debt a little more specific and to go a little further. I am not content to say that it shall not be paid by the United States or any State, but I want to say that it shall not be enforced in any court, either in an action or by way of set-off; nor shall any debt incurred by any city or municipal corporation in aid of rebellion ever be paid. I do not want that any citizen of my State or any citizen of any other loyal State who shall go down into that country shall ever be taxed to pay one cent of the rebel debt, and I want to say to the world that every particle of it is to be forever repudiated and remain unpaid, that we will not acknowledge it or suffer any of our courts to enforce it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Was the first amendment of the Senator proposed as a substitute for the third section?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, sir. The third section does not seem to be satisfactory to a great many persons, and yet I think something of the kind, looking toward the exclusion of many of those who participated in the rebellion from participation in the administration of our Government, is desirable. The section as it stands in the committee's plan provides that no person who has been engaged in the rebellion shall be allowed to vote until 1870. That is about four years off. Now, it will probably be a year and a half before this amendment can be agreed to by the States; they will be allowed to have until that time; and then it will only be an exclusion for a couple of years. I am afraid that the obstruction they will make to the adoption of the plan will be more serious than all the advantage we can derive from it. I much prefer that you should take the leaders of the rebellion, the heads of it, and say to them, "You never shall have anything to do with this Government," and let those who have moved in humble spheres return to their loyalty and to the Government.

Mr. HOWARD. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire, by way of amendment to the amendment offered by him to the third section, that he strike out the word "voluntarily," so as to exclude that class of persons absolutely without qualification.

Mr. CLARK. I shall have no objection to any amendment of that kind.

Mr. HOWARD. Any person who has taken an oath to support the Constitution as a member of Congress or as a Federal officer must be presumed to have intelligence enough if he entered the rebel service to have entered it voluntarily. He cannot be said to have been forced into it by pressure; but as the amendment of the honorable Senator now stands it leaves open as a question of fact whether he actually entered the rebel service voluntarily or involuntarily.

Mr. CLARK. I will adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan, and I will adopt any other suggestion that seems proper in regard to this amendment. I throw it out merely as a general idea or proposition. It may not be satisfactory to all minds; it may need amendment; it may possibly go too far; but I throw it out to the Senate and desire to have it printed as embracing a general proposition the main feature of which I think should be agreed to, and as a substitute for the third section proposed by the committee.

Mr. HOWARD. I am inclined to think I will support that amendment with that modification.

Mr. CLARK. I do not propose further to discuss the subject, but submit the amendment and ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be printed, unless there be objection.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire also to submit an amendment with a view to have it printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive the amendment and an order will be entered for its printing if there be no objection.

The amendment of Mr. BUCKALEW is to add to the resolution the following additional section:

SEC. 6. This amendment shall be passed upon in each State by the Legislature thereof which shall be chosen, or the members of the most popular branch of which shall be chosen next after the submission of the amendment, and at its first session; and no acceptance or rejection shall be reconsidered or again brought in question at any subsequent session; nor shall any acceptance of the amendment be valid if made after three years from the passage of this resolution.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 23, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BERGEN asked indefinite leave of absence for Mr. TABER.

Leave was granted.

LETTER CARRIERS IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. McRUER, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a joint resolution (H. R. No. 142) authorizing the Postmaster General to pay additional salary to letter carriers in San Francisco.

The joint resolution, which was read, proposes to authorize the Postmaster General to pay to letter carriers in San Francisco such additional salary above that provided by law as may be necessary to procure competent persons for such service.

Mr. LE BLOND. I desire to suggest that this joint resolution ought to provide some limit. In its present form it gives to the Postmaster General unlimited power.

Mr. McRUER. I beg leave to say that it gives to the Postmaster General the same authority which has been given to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to pay only so much additional salary as may be necessary to secure competent persons to do the service. It is not to be presumed that he will give any more. Thus far, the letter delivery has not been established in San Francisco in consequence of the inadequate compensation allowed by law. This joint resolution only allows the Postmaster General to give a small additional compensation that may be necessary to secure carriers.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would suggest to the gentleman that the resolution does not limit the additional amount to be paid; it gives the Postmaster General unlimited power. If the resolution were so amended as to authorize him to allow additional pay, not exceeding a certain amount, it would limit the power of the Postmaster General. It seems to me it ought to do that.

Mr. McRUER. I do not think there is any necessity for that. It is not to be presumed that the Postmaster General will spend any more money for his Department than is absolutely necessary.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. McRUER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEADS IN SOUTHERN STATES.

On motion of Mr. JULIAN, by unanimous consent, Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 85) for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, were taken from the Speaker's table and read, as follows:

First amendment:

Amend the first section by striking out all after the words "sixty-four" in line ten down to and including the word "patent" in the fifteenth line, so that the party will be allowed to enter one hundred and sixty instead of eighty acres of land.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Second amendment:

Insert in line twenty, after the word "lands" in the proviso at the end of the bill, the words "or lands mainly valuable for timber and not suitable for cultivation;" so that the proviso will read:

And provided further, That no mineral lands or lands mainly valuable for timber and not suitable for cultivation shall be liable to entry and settlement under its provisions.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Third amendment:

Add as a new section the following:
And be it further enacted, That the person applying for the benefit of this act shall, upon application to the register of the land office in which he or she is about to make such entry, make affidavit before the said register or receiver that he or she is the head of a family, or is twenty-one years or more of age, or shall have performed service in the Army or Navy of the United States, and that such application is made for his or her exclusive use and benefit, and that said entry is made for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation, and not either directly or indirectly for the use or benefit of any other person or persons whomsoever; and upon filing the said affidavit with the register or receiver, and on payment of five dollars, he or she shall thereupon be permitted to enter the amount of land specified: Provided, however, That no certificate shall be given, or patent issued therefor, until the expiration of five years from the date of such entry; and if at the expiration of such time or at any time within two years thereafter, the person making such entry, or if he be dead, his widow; or in case of her death, his heirs or devisee; or in case of a widow making such entry, her heirs or devisee, in case of her death, shall prove by two credible witnesses that he, she, or they have resided upon or cultivated the same for the term of five years immediately succeeding the time of filing the affidavit aforesaid, and shall make affidavit that no part of said land has been alienated, and that he will bear true allegiance to the Government of the United States; then, in such case, he, she, or they, if at the time a citizen of the United States, shall be entitled to a patent, as in other cases provided by law: And provided further, That in case of the death of both father and mother, leaving an infant child or children under twenty-one years of age, the right and fee shall inure to the benefit of said infant child or children; and the executor, administrator, or guardian may, at any time within two years after the death of the surviving parent, and in accordance with the laws of the State in which such children, for the time being, have their domicile, sell said lands for the benefit of said infants, but for no other purpose; and the purchaser shall acquire the absolute title by the purchase, and be entitled to a patent from the United States on the payment of the office fees and the sum of money herein specified.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

Add as a new section the following:
SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all the provisions of the said homestead law, and the act amendatory thereof, approved March 21, 1853, so far as the same may be applicable, except so far as the same are modified by the preceding sections of this act, are applied to and made part of this act as fully as if herein enacted and set forth.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. JULIAN. I move that the House appoint a committee of conference to act with a similar committee of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 193) entitled "An act for the relief of Mrs. William L. Herndon;" which was thereupon signed by the Speaker.

PREVENTION OF CHOLERA.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Commerce a joint resolution (H. R. No. 116) to prevent the introduction of cholera into the ports of the United States, with certain Senate amendments, in which the committee recommend concurrence.

The amendments were read, as follows:

First amendment:

In line one strike out the word "President" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Treasury."

Second amendment:

In line seven strike out the word "President" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretary of the Treasury."

Third amendment:

Strike out all after the word "to" in line seven down to and including the word "patients" in line thirteen, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Direct the revenue officers and the officers commanding revenue cutters to aid in the execution of such quarantine, and also in the execution of the health laws of the States respectively, in such manner as may to him seem necessary.

Fourth amendment:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That the authority hereby granted shall expire on the first Monday in January, A. D. 1867.

Mr. LE BLOND. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask one question—whether this does not take from the President the appointing power and confer it upon the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. ELIOT. No, sir, not at all. I will state what I understand to be the reason of this change. As the House passed the resolution it provided that the President, through the Secretary of War, should when necessary authorize the military and naval forces to enforce through certain southern States quarantine laws. The Senate changed that whole provision so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to direct revenue officers and officers commanding revenue-cutters to aid all the States in the enforcement of their different quarantine regulations. It has no reference to appointments at all. I call the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill to see what the amendments are, and for the present I shall have to object to its consideration.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. The gentleman cannot do that now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserved the right to object.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. ROSS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and under the law referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That in view of the great demand for and high appreciation of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1864, by the agriculturists of the country, the Committee on Printing be instructed to inquire into the expediency of having printed for distribution an extra number of copies, equal to the number published for the year 1863.

INDIAN SCHOOLS.

Mr. WINDOM, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to examine into and inform the House, as soon as practicable, how much money has heretofore been appropriated for the erection of school-houses and the maintenance of schools at the different Indian agencies within the Dakota Indian superintendency, and the manner in which the same has been expended, together with the present condition of said agencies and the manner in which the business of said superintendency and agencies has been conducted.

MARRIAGES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PATTERSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for legalizing marriages, and for other purposes, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

PROPAGATION OF FOREST TREES.

Mr. BIDWELL, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee on Agriculture be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 423, donating public lands to the American Forest Tree Propagation and Land Company, for conducting experiments respecting forest-tree culture calculated to prevent the destruction and encourage the production of forests in America, and that the same be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. PRICE demanded the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER stated the morning hour had commenced, and the House resumed the consideration of House bill No. 613, to continue in force and amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees," and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill, begun yesterday, was then concluded.

Mr. ELIOT. I have two or three amendments to offer. I move in line five, section one, to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so it will read:

That the act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, approved March 3, 1865, shall continue in force for the term of two years from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELIOT. I move in the third section after the word "clerk" to insert the words "not heretofore authorized by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANLER. Is the printed bill upon our table?

The SPEAKER. It was ordered to be printed yesterday, and is now ready for distribution.

Mr. ELIOT. I move in section five to insert "one" instead of "three;" so it will read "one million acres."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANLER. I desire to know wherein this bill differs from the one recently vetoed by the President.

Mr. ELIOT. I will answer that presently.

Mr. CHANLER. I expect the gentleman to answer it, for it is vital to the bill.

Mr. ELIOT. I now move to recommit the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I will endeavor to explain the bill, and to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from New York. I propose to take up the bill section by section.

The first section continues the bureau for a term of two years. Gentlemen will see that that differs from the bill vetoed by the President, which was indefinite in its duration. This continues the bureau for two years, and removes one objection. If it becomes necessary at the end of that time further to continue the bureau Congress will take whatever action may be deemed proper.

The second section provides the care of the bureau shall be extended to all loyal refugees and freedmen. This is necessary. The law of March, 1865, was passed before the amendment abolishing slavery. It was passed before any slaves were made free except by military order or military proclamation. There has been no law passed since the constitutional amendment was ratified. There has been no law, therefore, as I shall show in another connection, which embraces in its affirmative provisions any freedmen except such as were declared free by the action of their own States or by the military proclamation of commanders or of the President. All other freedmen who were the subjects of emancipation by constitutional amendment are not at this time guarded by any affirmative provision of law which Congress has enacted. The second section also varies from the previous law, which did not receive the sanction of the Executive. It defines the purpose of the law in the care of the freedmen, providing that such care shall only be extended to them as shall be necessary to enable them as speedily as practicable to become self-supporting citizens of the United States, and to aid them in making the freedom which has been conferred by constitutional amendment available to them and beneficial to the Republic.

The third section simply confers upon the President the power to appoint two assistant commissioners in addition to those authorized by the act of March, 1865. That act called for the appointment of a commissioner in each of the States which had been in rebellion. It was found absolutely necessary that the care of the bureau should be extended to other States, and under the authority of law there has been no power to appoint assistant commissioners excepting in those ten States. The object of this is, therefore, simply to authorize the appointment of two more assistant commissioners.

The bill which was heretofore passed called for a territorial division of the country into districts, and it was thought unwise by the President that such power should be given and that such districting should be had. This bill contains no such provision. It simply authorizes the appointment of two assistant commissioners, and that the different commissioners, under the President, shall have charge each of one district to be assigned him by the President where his service can be best employed. The former bill was objected to upon the ground that it called for the appointment of officers, clerks, and agents in all parts of the United States, and that the possible expense might run up to a very large amount. The present bill avoids the districting of the country, and it confines the appointment of clerks or officers in this way: that the Commissioner shall, under the direction of the President, and so far as the same shall be in the judgment of the President necessary for the efficient and economical administration of the affairs of the bureau, appoint such agents, clerks, and assistants as may be required for the proper conduct of the bureau. It also provides that each agent or clerk, not being a military officer, shall have an annual salary of not less than $500, nor more than $1,200, according to the service required of him. It will be found that the amount of compensation that is fixed is so moderate and the limitation upon the appointment of clerks and agents so defined, that the bill cannot be fairly exposed to criticism of that kind. It provides that military officers may be detailed to duty, and distinctly confers upon the President the power, if in his judgment it is safe and judicious so to do, to detail from the Army all the officers and agents of this bureau; but no officer so assigned shall have increase of pay or allowances. It also provides that the Commissioner, when it can be done consistently with public interests, may appoint, as assistant commissioners, agents, and clerks, such men as have proved their loyalty by faithful service in the armies of the Union during the rebellion.

The fourth section of the bill is rendered necessary by an inadvertent omission in the law of 1865, which provided no mode under which the Secretary of War could under that law issue medical stores. Of course it was necessary that medical stores should be issued where no other means were at hand or possible to be obtained. But the law as passed in 1865 did not contain the authority which is put in this fourth section, to issue such medical stores and other aid as may be needful for the purpose named in the section. It will be found that the suggestion which was made, I think, by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER,] has been adopted by providing that no person shall be deemed "destitute," "suffering," or "dependent upon the Government for support," within the meaning of this act, who is able to find employment, and could, by proper industry or exertion, avoid such destitution, suffering, or dependence. The last part of this section is made necessary because of this fact, that we expect very shortly that the regular medical force of the Army will be reduced to the minimum required for the service of the Army. As soon as that is done the volunteer surgeons will be mustered out of the service, and then there will be no medical force which the bureau can have the aid of, because of the fact that there will be no surgeons retained in the regular Army, whose duties will not be required for the service; and it is deemed indispensable that a provision should be made simply authorizing the Secretary of War to continue in office, as surgeons of the bureau, the volunteer officers now employed, and to fill vacancies with other volunteer surgeons unless suitable surgeons of the regular Army can be assigned to duty. If such surgeons can be made available, it will be the duty of the Commissioner to employ them; but if the surgeons of the Army are reduced to the minimum number, and no other aid can be had, then the object of this provision is to provide some surgical and medical aid for the use of the bureau.

Section five is the same as was contained in the other law excepting that instead of three millions of the public lands in the five States of Florida, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, and Arkansas, the reservation is of one million acres; and I would say in regard to this section that if the bill which has just been reported from the Senate, and which has now gone to a conference committee, should become a law—I refer to the homestead law which passed this House some time ago—this section will become of no value, and will be stricken from the bill. That time will have arrived before, in the regular order of things, this bill shall have passed both branches of Congress. If that bill does not become a law, for reasons which I will attempt to show it is essential that this section should be retained. If it does become a law, the provisions of that law will enable the Department to provide for the freedmen without the aid of the fifth section of this bill.

The sixth section, as it is now reported, refers to the Sherman lands, and is substantially altered from the provision of the previous law. It now provides that when the former owners of those lands, which are now allotted to the freedmen, and which have been occupied, as it is known, by them under licenses from the Government, shall apply for a restoration, the Commissioner shall procure other lands, provided he can obtain them at an average price not exceeding twenty-five dollars per acre; that he shall assign them, in lots of forty acres, to the occupants of lands under General Sherman's order, requiring them to pay a fair rental for the lands and permit them to purchase, provided they will pay to the Government the full cost which the Government has incurred for the lands. The provision is that no sale shall be made of the lands purchased at a price less than the cost to the United States.

The seventh section very materially changes the former law which authorized the purchase of sites, and the erection of buildings for schools, and the carrying on of those schools; and it was made a subject of comment that the United States ought not to educate. It will be seen upon an examination of this section that all that it is proposed to do here is to procure buildings for the schools. The Commissioner is authorized to cooperate with private benevolent associations of citizens, and to provide proper sites and buildings, for purposes of education, whenever such associations shall, without cost to the Government, provide suitable teachers and means of instruction, and he shall furnish such protection as may be required for the conduct of such schools, and the property shall remain the property of the United States until sales are authorized by law. It will be seen that the object of this section is to provide school-houses and protect those school-houses, while the schools themselves are conducted by associations of benevolent individuals from the North and West, or from any part of the country where associations are formed for purposes of education. I can hardly imagine that any gentleman can object to a provision of that kind. It is perfectly plain that education cannot be secured to these freedmen unless the Government, for the present, shall protect the buildings in which the schools are conducted. It is needless that I should occupy time in efforts to prove that proposition.

The eighth section simply embodies the provisions of the civil rights bill, and gives to the President authority, through the Secretary of War, to extend military protection to secure those rights until the civil courts are in operation. When the civil courts shall again be in operation the whole jurisdiction hereby conferred ceases. Before that time there is no jurisdiction anywhere except in the military. Until that time there can be no redress of grievances and no administration of the rights which under the law are now possessed by the freedmen but by military aid. But as soon as the civil courts are reorganized and reestablished, then this bill provides that the jurisdiction conferred upon the officers of the bureau shall no longer exist. In other words, it is carrying out what has been done since the organization of the bureau in March, 1865.

The last section simply provides that the officers and employees of the bureau before entering upon the discharge of their duties shall take the oath prescribed by the first section of the act to which this is an amendment. [Some excitement was here manifested among members.] I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the interruption caused by the late news from Connecticut will not be taken out of my time.

Several MEMBERS. What is the news?

Mr. ELIOT. I understand the news is that Mr. Ferry has been elected by both Houses of the Connecticut Legislature a Senator of the United States. [Applause, promptly checked by the Speaker.]

Mr. LE BLOND. I move that business be suspended to allow members an opportunity to shout. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. How long a time does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] desire?

Mr. LE BLOND. Well, say five minutes.

Mr. ELIOT. We can defer that for the present. It will do just as well at another time. I prefer to proceed with my remarks now.

Mr. Speaker, wherever we turn in our legislative path we encounter questions of freedmen and freedmen's rights; they face us everywhere. No peace can come that will "stay" until the Government which decreed freedom shall vindicate and enforce its rights by appropriate legislation. Absent States may return to their allegiance pursuant to laws which you enact, but no true welcome will be found until some sufficient measure of justice shall be meted out to the men whom "military necessity" converted from slaves to citizens. No man, forever hereafter, can live upon our continent and be a slave. That much by the sword and by the law has been decreed. During all our national life, before the slaveholder's rebellion began, from time to time, by leading political parties in the free States it was passionately urged that somehow or other slavery must be abolished. But their action was not persistent and could never have been effective, because at one and the same point both parties stopped, and that point was short of freedom; for it was believed that Congress could not, under the Constitution, act concerning slavery within the States, and so this crime, which most of the fathers who framed our organic law detested, was, by contemporaneous construction of that law, placed beyond the reach of national legislation.

The power to adjust what were termed "domestic relations," which were held to include the relation between the white master who owned and the man of African descent who was the subject of bondage, was not regarded as included in the powers delegated to the United States or prohibited by the Constitution to the States, and therefore fell among the reserved powers of the States. Whether this was right or wrong, it was the accepted law, which only secession ordinances and flagrant war enabled us successfully to overrule, and now by military proclamation, compelled by necessity, but resting upon principles of eternal justice, and by State emancipation, and finally by constitutional amendment, universal freedom has been ordained. The knot which politicians could not untie during eighty years of peace the sword of Mr. Lincoln cut at one blow. The power to liberate, which is now confessed, involved the duty to protect, and the Freedmen's Bureau was its earliest legal recognition. I claim for Congress full power to protect, by fit legislation, the freedom which was thus for the avowed good of the Government conferred by the Commander-in-Chief and confirmed by subsequent law. "I do this as an act of military necessity," Mr. Lincoln said. But when he had done that act, which was rightfully done, according to the laws of war then operating in full force, the duty and the power of Congress were at once disclosed. Upon that power, thus derived, the right and the duty of Congress to establish the Freedmen's Bureau will be found to rest securely.

Since the establishment of this bureau another source of power has been given to us by the people of the States acting through their Legislatures. The great amendment declares that—

"Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction."

And by its second section confers upon Congress, by direct grant, "power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation." By this act alone freedom in every State was by the people suddenly conferred upon four million bondmen. Whether military power had effectually wrought its work or not that amendment was effectual. States that had emancipated might reenslave. But that amendment instantly, when ratified, worked perpetual freedom. States which had not formally united their fortunes with the rebel government became at once subject to the power of that amendment, and in a moment the bondmen within their borders were made free.

By necessary implication, if the second section had not conferred it, we should, I trust, have found and asserted the power to protect the freedmen. But there is the grant of power. And whatever legislation Congress—the sole and exclusive judge in the first instance, subject ultimately to the judgment of the highest judicial tribunal of the Union—shall deem to be appropriate to make fairly effective the great grant of freedom is thus authorized and enjoined. A race of men enslaved by force and kept in bondage for generations, not recognized as clothed with manhood; held, clothed, fed for service; denied education, knowing no relation of husband, wife, or parent, but only of master and slave, after two centuries of oppression is declared free—free at one moment, free where they happen to be, upon the plantation, within the homes of their former masters, and under the angry eye of owners who see their "property" transformed into "men," and made citizens by law. Now, what legislation do you deem appropriate to enforce that act of freedom? Manifestly some is needed; for if the startling facts that come to us from the recent rebel States, of fiendish oppression and brutal outrage, were wholly undisclosed, we yet should know that masters who had rioted in the lusts of slavery would not let their bondmen go in peace; or if they did, we still should know that a race prostrate for generations beneath the heel of tyrannous power could not have their freedom made effectual without our legislative aid.

And yet since that great amendment became a living law we have done nothing, literally nothing, to protect them. The Freedmen's Bureau was a necessity created by military law. It was a law before the amendment was ratified by three fourths of the loyal States. Now, another condition of facts exists, and every day lost by our inaction adds to the great weight we bear of duty undischarged. I remember that we have sent to the President one bill. It had been passed, as I know we all believed, with his substantial approval, not of all its provisions, perhaps, but of its scope and general character. But we were in error. Let us try again. I do not know that any utterance of mine within these Halls can reach the presence of that high officer whom I labored to lift up from among his fellows, while men who now attempt to win him from those who were his friends, by fulsome praise, were heaping abuse upon him mountain-high, and that not in loyal States alone, but in rebel communities, and among traitors red-handed with the blood of our slain sons, and armed to take the nation's life. But, sir, if I could be heard I would, in behalf of these freedmen, invoke his aid. Our action, without his cooperation must be partial and of imperfect effect. Among the thirteen powers conferred by the Constitution upon the President the "veto power" was given as a needful guard to the people's rights when laws ill-advised or rash or contravening the Constitution are enacted. Such power is itself controlled by a two-thirds vote of Congress. But this bill, though passed, might be an imperfect weapon in the hands of officers even of willing loyalty, because every official arm, if it would strike effective blows in this direction, must be upheld by the moral power of the Executive. I would therefore invoke his aid in behalf of these millions of men who look up to him as the controller of their destiny. He knows how they are oppressed. Senators who claim to be loyal may deny the facts established by the mouth of many witnesses. But the President knows the truth. He knows the "slaveholder." He has felt the contempt and contumely and scorn with which the mean aristocrat knows how to crush all whom the Constitution designates as "other persons," and since the war for slavery began has had his home made desolate and has held life in hand while traitors jubilant with assured success have wreaked vengeance upon loyal men who owned no slaves.

Yes, sir, he knows these men. Unclothed of office, he could not now live in his own old home in Tennessee with the military arm of Government withdrawn. Those men stand before him now with simulated respect. There is no human toady upon earth that crouches so meanly to the man above him as the tyrant who arrogantly puts his foot upon the man beneath him. The President has verified that fact in ethics. They solicit and obtain pardon with bated voice, but no repentance has brought forgiveness; and if the concurring testimony of loyal men can substantiate any fact, and put it beyond fair denial, it is proved to us that in every State where the traitor flag supplanted the banners of the Republic, and in Kentucky none the less, the hatred which disloyal men have felt toward their Government is finding expression this day upon the head of the unprotected freedman.

Mr. Speaker, I propose right here to prove that statement. General Fisk, in his report to the Commissioner of the Bureau, dated January 6, 1866, says:

"There are some of the meanest unsubjugated and unconquered, rascally rebellious revolutionists in Kentucky that curse the soil of the country. They now claim that although the amendment to the Constitution forever abolishing and prohibiting slavery has been ratified, and proclamation thereof duly made, yet Congress must legislate to carry the amendment into effect, and therefore slavery is not dead in Kentucky. Others cling to the old barbarism with tenacity, claiming that the Government must pay Kentucky for her emancipated slaves. There are few public journals in the State which afford great comfort to the malcontents, but the majority of the people of Kentucky hail the dawn of universal liberty, and welcome the agency of the bureau in adjusting the new relations arising from the total abolition of slavery. I have succeeded in obtaining the services of many first-class, judicious, popular citizens to act as superintendents at the important points. The 'Blue Grass' region is in the best of hands. General Hay, at Hopkinsville, was a bad failure. He has been removed. I have consulted General Palmer in the appointment of every agent. I return to Kentucky on the 10th instant, by invitation of the Governor, and shall meet the principal planters of the State at Frankfort, in convention, on the 11th. I hope to do good unto them, and make the bureau a blessing to all Kentucky."

On the 23d of January, after the convention had been held, he writes:

"On the part of many of the politicians in Kentucky there is a bitter opposition to the bureau. Governor Bramlette is most cordial in his expressed approval of my official action, and, I think, earnest in his desire that the Assembly so legislate as to give the freedmen impartial justice. A majority of the legislators officially denounce the bureau, and pronounce its presence in Kentucky a usurpation of power, and the act of Congress by which it was established unconstitutional. Just now there is at Frankfort a heated canvass for a United States Senatorship in progress. Candidates for the position vie with each other in denouncing the Freedmen's Bureau. Men who have fought gallantly for the honor of their country's flag are willing to purchase promotion to the United States Senate at the expense of justice to thirty thousand of their fellow-citizens and fellow-soldiers too. The Legislature makes no progress in the enactment of laws applicable to the new condition of things, but lengthy resolutions denunciatory of the bureau, and requesting the President to immediately withdraw the odious institution from the State, are discussed in protracted debate, and voted upon affirmatively with astonishing unanimity. Neither myself nor any of my subordinates are accused of much wrong-doing. We are even complimented as being just and conservative gentlemen; but the Freedmen's Bureau and every soldier of the United States must be immediately removed from Kentucky to prevent irritation, &c. If all the States were to so solemnly protest against the presence of United States troops within their borders, and the country should think best to gratify the clamor for immediate and entire removal that we hear from so many States, the Government would necessarily be compelled to rent a parcel of ground in Canada on which to erect barracks for the accommodation of its withdrawn troops.

"I assure you that in no portion of the country is this bureau more a positive necessity than in many counties of Kentucky; and for the sake of the nation's plighted faith to her wards, the freedmen, and in behalf of humanity and justice, I implore you and the President to listen to no request for its withdrawal from the State until the civil authorities, in the enforcement of impartial laws, shall amply protect the persons and property of those for whose protection and defense this bureau is set.

"I saw with my own eyes our fellow-soldiers, yet clad in the uniform of their country's Army, fresh from their muster out of service, who within the last ten days were the victims of fiendish atrocity from the hands of their former masters in Kentucky. These returned soldiers had been to their old homes for their wives and children, and had for this offense been knocked down, whipped, and horribly bruised, and threatened with shooting, should they ever dare to set their feet on the premises of the old master again and intimate that their families were free."

On the 14th of February General Fisk writes to the Commissioner of the Bureau as follows:

"GENERAL: Kentucky.—I regret that I am unable to report the bureau affairs progressing as smoothly in Kentucky as in Tennessee.

"The freedmen of the State are very generally disposed to enter into labor contracts for wages or a share of the crop, and most of them prefer remaining in their own State to emigration elsewhere. On the part of a large majority of the whites I believe there is an honest desire to adjust on a fair basis the new relations arising from the abolition of slavery, but the bureau is not a popular institution with them. They regard its presence among them as unauthorized—denounce its officials as usurpers and despots, and clamor for its immediate removal from the State.

"In obedience to orders, immediately upon the ratification of the constitutional amendment forever abolishing and prohibiting slavery, I extended over the more than two hundred thousand freedmen of Kentucky the supervision of this bureau, and appointed agents in a few counties only. Superintendents were selected from the citizens, and appointed upon the recommendations of the best men I could consult. The Kentucky Legislature has, by numerous resolutions, called upon Government to remove the bureau from the State; propositions to forever disqualify any citizen from holding an office in the State who might act as an agent of this bureau, were introduced and discussed. The official State paper (Louisville Democrat) has declared that, by the ratification of the constitutional amendment, the slavery question has become more unsettled than ever, and many of its readers, believing its doctrines, practice accordingly, and still hold freedmen as slaves. These influences in opposition to freedom have rendered it difficult to conduct the bureau affairs in Kentucky with that harmony and efficiency which have elsewhere produced good results.

"More than twenty-five thousand colored men of Kentucky have been soldiers in the Army of the Union. Many of them were enlisted against the wishes of their masters, and now, after having faithfully served their country, and been honorably mustered out of the service, and return to their old homes, they are not met with joyous welcome and grateful words for their devotion to the Union, but in many instances are scourged, beaten, shot at, and driven from their homes and families. Their arms are taken from them by the civil authorities and confiscated for the benefit of the Commonwealth. The Union soldier is fined for bearing arms. Thus the right of the people to keep and bear arms as provided in the Constitution is infringed, and the Government for whose protection and preservation these soldiers have fought is denounced as meddlesome and despotic when through its agents it undertakes to protect its citizens in a constitutional right. Kentuckians who followed the fortunes of John Morgan, and did all in their power to destroy the nation, go loaded down with pistols and knives, and are selected as candidates for high positions of honor and trust in the State. The loyal soldier is arrested and punished for bringing into the State the arms he has borne in battle for his country.

"That you may have a bird's-eye view of the protection afforded the freedmen of Kentucky by the civil law and authorities, I have the honor to invite your attention to the following extracts from communications received from our correspondents in that State.

"C. P. Oyler, of Covington, writes as follows:

"Jordan Finney and family (freedmen) lived in Walton, Kentucky; they owned a comfortable home. Two of the daughters were wives of colored soldiers, and lived with him. Returned rebel soldiers hereinafter named combined to drive this family from the State. They attacked the house three times, abused the women and children, destroyed all their clothing, bedding, and furniture to the value of $500, and finally drove them from their homes. The names of the perpetrators, so far as known, are Allen Arnold, John Arnold, Franklin Yowell, Woodford Fry, L. Snow, and Robert Edwards; all live in Walton, Kentucky. An attempt was made to bring these parties to justice, but it failed, as colored testimony could not be received. This same man Finney has a daughter held as a slave by Mr. Widen Sheet, of Boone county, whom he values at $1,000. Sixteen armed men resisted Mr. Finney and an expressman when they went for the girl, and beat them cruelly with clubs and stones."

"An old colored man named Baxter was shot and killed by James Roberts for refusing to let Roberts in his house. The civil authorities will neither arrest nor punish said Roberts, as there is no testimony except of colored persons. (Reported by Thomas Rice, Richmond, Kentucky.)

"Lindsay Taylor, of Richmond, stabbed a negro on the 30th of January, for no cause save that the negro did not wish Lindsay to search his house. The civil authorities tried Taylor and acquitted him. (Reported by Thomas Rice, superintendent.)

"L. L. Pinkerton, superintendent of Fayette county, at Lexington, reports that, 'in his and the opinion of all whom he has consulted, the freedmen cannot receive their just rights without a considerable military force.'

"C. P. Oyler, Covington, writes: 'The civil officers, after the late action of the Kentucky Legislature in regard to the Freedmen's Bureau, refused to cooperate with me, and manifest a disposition to drive the bureau out of the State. It will be impossible to secure to freedmen their just rights without the aid of a military force. Colored people are driven from their homes and their houses burned.'

"William Goodloe writes: 'The counties of Boyle, Lincoln, and Mercer are infested with guerrilla bands. Outrages are mostly committed upon colored persons. The evidence of colored persons is not taken in court. I am powerless to accomplish anything without soldiers.'

Peter Branford, a returned colored soldier, in Mercer county, was shot by James Poore, a white man, without cause or provocation.

Judge Samuel A. Spencer, of Green county, writes: 'A great many colored men are beaten, their lives threatened, and they refused the privilege of returning home because they have been in the Army. I cannot accept the agency on account of the action of the Kentucky Legislature.'

"E. P. Ashcraft, of Meade county, writes: 'Richard, William, Jesse, and John Shacklett and Martin Taylor, returned rebel soldiers, have on different occasions attacked negroes with fire-arms, and say they intend no d—d niggers shall live on this side the Ohio. The civil authorities are powerless.'

"R. W. Thing, of Warren county, writes: 'An old negro was killed by gun-shot while attempting to run from a white boy eighteen years of age, to escape a whipping.'

"A freedman was attacked in his cabin and shot. He and his wife ran to the woods, with bullets flying thick and fast around them from five or six revolvers, the woman escaping with her life by tearing off her chemise while running, thereby presenting a darker-colored mark."

"A woman was stabbed by a white woman in the neck, the knife penetrating the windpipe, for giving water to a Union soldier in a tumbler."

"A woman and her son were horribly cut and mangled with the lash and then hung by the neck until so nearly dead that water had to be thrown in their faces to revive them to make them acknowledge that they had set a house on fire."

"A woman received a severe cut in the head from a club in the hands of a man who drove her from her home because her husband had joined the Army."

"There are several cases of robbery of colored persons by returned rebels in uniform, in Russellville, Kentucky. The town marshal takes all arms from returned colored soldiers, and is very prompt in shooting the blacks whenever an opportunity occurs."

"I have a case in hand to-day where a white man knocked down an old man eighty years of age because he asked for and urged the necessity of his pay for cutting eight cords of wood."

"There has been a large number of cases of women and children being driven from home on account of their husbands enlisting."

"It is dangerous for colored people to go into Logan, Todd, Barren, and the north part of Warren counties after their children."

"A freedman's wife left her former master and came to live with him, (her husband.) She was followed and shot at."

"A furloughed soldier of the twelfth United States colored artillery was murdered at Auburn, Kentucky, while sitting on his bed. The civil authorities do nothing in the case."

"An old freedman in Allen county, Kentucky, was shot and killed because he would not allow himself to be whipped by a young man."

"Major Lawrence, of the seventeenth Kentucky cavalry, reports that a negro was shot in one of the streets of Russellville last night. No cause whatever for it. Several negroes came to me to know what they should do, saying they had been robbed by a party of men wearing the Confederate States uniform. The judges and justices of the peace in almost every instance are rebels of very strong prejudices, who will not even take notice of the most hideous outrages, and if a case is turned over to them they will not administer justice. The action of the courts in southern Kentucky indicates that the day is far distant when a negro can secure justice at the hands of the civil law."

"In Grant county a band of outlaws, styling themselves 'moderators,' made an attack upon the colored citizens for the purpose of driving them from the State. They went late in the night to their homes, took them from their beds, stripped and whipped them until they were unable to walk."

"Colonel William P. Thomasson, of Louisville, Kentucky, writes that 'outrages and wrongs upon freedmen are numerous, especially upon returned colored soldiers. A few nights since a colored soldier just mustered out, with his money in his pocket and a new suit of clothes on his back, was waiting for the cars at Deposit station, a few miles from Louisville; four or five young rowdies of the place set upon him to rob him. He was a light-colored man, and one of the robbers said to his fellows, "He is a white man; let him alone." A dispute arose as to his color, and he was taken into a grocery, a lamp was lit, and the question of his color settled. He was then robbed of his money, arms, and clothing, was stripped to his shirt, and told to run. He did run, and was shot at while escaping, and the shot took effect in his hand.

"I am in daily receipt of similar reports from our superintendents, judges, sheriffs, and military officers. Some of the writers dare not be known as giving this information, fearing assassination as the consequence.

"For narrating at a freedmen's commission anniversary meeting in Cincinnati, on the 18th ultimo, what I had myself seen of brutalities in the 'Blue Grass,' I have been denounced in the Kentucky Legislature as a liar and slanderer. A committee has been appointed to investigate the matter. I have furnished them the names of witnesses, and requested that their powers be enlarged, and they authorized to investigate the condition of the freedmen throughout the State; but I have good reason for believing that the committee will simply make a report that General Fisk is a great liar, and should be removed from office, &c. It is well to remember that a more select number of vindictive, pro-slavery, rebellious legislators cannot be found than the majority of the Kentucky Legislature. The President of the United States was denounced in the Senate as a worse traitor than Jefferson Davis, and that, too, before the bureau tempest had reached them.

"The entire opposition is political, a warfare waged against loyalty, freedom, and justice.

"I have endeavored to administer the affairs of the bureau in Kentucky precisely as in Tennessee; have studied to be conciliatory in every particular, and not to interfere in the least with the civil affairs of the State, except my duties and orders imperatively demanded it. As yet, the Legislature have enacted no laws securing impartial liberty and right, and I very much fear they will not at this session. The late letter of Major General Palmer, on Kentucky affairs, is truthful and candid. I wish her good people would heed his counsel and her lawmakers follow his wise suggestions.

"There are many old, infirm, and sick, and orphans in Kentucky who have been thrown upon the Government for support. Rations were issued to this class in December at a cost of $4,993 56, eightfold the cost of sustaining the same class of persons in Tennessee the same month. In the latter State the people have much more generously treated the unfortunate freedmen, especially the families of fallen soldiers, than have the Kentuckians; hence the cause of the increased expense to the Government of providing for the destitute freedmen. Every effort is being made to secure homes for the widows and orphans in other States. A large number have been kindly received and provided for in Ohio and Indiana. The Western Freedmen's Aid Commission have rendered me valuable service in locating this class in comfortable permanent homes.

"In making this extended report of Kentucky affairs I wish nothing to 'extenuate or ought set down in malice.' It is best that you understand the case fully. I rejoice that there are so many persons in the State who treat the freedmen justly and generously. Outlaws in different sections of the State, encouraged by the pro-slavery press, which daily denounces the Government and its officials, make brutal attacks and raids upon the freedmen, who are defenseless, for the civil-law officers disarm the colored man and hand him over to armed marauders. In neither Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, nor Arkansas, where I have had an opportunity of observation, does there such a fiendish spirit prevail as in some portions of Kentucky. I trust that ere long the better portion of the people will rise in their indignation and demand that justice be done to all the citizens of the State.

"It has fallen to my lot to officially stand by the death-bed of slavery in the United States. Kentucky's throes are but the expiring agonies of the great barbarism.

"I trust the Government will insist upon strict justice for every man, woman, and child who through the Red sea of civil strife has marched from slavery to freedom.

"I will try to do my whole duty, regardless of denunciations, jeers, and threats of assassination. I will give cheerful heed to your admonitions and counsels.

"While I remain in this position I desire the power to protect the poor, the weak, and the ignorant, who confidently look to this bureau for the protection which the State, made rich by their unrequited toil, yet fails to afford them."

Brigadier General Sprague, assistant commissioner for Arkansas, on the 10th of January, 1866, writes to the Commissioner:

"I see by the act of Congress organizing the bureau that its existence is limited to one year after the war. If it should not be extended, there is no hope for the freedmen of Arkansas, Texas, and that portion of the South remote from railroads and telegraphs. They will be starved, murdered, or forced into a condition more horrible than the worst stages of slavery. Our people's wrath over defeat would be poured upon the heads of the helpless ones once their slaves. I say this sorrowfully of our people, yet I know it is but too true—their prejudices give way slowly. By extending the existence of the bureau, what education and thought failed to do might be supplied by an influx of liberal-minded people.

"This is the language of a citizen whose intelligence and opportunities for judging entitle his statements to consideration. His statements are corroborated by all the testimony that reaches me from other parts of the State, and what is said of the southwestern portion is in the main true of the whole State.

I give it as my deliberate opinion that if the military was withdrawn from the State not a school for colored children would be allowed within its borders, and I doubt if an unspoken Union man would be allowed to remain. In this sparsely settled and isolated country the process of 'reconstruction' will necessarily be slow, and I am sorry to add that the influence and example of some of the men who have received special pardon was much better before their pardon than since, yet there is a perceptible improvement in the temper and sentiment of the people at large."

Inspector General William E. Strong, in his report of action and observation in Texas, says:

"In the interior of the State, one or two hundred miles from the prominent cities, away from the influence of Federal troops and Federal bayonets, at points where our Army has never penetrated, and where the citizens have but little fear of arrest and punishment for crimes committed, I assure you there is a fearful state of things. The freedmen are in a worse condition than they ever were as slaves. When they were held in bondage they were, as a rule, treated well; cases of extreme cruelty were very rare; it was for the interest of the master to take care of them, and not to ill-treat them. Now it is quite different; they have no interest in them, and seem to take every opportunity to vent their rage and hatred upon the blacks. They are frequently beaten unmercifully, and shot down like wild beasts, without any provocation, followed with hounds, and maltreated in every possible way. It is the same old story of cruelty, only there is more of it in Texas than any southern State that I have visited. I could cite many cases of cruelty that came under my own observation if it were necessary to do so. The planters generally seemed discouraged, and insisted that the system of free labor would never answer; that the negroes were idle and worthless, and showed no disposition to work, and were wandering about the country utterly demoralized, and were plundering and stealing indiscriminately from the citizens.

"It was also generally reported by the white people that the freedmen failed wholly to fulfill their contracts, and that when they were needed most to save the cotton crop, they would stop their work and leave them without any cause whatever. After a careful investigation, I do not find these charges against the freedmen to be wholly true.

"The entire crop raised in Texas—cotton, corn, sugar, and wheat—was gathered and saved by the 1st of December. Most assuredly no white man in Texas had anything to do with gathering the crops, except perhaps to look on and give orders. Who did the work? The freedmen, I am well convinced, had something to do with it; and yet there is a fierce murmur of complaint against them everywhere that they are lazy and insolent, and that there is no hope for a better condition of affairs unless they can be permitted to resort to the overseer's whip, and hounds.

"Two thirds of the freedmen in the section of country which I traveled over have never received one cent of wages since they were declared free. A few of them were promised something at the end of the year, but instances of prompt payment of wages are very rare. Not one in ten would have received any compensation for the labor performed during the year 1865 had it not been for the rigorous measures resorted to by Colonel De Grass, provost marshal general of the district of Houston, who sends into the interior frequently two hundred miles and arrests the parties who have been guilty of cruelty to the freed people, and where they have violated their contracts with them compels them to make fair and equitable settlements. Colonel De Grass has a small command of cavalry under his control, and he keeps it in motion constantly through the country, searching for parties who have murdered or maltreated the freedmen. I cannot speak too highly of the course pursued by the colonel. He displays the same earnestness of purpose and fearlessness in the discharge of his duty that he did in the old army of the Tennessee, and although his life has been threatened by the chivalric citizens of the country, yet he is not deterred by their threats from discharging his duty as he understands it. He is a true friend of the black people, and will not see them ill-used. I know that some of the lessons which he has taught the citizens in the vicinity of Houston will not soon be forgotten.

"I saw freedmen east of the Trinity river who did not know that they were free until I told them. There had been vague rumors circulated among them that they were to be free on Christmas day, and that on New Year's there was to be a grand division of all the property, and that one half was to be given to the black people."

In closing his report, General Strong says:

"In order to correct abuses and regulate the labor system thoroughly throughout the country General Gregory should have fifty good officers to assist; and if these could be placed on duty at the principal villages in the interior, for three hundred and fifty miles north of the coast, and a small force of troops sent with each assistant to enforce law and order, it would be but a short time before a decided improvement would be observed.

"It is the opinion of every staunch Union man with whom I conversed, and with nearly every officer on duty in the State, that if the United States troops were removed from Texas no northern man, nor any person who had ever expressed any love for northern institutions or for the Government of the United States, could remain with safety, and the condition of the freed people would be worse beyond comparison than it was before the war and when they were held in bondage."

Brigadier General Tillson, acting assistant commissioner for Georgia, writes from Augusta under date January 15, 1866, as follows:

"In almost every case, as heretofore reported, the withdrawal of troops has been followed by outrages on the freed people; their school-houses have been burned, their teachers driven off or threatened with death, and the freed people by fraud, and even by violence, made to enter into unjust and fraudulent contracts. The responsible and educated classes are ashamed of these outrages, and loudly and justly claim that they should not all be judged by the people who are mean and cruel enough to practice these wrongs; but the convictions of the former never take form in action—seldom in a manly, open protest. It requires the most careful nursing and culture to keep alive even a show of justice toward the freed people.

"Nearly all the females and young men, and all the blacklegs and rowdies, are open and defiant in their expression of hate for Yankees and negroes. The simple truth is, that the only public opinion which makes itself felt is as bitter and malignant as ever.

"These are the facts, and any theory or policy which disregards or ignores them is of little account, no matter by whom advocated or sustained. Unless we keep a firm, just, kind hand upon these people, all our past labor will be thrown away.

"A large number of troops is not required; but the State is one of the largest, and unless small garrisons are kept at many points, most unfortunate results will certainly follow; labor will be insecure and untrustworthy, and industrial operations will be sadly interfered with. Some of the unpleasant consequences to be anticipated are already exhibiting themselves; as, for instance, the recent attack on the garrison at Brunswick.

"The people who have something to lose begin to appreciate the insecurity which follows the withdrawal of garrisons, and are asking to have them sent back.

"The highest and best interests of the State, as well as of the freed people, require an addition to the force now in the department."

Brigadier General C. H. Howard, specially appointed to examine into the condition of affairs in Georgia and Florida, in his report dated at Charleston, December 30, 1865, states at the close of his carefully prepared communication to the Commissioner of the bureau, as follows:

"As the result of this tour I beg leave to submit the following general considerations:

"I. Agencies of the United States Government, of some sort, similar to the existing bureau agencies, are for the present indispensable in every part of the two States visited.

"1. Great suffering and starvation would ensue among the refugees and freedmen in some sections were all Government aid withdrawn.

"2. Public sentiment is such that even should the laws be made impartial the negro could not obtain redress for wrongs done him in person or property.

"3. There seems to be a moral incapacity with the white residents to treat him fairly in the ordinary transactions of business, as, exempli gratia, in making contracts. His own inexperience in such things, therefore, renders necessary some agency to guard his interests.

"4. Existing theories concerning the education of laborers and the prejudice against the blacks are such as absolutely to prevent the establishment of schools for the freedmen, even though the expenses be paid by the benevolent associations of the North; and the many successful schools now in operation would be broken up in most places on the withdrawal of the Government agencies. The same general observations will apply to all missionary work by northern agents; and from special inquiry and investigation of this subject I am convinced that very little in the way of moral and religious instruction for the freed people is to be expected at present from the members and ministers of the southern churches. On the other hand, it is for the interest of the whites for the agencies to retrain, and the better class of thinking men expressed themselves unhesitatingly in favor of it.

"(1.) The prevailing want of confidence on the part of the freedmen in those who have been slaveholders makes it necessary to have a third party (and a United States official is better than any other) to induce the freedmen to enter into contracts. Many of the white residents told me that no contracts would have been effected but for the bureau officers.

"(2.) Such agents are needed often to secure the fulfillment of contracts on the part of the freedmen, both in explaining the exact meaning and force of the contract and enforcing it by different motives and means.

"(3.) For the protection of the whites against any hostile combinations of the blacks. This will be needed as long as the present public sentiment of the whites continues, insuring a corresponding distrust and hostility on the part of the blacks. Our agents have done much to allay such ill-feeling; but however unreasoning and ignorant the freedmen may be in any community, and however much their number may predominate over the resident whites, they will generally heed and be governed by the advice of United States officials.

"II. In order adequately to protect the persons and property of the freedmen, and promote their education, as well as for the proper regulation of labor for the benefit of all concerned, the present number of agents should be increased.

"III. United States troops are at present absolutely necessary as auxiliary to the agents.

"1. There is no other means of executing orders and insuring justice to the freedmen.

"2. In many sections United States agents would not be tolerated unless backed by military force. I was assured by respectable and influential residents of the country in some sections, that no northern man could reside there were it not for the presence of the bayonet, and that, in their opinion, such would be the case for ten years to come. I am not convinced of the truth of this statement, yet, with my own observation, I am led to conclude,

"3. That the troops should remain for protection of northern residents and to encourage emigration.

"4. As desired by the better part of the whites, to maintain good order and peace.

"5. Wherever United States troops are withdrawn a militia organization at once springs into life, which invariably tends to disturbances between whites and blacks, and to the latter is, I am convinced, an unmixed evil."

General Gregory, in writing from Galveston, Texas, December 9, 1865, says:

"In some portions of the State, and especially in the case where our troops have not been quartered, freedmen are restrained from their liberty, and slavery virtually exists the same as though the old system of oppression was still in force. The freedmen do not understand their true status, and their former masters, although acknowledging them to be free, practically deny the truth by their acts. With this class of men (and a few of the editors who still continue to misrepresent the object for which this bureau was instituted) we have more difficulty than any other as they refuse to pay the laborer his hire, and it seems almost impossible for them to deal justly and honestly with him. This is owing, perhaps, to the fact that heretofore they have had his labor without compensating him therefor. In this respect, however, there are evidences of improvement, and I trust that in the future there will be less cause for complaint on this account. They must pay them, if they expect to employ laborers worthy of their hire."

"Owing to the vast extent of territory embraced in my district, I find great difficulty in procuring a sufficient number of officers who can render me that assistance, as sub-assistant commissioners, which is necessary to a proper discharge of my official duties. But few, comparatively, feel and manifest that interest in the advancement of the freedmen that they should."

And now, Mr. Speaker, I present some more recent proof, drawn from the official records of the bureau.

Extracts from a report of Brevet Major G. B. Carse, dated Lexington, Virginia, March 18, 1866:

"I have the honor to report that during the month of February I investigated upward of fifty cases, of which many were of considerable importance. Some of assaults made upon the freedmen, others in regard to non-payment of wages for services rendered, &c.

"The great difficulty seems to be caused by the whites not being willing to pay for the labor after they have agreed to do so.

"I find some cases in which the former owners of these people have taken the whole amount of last year's hire from the parties to whom they hired their slaves during the hiring season of 1864 and 1865. In all cases where I have found this to be the case I have ordered that payment be made to the freedmen from the 10th day of April, 1865, at the same rates for which they were hired previous to the surrender. Many of the contracts at that time, i. e., previous to the surrender, were made payable in grain, and I have invariably caused grain to be paid or its equivalent.

"An ex-member of the Virginia State Legislature drew half of last year's hire for one of his slaves from a man named Teaford, to whom he had hired his slave previous to the surrender, and he has tried to get the balance, but the case was brought to my notice, and I have ordered Mr. Frazier (ex-member of the Virginia Legislature) to pay back the grain taken by him as hire from the 10th of April until the 1st of July, and also ordered Mr. Teaford to pay the freedman the full amount of grain due from the 1st of July until the time the freedman in question ceased to work for him.

"I have had a case reported to me in which a colored man was struck thirty-nine lashes by his former owner because he got an order or statement from General Darall last June and took it to his master to prove that he was a free man. I will report the facts in the case as soon as I have heard them from both parties.

"I am more inclined to think the people of the surrounding country are less inclined to do justice to the freedmen than I was when I arrived here."

"Unless there is a better disposition on the part of the citizens and their sons, and the cadets and students, I will have to send for troops. It seems impossible for these people to understand that the laws of the United States are supreme here. They seem to think nothing should occur or be said that does not accord with their ideas of right and wrong, and that an officer of the Government is a thing only to be tolerated."

"There does not seem to be any disposition on the part of the whites to help the aged and infirm freedmen."

An official letter of Colonel E. Whittlesey, of date March 23, 1866, speaking of North Carolina, says:

"In this connection I may add that under my Circular No. 1, several cases of petty larceny have been tried by civil courts, and the old barbarous punishment of whipping been inflicted. I have brought the matter before the department commander, and am awaiting his action.

"I am satisfied that the negro has very little chance of getting his due before the civil courts of North Carolina at present. Still it is desirable to transfer jurisdiction to them as soon as possible."

Extract from report of J. W. Alford, inspector of finances and schools, dated March 17, 1866, Washington, District of Columbia:

"On my route from Richmond to Washington I fell in with a striking instance of the persecution of loyal men in the South. A company of seventy-five Quakers, old people, men, women, and little children, were on the train, fleeing from Randolph county, North Carolina, to homes they expected to find in the more quiet West. One hundred and twenty-five of their number, as they told me, were to follow them. They had been settlers in that county for many years; peaceable and prosperous. But their young men when conscripted into the rebel army refused to go, and fled as refugees to the mountains. Now, as they come back to peaceful employments the returned rebels persecute the whole community in every possible way, disturbing their social comfort, vexing them with petty lawsuits, threatening violence, and in some cases inflicting it. Their proverbial patience had become so exhausted and the fears of their women and children so excited that they could endure it no longer. Farms and pleasant homes could not be sold under such circumstances, but were abandoned, and with the little money saved by their frugality they hope to reach their destination in the State of Indiana.

"The whole story of this honest, simple-hearted people was very touching, enlisting deeply the sympathy of their fellow-travelers. Their means were evidently very scanty and their hearts were sorrowful. Aged women, unaccustomed to hardship, spent the night, from Aquia creek, on the deck floor of the crowded steamer, while little babes wailed themselves to slumber in the arms of mothers without their accustomed nourishment.

"There can be no mistake in such a case. These staid, excellent people have not left their chosen and long-cherished homes without sufficient reason."

NORTH CAROLINA.

From the general report for the month of February, 1866, of Colonel E. Whittlesey, assistant commissioner, the following paragraphs are extracted:

"The instances of petty annoyance and interference with the industry and enterprise of freedmen who are trying to do well are numerous. Their horses and mules are stolen, their fences torn down, their pigs killed, their arms taken away."

"The apprenticeship of children has given rise to many abuses and hardships. In some instances the civil authorities have undertaken to execute articles of indenture. At a single session of the county court in Sampson county several hundreds, it is reported, were 'bound out' to their former masters, in many instances the older children only being selected for this service, leaving the young children to be supported by their parents. I have directed the assistant superintendent of that county to proclaim all such indentures as are contrary to the regulations of this bureau null and void."

"The freedmen are not yet free from apprehension that their liberty will prove but a dream. They see so much ill-feeling exhibited toward them and hear so often that they are an inferior race and must always expect to be, that they are afraid to trust the whites. Could they be sure of full protection everywhere they would exert themselves more earnestly to acquire property and to improve their condition. Even now, with all the discouragements under which they labor, there are many cheering signs of progress."

SOUTH CAROLINA.

In a report made on the 28th of February, 1866, by Lieutenant Colonel John Deveraux, acting sub-assistant commissioner for Edgefield district, to Brevet Major General R. K. Scott, assistant commissioner, it is stated as follows:

"1. The total military force in Edgefield district is nineteen enlisted men of the twenty-fifth Ohio Veteran volunteers, commanded by a lieutenant, seven men of which force are stationed at Edgefield Court-house and twelve at Hamburg. Edgefield being one of the largest and most unruly districts in the State, this small force is entirely inadequate to exact the proper respect for the United States authorities.

"2. There are two organized bands of outlaws, one consisting of eight men and the other of thirteen men, led by an ex-confederate major named Coleman, at present raiding this district and committing with impunity the most fiendish outrages on Union men and negroes. They have murdered a number of negroes and one white man without provocation, and robbed and driven from their homes several northern men who have property here. Coleman, the leader, is a desperate character; he has exhibited to several persons whom I saw, eight ears cut from colored persons; he carries them in an envelope and shows them as trophies."

"It is my decided opinion that nothing will restore the supremacy of the laws and render the lives of Union men or freedmen safe in this part of the country but the hunting down and extermination of these desperadoes by a respectable force of cavalry, as they are mounted in the best manner and belong to the class mis-called (in the South) gentlemen, and no doubt are harbored and kept well posted by many of the inhabitants."

From an official brief (made up from reports received from the acting sub-assistant commissioners and agents of the bureau in South Carolina) transmitted on the 16th instant by Brevet Major General R. K. Scott, to the Commissioner, the following extracts are taken:

COLLSTON DISTRICT.

"Here a planter had a man, his wife, and two boys under contract. They taking the small-pox through being placed in a house where the disease had prevailed, the planter sent them in a rain storm two miles into the woods, and then left them without food or clothing to die, although at the time he was in debt to them. They remained in the woods three weeks in great suffering until they were accidentally discovered by a colored man, who took them home and provided for them."

NEWBERRY DISTRICT.

"The freedmen are subjected to barbarous treatment by a band of outlaws. In one instance two freedwomen were taken from their houses, ravished, and otherwise maltreated. It is believed that regularly organized bands of outlaws infest some portions of the country for the express purpose of persecuting the freedmen. Their operations being carried on at a distance from the garrisons, which are infantry, it is very difficult to detect and arrest them, and the freedmen seldom dare to complain for fear of greater cruelties."

"A letter just received from the post commander at Greenville Court-house, shows a horrible state of affairs in that district. 'With but few exceptions, and those due to the presence of the United States troops, the freedmen were turned off the plantations without pay for last year's work. The contracts for this year show a disposition on the part of the planters to reduce wages to the lowest possible figure, and in very many cases to obtain, by deceit, the services of freedmen on terms far worse than nothing.'

"Cruelty and even death of freedmen at the hands of white civilians, are not uncommon occurrences. One party boasted to prominent men of the district that he had shot twenty-eight freedmen since 'the surrender' and offered his services to kill others if there were any particularly offensive to the community. 'One boy coming back to the plantation after having been away with United States troops, was in the presence of the other freedmen of the place deliberately shot, but he being only wounded thereby, a rope was placed round his neck when he was choked until dead.'

GEORGIA.

From a letter received February 7, 1866, by the Commissioner from General Tillson, assistant commissioner, the following paragraphs are extracted:

"The people of the State, who generally at first were strongly opposed to giving reasonable wages, influenced by the judicious course of the bureau, are exhibiting a readiness to pay the freed people fair wages. Very many say that their prospects were never so good before, and that the freed people were doing admirably. 'Whenever it could be brought to bear on such people (i. e., planters complained of in remote parts of the State) without an exception, the kind, conciliatory, but immovably firm course pursued by the bureau has induced them to change their intentions and act in a just and sensible manner.'

FLORIDA.

Accompanying Colonel Osborne's (assistant commissioner) report of the condition of freedmen's affairs in Florida, for the month of February, is a report from Lieutenant Quentin, sub-assistant commissioner in charge of bureau affairs for the counties of Madison, Taylor, and La Fayette. From the record of Lieutenant Quentin's report the following is extracted:

"This officer makes a generally favorable report of the condition and disposition of the freed people, and states that the better class of whites seem to be very well disposed toward the freedmen, although the lower class of whites are found to be quarrelsome toward their laborers, as well as abusive and greedy."

"There is so wide a difference between employer and employé in respect to their ability to transact ordinary business and to comprehend the force of a contract, and so great a desire rapidly to repair losses and regain fortunes, and withal so little desire on the part of employers to see the freedmen rise in any respect, that unless an enlarged benevolence is to govern in the settlements at the close of the year, little will have been accomplished for the colored man except to arouse him from a not too trusting confidence to an unpleasant and unconquerable suspicion."

LOUISIANA.

From a report made March 9, 1866, to Brevet Major General Baird, assistant commissioner, by James Cromie, captain and brevet major twelfth Veteran Reserve corps:

"I would also respectfully report that the number of colored persons in this (Calcasieu) parish before the passage of the ordinance of secession in this State was sixteen hundred, and from the information which I have received I believe there are at the present time twelve hundred. There are some white inhabitants who still insist upon holding these freedmen in their former state of bondage. Those citizens remaining in Lake Charles and vicinity desire very much to have an agent of the bureau sent to them in order to regulate the employment of freedmen, and also in regard to the various question constantly arising among them under the new order of affairs connected with the emancipation of their former slaves."

TEXAS.

From the report of Brevet Brigadier General E. M. Gregory, assistant commissioner, of date February 28, 1866:

"I have the honor to report that from all sources information comes of encouraging results from the efforts of this bureau. Complaints are few, and its beneficent results frequently and frankly acknowledged. Fault-finding and accusation come only from that class of men who are but slowly learning to respect law, justice, and the rights of man, and who sullenly chafe under the restraints of a Government that sets metes and bounds to their unbridled wills."

"There are no indications of an increase of loyal sentiment in the State, though there is a visible abatement in the number and harshness of those cases of outrage and maltreatment coming under the cognizance of the bureau."

MISSISSIPPI.

The following are extracts from a report submitted January 12, 1866, to Colonel Samuel Thomas, assistant commissioner, by Captain J. H. Matthews, sub-assistant commissioner, stationed at Magnolia, Mississippi:

"On the 15th day of December, 1865, a negro reported at my office and informed me that his former master, Mr. Felix Allen, of Pike county, had sent him into Amite county, Mississippi, on business, and that he would call and see me on his return. On the ensuing day he returned to my office, most shamefully beaten, and stated that after he had performed his mission with Mr. Allen's son-in-law, he lodged for the night in the quarters on the place by direction of Mr. Allen's son-in-law; that while in bed about eleven o'clock p. m. some six or seven white men came and burst into the house, and with pistols drawn asked him what he was doing there, when he informed them that he was sent there by Mr. Allen, his master, and that if they would go with him to the white folks' house he would prove his statement; but 'no,' they told him, 'we don't care a damn for that, we want you to go with us.' When they had taken this man about a mile they were met by about fifty armed mounted men (supposed to be militia, and commanded by a man they called 'lieutenant') who ordered them to take him (the negro) off from the road and give him a flogging; and when they had proceeded about fifty yards from the road they threw him down and six or seven of them jumped into his face and bosom with their heels, stamping and kicking him."

"When this old negro (he was apparently sixty or sixty-five years old) returned to my office, he presented a most frightful appearance, his breast bone broken, and he spitting blood."

"I respectfully invite your attention to a murder committed by one John H. McGee, some nine months since, which would challenge the world for an equal in studied brutality, which was reported to me some time since, but for want of facts I did not feel warranted in reporting before. The negro was murdered, beheaded, skinned, and his skin nailed to the barn. Should this affair be investigated, I would refer you to Mr. Bunkly, at Bunkly's Ferry, who can give the names of parties knowing to the facts."

"Should they (the freedmen) remain where they are, under existing circumstances, their condition will not only be rendered worse than slaves, but the safety for the lives and the hopes for the future of this unfortunate race will depart forever."

The following report is dated Washington, March 27, 1866, from the assistant commissioner, General C. H. Howard, to Major General O. O. Howard, concerning Maryland:

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following partial report, in compliance with your circular dated March 2, 1866, concerning the status of the freedmen in Maryland:

Statute discriminations against the negroes on account of color.

1. No colored witness can testify in cases involving conflicting interests between white and black.

2. A negro convicted of an offense the punishment of which if committed by a white man would be confinement in the penitentiary, may be at the discretion of the court sentenced to receive not exceeding forty lashes.

3. A negro hiring to a white man for a term and refusing to enter his service, but hiring himself to another, unless it appear that his wages would be insecure, or that he received improper treatment from the first, two fifths of his wages in the hands of his second employer shall accrue as a lien to the first.

4. For a negro to belong to any secret society is a felony—the punishment a fine of fifty dollars.

5. No education of colored apprentices is required. (Practically, too, the provision of the law requiring that the parents of children shall be summoned, and their consent to the indenture obtained, or that their inability to provide for their children is shown, is in a majority of cases ignored.)

6. In Anne Arundel and Somerset counties, license to deal in merchandise cannot be obtained by a negro, unless recommended by a certain number of respectable freeholders. No white person, the partner of a negro, shall be granted a license; and if a white man employ a colored clerk, the penalty is fifty dollars.

7. In Charles county, no negro shall have or use any sail or row boat without license from a justice of the peace.

8. In Kent and Queen Anne counties, "free negroes" that leave the counties and return shall be punished by fine and imprisonment.

9. In Prince George county, (fifth district,) negroes are not to assemble under pretense of public worship, except on certain days named in the statute, and generally it appears that the organic law of the State is not such as to prevent discrimination against the rights of the negro, by county or other local authorities. A State official writes from Annapolis, February 14, 1866, as follows: "The colored people have no protection; the white rowdies pick a chance when no white person is about to maltreat the freedmen, and because the colored people cannot testify against them, the rowdies go free. Where the negro is concerned it is very difficult to find a jury to convict the aggressor if he be a white person. I think the jurisdiction of the bureau should be extended to Maryland as soon as possible."

At the last sitting of the grand jury in Annapolis a magistrate was indicted for putting a white man who had assaulted and beaten a colored woman under bonds to keep the peace, on the complaint and affidavit of the woman, who came with the scars of the beating upon her person. At the same place, in November, 1865, a colored woman was sentenced to be sold for two years for persuading her children to leave their former master, to whom they were apprenticed. The children had secured places to work, and their wages for the year would have amounted to $400.

In Prince George county a colored man named Jordan Diggs had four of his children taken from him and bound by his old master, against his consent and protest. The names of the children were included in a contract to labor for the present year, the wages amounting to $500.

January 17, 1866, Charlotte Turner, colored, makes affidavit that William Preston, of Howard county, holds her children, Frank and Charles, aged respectively ten and nine years, illegally and against her consent.

February 5, 1866, Amos Hunt, a white resident of Washington, testifies that on the 3d of the same month he accompanied Sandy Henson, colored, to Surritt's, in Prince George county, to visit his (Henson's) daughter; that on his arrival at the place Henson was met by threats of violence and death by the man with whom his daughter is living, and was compelled to return without seeing her.

Richard Butler, colored, of St. Mary's county, testifies that he was assaulted and beaten without cause by one John A. Lloyd. Robert Avery, a constable, was present, and did not interfere to protect him or preserve the peace.

February 7, 1866, Essex Barbour, colored, late a soldier in the thirtieth regiment United States colored troops, makes affidavit that on the 3d of the same month he was assaulted and beaten at Chaptico, St. Mary's county, by four white men, one of whom is a returned rebel soldier, and makes it his business to injure colored people, more especially colored soldiers, at all times and places. "I have defended the country in the field, and most respectfully request that I may be protected at home."

February 17, 1866, Richard Spenke, colored, of St. Mary's county, complains of his employer, who, on the 16th of that month, assaulted and beat him seriously.

March 19, 1866, Maria Hutchinson, colored, complains and testifies that at Nottingham, Prince George county, on the 9th instant, her husband, Henry Hutchinson, late a colored soldier, was assaulted and seriously beaten by several white men; that her husband gave no cause of offense except asking one of the men if he had accused him of stealing; and that her husband is now confined in jail at Marlborough to answer a charge of having threatened the life of one of his assailants.

Philip Brown, colored, complains under oath that he was assaulted by a white man, in Montgomery county, on the 22d instant, while crossing the farm of the latter, and that he was shot at and wounded in the head by the same white man while riding quietly along the public highway on the evening of the same day. He has been a soldier; and when shot he heard a companion of the man who shot him say, "Shoot the d—n son of a b—h; he is nothing but a Union soldier."

The above are specimens of many similar affidavits regarding outrages in Maryland received at this office. The present civil law and its administration are found to be practically, and it may be said totally, inadequate to protect the negro in his rights of person and property. For example, often in these assaults upon the negro, by the white man colored witnesses only are present, and the testimony of colored men is not received when a white man is involved. Hence an indictment of the guilty party in the case is impossible.

The opposition to the efforts to educate the colored people in Maryland is bitter and wide-spread. Teachers have been stoned and blackened, and indignation meetings held and resolutions passed to drive them out. School-houses have been burned; colored churches, too, have been destroyed to prevent colored schools being opened in them.

Respectfully submitted,

C. H. HOWARD,

Brevet Brigadier General, Assistant Commissioner.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I will show that the existing law is not sufficient for the protection of these men. I have already said that the law was passed before the great amendment of the Constitution was ratified and made effective. It applied to those who were then freedmen from rebel States or from districts embraced in the operations of the Army. There were no freedmen excepting those made such by State action or by the proclamation of Mr. Lincoln. What control or supervision does that law in its terms authorize over men subsequently declared free but who were then in bondage? It is not a sufficient answer to say that from the necessity of the case it has been demanded of the Government that all freedmen should be deemed to be under the care of the bureau. So, indeed, in the absence of legislation it was demanded. No sane man can doubt that in Maryland and in Kentucky it was the duty of the Government to stand between the freedman and those who would oppress him.

Now, Mr. Speaker, upon examination of the existing law it will be found that in its terms it was designed to apply to those persons who were made free by military proclamation. "Freedmen from rebel States or from any district of country within the territory embraced in the operations of the Army." No persons were such freedmen who had not been held in bondage by traitor owners in arms against the Government, or who had not been declared free within the terms of Mr. Lincoln's proclamation. Freedmen of Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, and of such portions of Louisiana and Tennessee as were declared free by law, and not by military order, would not be embraced within the direct provisions of that law. The supervision and care of these men have been purely military and outside of the provisions of the law. But this should not be, now that Congress can act, clothed as they are with the power and loaded with the duty conferred and imposed by the second section of the amendment. It is a work which Congress ought to regulate and direct. How can we answer to constituent or to country if we willfully ignore our duty toward these men?

Mr. Speaker, I conjure the members of this House to examine the law and to consider this argument I present to prove the necessity of further legislation.

But this argument does not stand alone. The existing law gives to the bureau the management of "all abandoned lands;" and the fourth section is as follows:

"SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner, under the direction of the President, shall have authority to set apart, for the use of loyal refugees and freedmen, such tracts of land within the insurrectionary States as shall have been abandoned, or to which the United States shall have acquired title by confiscation or sale, or otherwise; and to every male citizen, whether refugee or freedman as aforesaid, there shall be assigned not more than forty acres of such land, and the person to whom it was so assigned shall be protected in the use and enjoyment of the land for the term of three years at an annual rent not exceeding six per cent, upon the value of such land as it was appraised by the State authorities in the year 1860 for the purpose of taxation; and in case no such appraisal can be found, then the rental shall be based upon the estimated value of the land in said year, to be ascertained in such manner as the Commissioner may by regulation prescribe. At the end of said term, or at any time during said term, the occupants of any parcels so assigned may purchase the land and receive such title thereto as the United States can convey, upon paying therefor the value of the land as ascertained and fixed for the purpose of determining the annual rent aforesaid."

Under this section, most of the abandoned property which had been held by Treasury agents, and the confiscable lands and abandoned plantations, were placed, by order of the President, under the care of the bureau. The law intended that lands should be leased or sold to refugees and freedmen. The property was to be controlled by the bureau, and held not only as a means of support to freedmen but of revenue to the Government. It was intended that this bureau should sustain itself; and those men who knew most about the willingness of freedmen to work and the productiveness of lands abandoned, felt assured that not one dollar of money would be lost to the Government by the operation of the bureau. The Commissioner, in his report at the beginning of the session, says:

"From one to ten thousand acres in each of the several States have been used as colonies for vagrant and destitute freedmen. In South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida some land, the exact amount of which has been reported, has been actually divided and assigned to freedmen as contemplated in the act establishing the bureau. In these States the policy of setting apart lands for freedmen was initiated anterior to the establishment of the bureau, and under Field Orders No. 15, issued by Major General Sherman. A comparatively insignificant amount of town property is used as quarters for teachers and officers connected with the bureau, and as hospitals. With these exceptions, all property in the hands of the bureau is held as a means of revenue.

"Shortly after the organization of the bureau, parties whose property was held by it commenced to apply for restoration of their former rights. The policy first adopted by the bureau was to return estates to those only who could show constant loyalty, past as well as present—a loyalty which could not be established by the mere production of an oath of allegiance or amnesty. As the bureau held property by authority of an act of Congress for certain definite purposes, it was supposed that this tenure must continue to exist until those purposes were accomplished; that property must be surrendered only when it was evident that the control over it was unauthorized and improper.

"This course did not meet with the approval of the President, who gave orders that a pardon, either by special warrant or the provisions of his amnesty proclamation, entitled the party pardoned to demand and receive immediate restoration of all his property except such as had been actually sold under a decree of confiscation. Shortly after this decision was made known Circular No. 15, dated September 12, 1865, was issued from the bureau, and embodying the provisions of the act of Congress establishing it, promulgated for the first time definite rules regarding the restoration of this property to former owners.

"Authority to restore was vested in the assistant commissioners of the bureau. They were directed to turn over at once all property held as abandoned upon its appearing to their satisfaction that it did not fall within the terms of the definition laid down in the act approved July 2, 1864. They were also directed to restore property, when application was made for it, through the superintendents of the districts in which it was situated, accompanied by proof of claimant's title and of his pardon, either by special warrant or the terms of the proclamation of amnesty of May 29, 1865. It was provided, however, that land cultivated by refugees or freedmen should be retained until the growing crops were gathered unless the owner made full compensation for the labor expended and its products.

"Under the provisions of this circular the work of restoration has progressed very rapidly, and it is probable that when the year terminates little or no property will remain under control of the bureau."

Now, Mr. Speaker, the bureau has not yet been in operation one year. And yet the greater part of the abandoned and confiscable lands in all the rebel States which had been in the actual possession of the Commissioner, and substantially all valuable for cultivation, have been taken from him and restored to their former owners. Unless Congress shall act, where then are these men to be protected, and how can the bureau be made to support itself?

Let me give you one statement to show how this abandoned property was used. The assistant commissioner of the State of Mississippi, in his report of the 2d of January, 1866, says as follows:

"I wish to present a complete statement of the workings of the Davis's Bend colony for the year.

"The land was divided and leased, houses built, and a system of government organized as reported to you in previous communications. The people worked well, and have shown by their industry, perseverance, and management that they are capable of doing business for themselves, and will do best where the greatest encouragement is held out of future reward.

"There were on the Bend one hundred and eighty-one companies or partnerships who received land. These comprised thirteen hundred adults and four hundred and fifty children. About five thousand acres of land were divided among them. These people were left free to manage their own affairs; not even officers of the bureau were allowed to meddle with the pecuniary or domestic affairs. They have produced—

Corn, 12,000 bushels, worth at least.....	$12,000
Vegetables, potatoes, melons, &c., sold.....	38,500
Cotton, 1,736 bales.....	347,200

Total amount of receipts.....	397,700
Paid for expenses.....	$160,000
Paid to white partners for stock, supplies, &c.....	60,000
Paid receiving and disbursing officer of Freedmen's Bureau, for rations drawn.....	18,500

Total disbursements..... 238,500

Balance in hands of colonists.....$150,200

"The people have raised their own crops, made their own sales, and put the money in their pockets; none of it passed through the hands of white people or officers of the Government of any department. The only opportunity there has been for any cheating has been in the settlement made with white parties who furnished supplies. We have guarded this in every way possible, and demanded that settlements should be made before our bureau officers.

"The home farm of five hundred acres was cultivated by transient people thrown upon our hands, and by those who were, from any cause, unable to procure land.

Receipts from home farm, for two hundred and thirty-four bales of cotton.....	$48,859 80
Paid to freed people for work by superintendents during the year.....	$6,850
Paid to superintendents on all the plantations on the Bend, year's work.....	5,995
Paid for ginning, baling, and picking.....	4,675
Paid for freight, commissions, re-packing, &c.....	5,410

Total expenses..... 22,930 00

Amount turned over to receiving and disbursing officer.....	25,929 80
If to this amount we add amount received by said officer for rations issued colored planters.....	18,500 00

It will show the total amount received by the bureau from the home farm and the colonists.....$44,429 80

"Five thousand bushels of corn were raised on the home farm and fed to Government stock, which was in use for the benefit of the people.

"The experiment has been a grand success, and proves what the people can do. I regret that they cannot have the opportunity of cultivating the same lands this season. Four of the plantations have been returned to the owners; the organization of the colony is broken up, and the people advised to seek employment and business elsewhere. I still retain the Davis plantations, and will lease them this year, but will charge the people a moderate rent, and not allow them to have the land free, as was done during 1865."

And here, sir, is a statement showing amount of money received and disbursed in the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands for the State of Mississippi, at Vicksburg, from June 1, to December 31, 1865:

Colonel Whittlesey, assistant commissioner for North Carolina, at the close of his first quarterly report gives the following statement of the financial condition of his department:

"The financial condition of the bureau is clearly presented in the reports of Captain James, who, in addition to his duties as superintendent of the eastern district, has acted as financial agent, with the assistance of Captain Seely, assistant quartermaster. The duties of the department have been very great, and have been faithfully discharged by these officers. In July, Colonel Heaton, agent of the United States Treasury, turned over to the bureau a large amount of real estate in Wilmington, Newbern, and adjoining counties, which had been leased for terms varying from one month to one year. The collection of rents from several hundred lessees of tenements and farms has been a laborious work. But the examination and adjustment of claims for this property, and the restoration of it in accordance with the President's amnesty proclamations, has been more trying and perplexing. Nearly all, however, is now out of our hands, and unless a reexamination of these claims is forced upon us by applications for rents, on the ground that the property was not abandoned, we shall be able hereafter to devote all of our time to our appropriate work.

"The following summary of operations presents the leading facts to the foregoing report:

Receipts for the quarter.....	$44,913 24
Current expenses.....	$4,350 34
For soldiers' families from bounty fund.....	7,977 25
Remitted to Treasury.....	21,584 17
Balance credited October 1, 1865.....	$11,001 48

"Farms, 123; acres on farms cultivated, 8,540; acres of pine lands worked, about 50,000; freedmen employed on farms, 6,102; contracts witnessed, 257; freedmen employed under them, 1,847; marriages registered, 512; orphans apprenticed, 42; schools established, 63; teachers employed, 85; scholars attending, 5,642; cases of crime reported for trial, 12; cases of difficulty settled, reported in full, 257; cases not reported in writing, several thousand; rations issued, 508,924; value of, $106,365 11; hospitals, 14; sick in hospitals, &c., attended by direction of the bureau, 54,441; deaths, whole number of freedmen reported in hospitals, camps, and towns, adjoining, 2,680.

"Reports of sick and deaths embrace all cases in the vicinity of stations, and with which the bureau has in any way been connected.

"Estimated crops: cotton, 858,700 pounds; corn, 32,715 bushels; sweet potatoes, 1,000 bushels; turpentine, 5,700 barrels; tar, 5,808 barrels."

So it is, Mr. Speaker, that the lands and sources of support and of revenue have gone from the bureau. I state the fact to be from the experience of less than one year that wherever the experiment has been tried with reasonable fairness the freedmen have demonstrated that the able-bodied men and women have not only supported themselves, but have been able to pay over to the Government in rent and produce substantially enough to provide for the old, the infirm, and the disabled.

And now, what should Congress do? If we will not act, or if having done all we can, no bill can be approved or passed, one of two courses must be pursued—either the power must be assumed of obtaining lands by lease or otherwise for the uses of freedmen, or else arrangements must be made by which freedmen able to work may find employment upon plantations and in the homes of former masters or owners of lands who have moved from northern States.

But, first, neither Congress nor President could properly permit the bureau to purchase or to lease lands without the authority of law, and so it will come to this, that when, as will soon be the case, no lands are left within the control of the Commissioner, all freedmen, old and young, able to work, or disabled by wounds, infirmity, or disease, must be provided for in some way or other upon lands owned, occupied, and improved for the personal profit of private owners.

Now, such owners will not want upon their farms useless laborers. They will not receive the men who have lost their arms or legs in your defense. They will not want feeble women, nor the old or infirm, or the children too young to work. Especially they will not want those who are disabled by disease. Do you not see that all this multitude of non-producers must be a dead weight upon the Government? What will the Commissioner do with them? Where will he put them? You have freed them and their old owners do not want them. Where shall they go? What shall they do? There will be cases where the necessities of labor will compel land-owners to permit disabled parents to remain and to be fed upon their farms while the working season lasts in order to secure the services of the able-bodied sons. But those cases will be exceptional, and we have no right to take them into our consideration.

With lands assigned to the bureau where homes may be allotted to the freedmen and reasonable rents received from them, with rights secured to them to purchase upon fair terms, the able-bodied freedmen will take care of all their sick and their disabled, and will put into the Treasury of the Government enough to defray all the charges of this bureau. And now, if it be said by any one who claims that this is the white man's country, or by anybody else, that such a policy as this would disturb labor and prevent the plantations from being worked because freedmen would prefer their own homesteads to anybody's farm, the answer is obvious. This cannot be so if wages are offered which fairly pay for the work to be done. There is not a man upon the floor of this House that does not see in his own every-day experience this absurd argument refuted. If the freedman can pay his rent and keep his family together, old and young, and clear for himself twenty dollars a month, he will not willingly work for another man for eight or ten. Why should he? But give him the worth of his labor, and he will go quickly enough, and the women and the old men who cannot get wages will work his little land and stay at home. This is the law of labor. We all have the services of men who live at their homes when not at work; and so, as a general fact, has every northern householder. And those men employed all over the North are among the men who send us here and keep their eye upon us while we are here. Does any one know this fact better than the President knows it?

Now, sir, the same law of labor will hold good at the South as prevails at the North. The trouble is, that where for generations labor has been forced; where the minimum amount of food and clothing, without other pay, has been made to produce the maximum amount of work, those who employ labor are not willing to pay the fair value of labor. But when on the cotton plantation the land-owner is prepared to pay for skilled labor what it is fairly worth to the man who does the work, he will find willing hands to cultivate his staples. But there is another consideration which neither President nor Congress will feel disposed to disregard. "A fair day's pay for a fair day's work," is the golden rule of labor. In South Carolina there were at the last census of white population 291,388, and of colored population 412,820, of whom only 9,914 were free. There were in that State 16,217,700 acres of land, of which only 4,072,651 acres were improved. That land was owned by the white men. Here and there exceptional cases occurred; whether according to law or against the provisions of law I do not stop to inquire. But it is said that some men of African descent did own both land and slaves. But the rule was otherwise. The white men owned the land; the black men gave it its value.

But now a new condition of things is created by our own act. Every man is made free. There is no longer ownership of labor. Every fair man admits that these four hundred thousand freedmen, declared free first by military order and then by sacred enactment, must be for a season protected by the Government which released them from bondage. Would our duty be discharged; would the President who has felt through his whole life the oppressive power of southern capital; would he believe that we had discharged our duty if we say to the Commissioner of this bureau we will not give you any lands to work with; but take care of these freedmen; see that the gulf which separates servitude from freedom is bridged over somewhat, and aid their unaccustomed steps until they stand firmly upon that land of promise which we have opened to them? Find employment for them all, and see to it they have fair play; but especially see to it that the Government incurs no needless cost. Would that do? Where could you find employment at fair wages, and how could your Commissioner secure it to them? If you compel them to work upon the old plantations, under the old owners, in the old homes, giving them no hope in life and no choice of labor but to work there or to expatriate themselves and seek homes in other States, do you not see that the price of wages must be at the discretion of the owner of the land? If you compel the freedman to work there, what wages they will give he must take, or you must support him, or he must starve. But give to your Commissioner the power to procure lands for them; the freedmen will pay fair rent and will from their labor defray the expenses of your bureau, and will thankfully pay full price for the lands which you may sell them. And when such opportunities are given them you will yourselves make that golden rule of labor operative, and a fair day's pay for a fair day's work will be secured. My friends, is not this very plain? And I say to you now, and I would that every voting man in all your districts could hear what I say, that whatever else you may do you cannot "enforce" that great amendment by any legislation more "appropriate" than this.

But you see at once, Mr. Speaker, that the present law, passed before the people of the loyal States by their Legislatures ratified the amendment which you offered to them, is wholly insufficient in this respect. The lands provided for them by that law have passed substantially, excepting the Sherman lands which I will speak of presently, into the hands of their former owners. And your committee believed that upon a fair statement of existing facts you would not hold them guiltless if they did not propose some plan that would—without one dollar of cost to the Government, as we believe—in some small measure make real to these freedmen the liberty you have vouchsafed to them. We owe something to these freedmen, and this bill rightly administered, invaluable as it will be, will not balance the account. We have done nothing to them, as a race, but injury. They, as a people, have done nothing to us but good. The friends of slavery say we Christianized the African, and therefore we gave him blessing and not a curse. We enslaved him. That is what we did. If the African has become Christian in America he may thank God, not us. So Booth murdered our President. His fatal ball opened the avenue through which the spirit passed, and Lincoln stood before his God. The assassin lifted him from earth to heaven and so conferred a blessing. But he remained an assassin none the less. We reduced the fathers to slavery, and the sons have periled life to keep us free. That is the way history will state the case. Now, then, we have struck off their chains. Shall we not help them to find homes? They have not had homes yet. We have not let them know the meaning of the sacred name of home.

Why, sir, our humblest man, if God has given him strength enough of mind and body to make him accountable, may find some willing wife and lowly home. If he is a true man he will find there a heaven upon earth. No monarch upon his throne is more secure in the enjoyment of his rights than he. The invisible guardianship of law surrounds and keeps him safe. What he has is his own. His wife is his, and when he enters under the low roof at night, the day's work done, the sweet voices that call him father are the voices of his own. He may be poor and friendless outside of home, but he is rich there, and no mortal man in the Republic is strong enough to do him wrong with safety, for the law is mightier than the strongest man. But these men whom you have freed have been slaves. Their fathers were torn away by felon hands from ancestral homes in their native land—heathen homes, perhaps, but I suppose God was there nevertheless—and within the borders of the rebel States no homes since then have been permitted to them or to their children. Slavery cannot know a home. Where the wife is the property of the husband's master, and may be used at will; where children are bred, like stock, for sale; where man and woman, after twenty years of faithful service from the time when the priest with the owner's sanction by mock ceremonies pretended to unite them, are parted and sold at that owner's will, there can be no such thing as home. Sir, no act of ours can fitly enforce their freedom that does not contemplate for them the security of home.

But let it be borne in mind that it is not intended by this bill to give freedmen homes at the cost of the Government. They will hire and pay full rent or they will buy and pay full price. But when a condition of things exists such as is now found in the late rebel States, where, as a race, the colored man could own no lands because held in slavery, and where because of his declared freedom the vindictive hatred of the old owners fastens itself upon him and would exclude him still from ownership of land, there does arise this necessity that we who have made them free should enable him from the fruits of his own industry and with his own means to procure for himself a home. And that is all that this bill proposes to do. Every man may now avail himself of the homestead law. That will secure him eighty or one hundred and sixty acres for a nominal sum of money. This bill withdraws one million out of fifty million acres of public lands in the five States, namely, Florida, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, and Arkansas, and permits the freedmen to lease in lots of forty acres each and purchase at an agreed valuation. Let me read the fifth section of the bill:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of rendering this bureau self-sustaining, and in the place of lands heretofore assigned to freedmen and thereafter withdrawn from the control of the bureau, the President shall reserve from sale or settlement under the homestead or preemption laws, and assign for the use of freedmen and loyal refugees, male or female, unoccupied public lands in Florida, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, and Arkansas, not exceeding in all one million acres of good land. And the Commissioner shall cause the same, under the direction of the President, to be allotted and assigned from time to time, in parcels not exceeding forty acres each, to the loyal refugees and freedmen, who shall be protected in the use and enjoyment thereof for such term of time and at such annual rent as may be agreed upon between the Commissioner and such refugees or freedmen. The rental shall be based upon a valuation of the land, to be ascertained in such manner as the Commissioner may, under the direction of the President, by regulation prescribe. At the end of each term, or sooner, if the Commissioner assent thereto, the occupants of any parcels so assigned, their heirs and assigns, may purchase the land and receive a title thereto from the United States in fee, upon payment therefor of the value of the land ascertained as aforesaid.

There is no gift here. The freedmen pay for everything. And the lands assigned are public lands, which we have given to States and for schools and railroads and other uses which were national in their character. Millions of acres have been unwisely given away; but these lands, not given away, but sold for a price, will confer upon freedmen the inestimable blessings of hearth-stone and home.

The sixth section of the bill, as now reported, will not, I trust, be opposed in any quarter. Let me read it:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That whenever the former owners of lands occupied under General Sherman's field order, dated at Savannah, January 16, 1865, shall apply for restoration of said lands, the Commissioner shall procure other lands by rent or purchase, not exceeding forty acres for each occupant: Provided, That such lands can be procured at an average cost not exceeding twenty-five dollars per acre, and before such restoration is made, shall allot and assign them to such occupants upon the terms and conditions named in the preceding section, or set apart for them, out of the public lands assigned for that purpose, forty acres each, upon the same terms and conditions: Provided, That no sale shall be made of lands so purchased at a price less than the cost thereof to the United States.

Why, Mr. Speaker, in some of the States the bureau has given much more aid to the white refugees than to the freedmen. The bureau has not confined its operation to the men who were made free.

In Alabama there had been on the 1st of April, eight hundred and seventy-nine thousand three hundred and forty-three rations issued to refugees and three hundred and sixty-four thousand two hundred and fifteen rations issued to freedmen, and in Arkansas there had been one million four thousand eight hundred and sixty-two rations issued to refugees, and seven hundred and fifteen thousand five hundred and seventy-two issued to freedmen. Now, sir, all we propose to do is to let freedmen have a chance to buy a home. No land is to be given away to him, but the Government that has made him free helps him to purchase a home. And this is all I desire to say in offering this bill for consideration. Its provisions have been carefully examined and will receive, I trust, the favor of the House. I have made a motion to recommit, and I propose to withdraw that motion and call the previous question unless some other members desire to debate this bill.

Mr. LE BLOND. There are persons who desire to debate this bill. I hope, therefore, the gentleman will not put the bill upon its passage now, but let it go over for a day or two. There are some very important features contained in this bill, and I think it should at least be amended in those respects. Whether intended or not, it is nevertheless true that this bill confers a power which I think is very objectionable. It is all objectionable, in my opinion, because I am opposed to the entire principle and theory of this bill.

But the fourth section is exceedingly objectionable. In that section there is a provision that authorizes this Government to furnish supplies to these colored people in the South. It is true it only purports upon its face to confer the power to furnish medical aid; yet the power is there given not only to feed but to clothe the colored people who have been slaves. That of itself is objectionable. It is class legislation; it is doing for that class of persons what you do not propose to do for the widows and orphans throughout the length and breadth of this whole country. In my judgment the entire theory of this bill is mischievous and it ought not to pass. It by no means ought to pass with a provision of the kind to which I have referred.

This system encourages idleness; and that is one of the great objections to the entire theory on which this bill is based. The evidence of this fact is brought before the American people in the report of Generals Steedman and Fullerton, showing that the system which you have already inaugurated is objectionable in every form in which you can view it. I am personally acquainted with General Steedman; and I know him to be a high-minded, honorable, and intelligent man. Whatever those two men have presented to the American people as facts existing in the southern States may be received as entitled to the fullest respect.

If, sir, that report be true, then it becomes the duty of this Congress to strike down that system at once, leaving these colored people, free as they are, to make a living in the same way that the poor whites of our country are doing. Give them no encouragement beyond the encouragement to industry which the resources of the country offer to every man who will labor. Why, sir, when we look at these galleries, and see them crowded day after day with stout, hearty, able-bodied colored men, who, to all appearance, draw their rations from the Government, and who seat themselves here in our galleries during the entire day, it is but an evidence that the system itself is mischievous, and ought not to be encouraged by the Congress of the United States. Let those people be thrown upon their own resources, and wherever labor is in demand you will find them going there seeking employment, and they will obtain it.

Gentlemen may appeal to the passions and prejudices of the people, and urge that this system should be continued as a punishment to be inflicted upon the southern people. But let me say to gentlemen that the period has gone by when the American people, taxed as they are almost to death for the purpose of supporting this Government, are going to contribute longer to the maintenance of this class of persons for the sole purpose of inflicting a punishment upon the southern people, who wrongfully undertook to destroy this Government. Sir, we do not propose to destroy ourselves in order to crush the southern people.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the bill goes over until to-morrow. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Eliot] has five minutes of his hour remaining.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. No. 318) entitled "An act to authorize the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Navy;" when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, House bill No. 453, for the relief of Cornelius B. Gold, late acting assistant paymaster United States Navy.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments, House bill No. 281, to amend the postal laws, in which amendments the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 284) for the relief of the children of Otway H. Berryman, deceased; and

An act (S. No. 330) making further provision for the establishment of an armory and an arsenal of construction, deposit, and repair on Rock Island, in the State of Illinois.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and fourteen be amended by inserting after the word "periodically" in the first sentence of said section the words, "or otherwise, or publishing any guide, almanac, catalogue, directory, or any other paper or book."

Mr. JENCKES. I believe that no vote was taken last night on the amendments offered to the paragraph preceding this. When the gentleman from Vermont offered them, I understood that no vote was to be taken upon them then.

Mr. MORRILL. As I understand it, the amendments which I offered last evening were adopted; but it was understood that the paragraph should be open to amendment this morning.

Mr. JENCKES. I did not understand that the last amendment offered by the gentleman was voted on last evening.

Mr. MORRILL. I thought it was. I presumed that no one objected to it.

The CHAIRMAN. According to the recollection of the Chair, the amendment was adopted; and the Globe sustains the Chair in his recollection. But if the Chair hears no objection the amendment will be considered as again before the committee for action.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows: Amend by inserting at the close of the first proviso the following:

But the returns required to be made by such provident institutions and savings banks after July, 1866, shall be made on the first Monday in January and the first Monday in July in each year, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I will say this amendment is to allow these institutions to make their returns and pay their taxes semi-annually instead of monthly, because it is almost impossible for them to keep accounts with so large a number of depositors and make returns monthly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That subject is not now before the House, as the amendment was agreed to last evening.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair put the question to the committee, and there was no objection to taking up the amendment again.

Mr. THAYER. I understand the gentleman from Vermont said there would be no vote on the amendment last evening.

Mr. MORRILL. I referred to the paragraph, and stated that that would be open to further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Globe corroborates the Chair. The amendment is before the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I rise to a point of order. The Chair asked whether there was objection and my colleague [Mr. DEMING] demanded that the amendment should be reported before he yielded his consent. After the amendment was read he rose and objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the objection, and the amendment is before the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. I move the following amendment:

Insert after the word "thereof" in line twenty-four hundred and forty, as follows:

And provided further, That in lieu of all other taxes imposed on national banks there shall hereafter be levied, collected, and paid a tax of one half per cent. per annum on the average amount of their deposits.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a statement of one or two minutes on the question of taxation as it will hereafter affect the national banking system. By the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States the stock of national banks has become subject to local and municipal taxation. I know a great many gentlemen indulge the hope that that decision will be reversed or that Congress will declare the stock based on United States bonds exempted from all local taxation. I do not believe any gentleman here will live long enough to see either result attained. We must therefore make up our minds henceforth that the property of national banks is to be taxed by local authority as other property is taxed. I consider that is inevitably settled and permanent. It is no longer a theory; it has become a stubborn fact.

The question is whether we shall tax these national banks in an extraordinary manner by the national Government. We tax them two dollars per thousand upon their capital. We tax them five per cent. semi-annually on their net earnings. We tax them one per cent. on their circulation and one half per cent. on their average deposits—making thus an average aggregate taxation by the national Government of more than two per cent. on the capital of national banks.

I am informed this morning by the Comptroller of the Currency one half of one per cent. on the gross deposits on the present average in the banks will yield $2,600,000, while all the expenses of the Currency Bureau will not be over $260,000 a year. The tax which I propose will therefore yield ten times as much as all the expenses involved in conducting the Currency Bureau, and I include cost of engraving and renewing notes, clerk hire, and all incidental charges.

By our own action here, whether intended or not, these banks have lost the immunity which they thought they had when they were organized, that they were to be free from all local and municipal taxation. It is now from two to five per cent. throughout the United States. The city banks, with large deposits, may not care for it, while it will result in driving the country banks to the wall. I repeat it, sir, that, stand it as well as the city banks may, the currency banks, under the duplex system of taxation now in force from the General Government and the local authorities, will eventually destroy the weak banks in the country. We have no power over local taxation. That may be said to have passed from our control; but we do have power to relieve a large portion of the burden we now put upon them by national authority. I do not believe we should use these banks as a source of revenue, to the destruction of their business. If we get ten times as much out of them as they cost us, I think the General Government ought to be satisfied with it.

Mr. PIKE. The processes by which wealth is produced ought to be relieved. That we all agree to. But here is an attempt, at the expense of those processes, to relieve wealth itself. I protest, upon sound principles of political economy, against it, and I hope the attempt will not succeed. I am surprised that my colleague, with the history of our State before him, should make this motion. I have looked at the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, and I find the fact to be in regard to the banks of Maine, according to the returns of July and October last, that they pay a tax of less than one per cent. per annum on their capital.

Mr. BLAINE. I made my statement in view of the tax to be levied under the decision of the Supreme Court—not what has been but what is to be imposed hereafter.

Mr. PIKE. Now, then, our banks for a series of years have paid to the State one per cent. on their capital. The United States gathers less than one per cent. upon it and in return therefor furnishes them with their circulating notes. So that to-day the banks of Maine are paying a less amount to the General Government than they have heretofore paid to the State, and by law they are exempt from State tax. It is said that they have now to pay local taxes, in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court. Well, local taxes are burdensome, but farmers, merchants, and everybody else have to pay them, and in the banking act it is provided specially that the national banks shall pay precisely the same tax that the State banks do. In my own State the local banks have always had to pay local taxes in addition to the one per cent. State tax, so the national banks to-day are upon the same footing precisely as the State banks were before the national bank act was passed, with this exception, that the General Government now furnishes their circulating notes which before, as State banks, they had to furnish themselves.

Now, sir, is this bank interest suffering? Will anybody say that it is suffering? No returns of dividends are provided for under the general law. I cannot ascertain from the Comptroller what dividends these national banks have made. But I suppose no man can doubt that from the beginning of the present national banking system until the present time, their dividends have been on average at least nine or ten per cent.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. I understand him to say that there is no means by which he can ascertain the amount of dividends of these national banks.

Mr. PIKE. I inquired of the Comptroller and he said he had none in the office.

Mr. PRICE. There is not a bank organized in the United States since the passage of the act that does not return to the Comptroller under oath the amount of dividends and when paid.

Mr. PIKE. I merely know what the Comptroller tells me, and I hold in my hand his published report and that does not give any returns. Now, I have no doubt the dividends of these banks have averaged ten per cent. per annum. Some of them have paid enormous dividends. Take the national banks of this city. Does anybody doubt that the First National Bank of Washington has paid forty to fifty per cent. per annum?

A MEMBER. How about the Merchants' Bank?

Mr. PIKE. I do not know about the Merchants' Bank. There has been the same kind of rascality in that bank that has pervaded some other banks that we do not know so much about.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LYNCH. I move to strike out the last word in the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think it would be better if my colleague would withdraw his amendment, and allow it to be offered to the currency act, where it properly belongs. It is not appropriate to this bill, which provides only for the taxation of State banks, and not national banks. It provides that this section shall not apply to associations which are taxed under and by virtue of the act "to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof." The national currency act provides for the taxation of national banks. The amendment of my colleague does not properly belong to this bill.

Mr. BLAINE. What my colleague [Mr. LYNCH] suggests is a mere matter of form. The amendment as offered by me is entirely pertinent to the pending bill. I rise now to correct my other colleague's [Mr. PIKE's] figures. He is usually very accurate, but he is out of the line just now. I understand him to say that the national banks now in existence are no more heavily taxed by the national Government than the State banks formerly were by our State laws. Now, the gentleman knows that for years and years in Maine we had a tax of one per cent. only on the capital of the banks, as levied directly by State authority. Their circulation was not limited as is that of the national banks. No matter how much it was, they were not taxed on their circulation, and were not taxed for a license. They paid only one per cent. on their capital stock. The national banks pay for a license, five per cent. on their annual net earnings, one per cent. annually on their circulation, and a half per cent. on their deposits.

Mr. PIKE. The average tax, taking the July and October returns of 1865, on the circulation and deposits of Maine banks amounted to eighty-two one hundredths of one per cent. I take those two months because they give a fair average. Now, you have to add to that five per cent. on the dividends, and one fifth of one per cent. for a license, so that altogether the tax is less than one per cent. per annum.

Mr. BLAINE. All I maintain is, that whereas the old State tax was one per cent., the national banks pay more than double that tax.

Since this discussion commenced, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has placed in my hands a letter from a constituent of his which clearly shows how very heavily the tax on national banks foots up in certain localities. The bank referred to is a small one of but $50,000 capital, and yet the taxes, national and local, for the past year amounted to $3,467 87, or nearly seven per cent. on the capital of the bank. And this is no exceptional case. In many communities the taxes are fully as heavy as in the instance named, and in some places they are even higher. As to the question of profit, my colleague says that these banks have made dividends of ten per cent. Why, the bonds they have deposited in the Treasury, national securities, paying six per cent. in gold, would have divided ten per cent.

Mr. LYNCH. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, there will come a time for the discussion of this whole banking system. It was adopted under exigencies, and may or may not be a permanent part of the system of the country. At any rate, experience is suggesting that it needs improvement. The proposition of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] to remove all taxes but the tax on deposits, unless that taxation be made by gradual increase at fixed periods so as to prevent discounting upon deposits, would only be to strengthen one of its greatest vices. The chief vice of the system is discounting upon deposits. It aggravates every financial crisis. When money is abundant it tempts the banks to invite operators into speculation, and the moment contractions begin it exaggerates their virulence by hundreds of per cent. There should be no banking upon deposits, or at least not to an extent greater than sixty or seventy per cent. beyond the capital of the incorporation. I hope that when the banking bill comes before us it will be so restricted, and that the banks will be called upon to pay at least the taxes they now pay. These banks have paid dividends of from ten to one hundred per cent.—I can name one of them that declared a dividend of one hundred per cent.; and this is the last place in the world to begin remitting taxes. The Government keeps in these banks an average balance of from forty to sixty million dollars, and for the use of that money they can well afford to pay the taxes assessed upon them. I hope that when we consider this banking system again we shall prohibit the Government from keeping deposits in any of these banks, to be banked upon and scattered by the half million as was done by the bank in this city which lately exploded. If you transfer the tax to deposits, I venture to say that before this session closes you will so restrict the system of deposits as to diminish the collection of taxes from the national banks with their dividends and reserve profits averaging probably forty per cent. per annum.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] understand that my amendment proposes any change in that respect?

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] proposes to put a tax upon deposits.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not propose to put any more tax upon deposits than is imposed now.

Mr. KELLEY. It will prove to be putting the tax upon the gas of the balloon after the balloon has exploded.

Mr. BLAINE. If the gentleman will explain to the House how taxing deposits is going to facilitate banking on deposits, he will give us some new light upon it.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman proposes to remove all other taxes and to leave the tax on deposits.

Mr. BLAINE. The present tax is a half of one per cent. upon the deposits. The amendment which I have proposed leaves that tax just where it now is. Therefore if you are going to stimulate discounts by taxing deposits, then you have done it already. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] maintains that if we put this tax on deposits it will stimulate these enormous discounts. I cannot see the point of the argument. I do not see the connection between the cause and presumed effect.

My proposition is just this: in view of local taxation we must lighten the national taxation; and I would take it off the country banks, where circulation is the great object, and leave it on the city banks, those of Philadelphia and New York and other large places where deposits in the course of mercantile transactions are very large. Probably the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. KELLEY] represents a large banking interest in that city; and it may do very well for him to resist this proposition. I represent a country district, and I want the city banks, with their enormous profits upon deposits, to pay the expenses of this system. I do not wonder that the gentleman from Philadelphia should resist that. But I want to put it there; I want those who are able to pay the tax to bear it. I want the sources of business, the country banks in the small communities, the little rills away up in the mountains, before they get into the oceans of Philadelphia and New York, to get a chance to live.

Mr. KELLEY withdrew his amendment to the amendment of Mr. BLAINE.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I renew the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LYNCH. I rise to a point of order. My point of order is, that the amendment of my colleague [Mr. BLAINE] is not germane to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is too late to raise that point of order now, for the amendment has been received and debated.

Mr. BOUTWELL. While we have no means of knowing exactly what the profits of these banks are as a whole, the report of the Comptroller discloses some facts which will enable the House to judge whether they are able to bear the taxation which is proposed to be put upon them by this bill. On the 1st of July last, according to their returns, the aggregate of the banks had a surplus fund of $31,000,000. They were also liable for dividends unpaid, that is, dividends which had been declared but which had not then been paid, to the amount of $4,700,000 more. And they also had a profit account of $23,000,000, the whole making an aggregate of profits of between $58,000,000 and $59,000,000, then undivided, upon a capital paid in of $325,000,000, or nearly eighteen per cent. On the 1st of October last their surplus funds, which of course originated in profits previously made, amounted to $38,700,000. Their unpaid dividends, that is, dividends declared out of profits earned but not paid, amounted to $4,331,000 more, and their profit account proper, that is, the account not embraced either in unpaid dividends or surplus funds, amounted to $32,350,000 more, making an aggregate of profits on the 1st of October last of $85,000,000 on a capital paid in of about $393,000,000, and showing that between July and October, a period of three months, after deducting all the dividends paid, they have carried their profits from $53,000,000 up to $85,000,000.

Mr. BLAINE. Does not that come from the sale of gold?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not know from whence it comes; I only know that it is there.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I merely want to state in regard to that little bank that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] says is now so heavily taxed, that I find upon looking over the returns that with only $50,000 capital they have about $190,000,000 drawing interest, upon which, if they get only six per cent., they will receive over $11,000 of profits. And I understand that this little bank—one of these rills up in the mountains, as the gentleman describes them—pays semi-annual dividends of ten per cent., making twenty per cent. per annum.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. My object in offering this amendment is simply to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE.] The gentleman suggests that I represent a large banking capital in Philadelphia. I wish him to understand that if that banking capital derives as it does enormous profits from banking on deposits, I desire to impose a restriction upon it. I want to prevent, by legislation, the effect of which shall be gradual, the banking institutions of the country from banking on their deposits, whereby I affirm they stimulate and produce crises and aggravate them when they come.

My philosophy, which the gentleman could not comprehend, is this: if we now put all our taxes on the deposits, we shall not, when we come to consider the bank bill, be able to restrict the banking on deposits, because he and others will make the argument that if we do this we will release the banks from the taxtion. Now, I do not desire that the deposits, which I hope will not hereafter be as great a source of profit to the banks, shall be the only source of taxation. I wish that when we come to deal with the banking system we may be free to perfect it as experience may suggest. That is my philosophy.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I consider that the best course we can pursue in reference to this question of State taxation and Federal taxation upon these banks is at this time to follow the Committee of Ways and Means in reference to this tax. I deem this not the proper time to touch that conflict which must arise between Federal and State taxation upon these banks. I would prefer to reserve that question till it shall be presented, as it will be shortly, by the Committee on Banking and Currency. Then we can take up and discuss the whole system of banking in reference to taxation. We can then decide also whether this House is prepared to continue a system of deposits in these national depositories without any adequate security therefor—a system which has led to such immense losses by the Government. I hope, therefore, that the House will follow the committee strictly in reference to this taxation.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the loss of revenue by taking this out will amount to about seven million dollars. The subject has been hitherto considered in connection with the currency bill, and therefore it has not been introduced in connection with this bill, which merely relates to State banks and savings institutions. I think that the whole subject of the laws regulating national banks requires revision. I am satisfied that some relief must be given to those institutions or they will soon perish; I am willing, for one, to afford them some relief. But I prefer that the question should come up distinctly and separately in its proper place.

For the purpose of terminating debate, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall resume the consideration of House bill no 513, all debate upon the pending paragraph and the amendments thereto terminate in five minutes.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I trust that will not be agreed to. I desire to have an opportunity to move to strike out the last proviso of the paragraph.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman will have an opportunity to move that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. BLAINE. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means did not hear me or he would have been relieved from the necessity of moving that the committee rise. There is an impression prevailing that the amendment belongs to the currency bill. I suppose the idea is to get Congress to enact a law absolutely prohibiting local taxation. I believe that to be a "harder lick" at the local revenues than this would be to the national revenues. We can better afford to remit the tax here than they can to forego it there. I think nothing in the currency bill will prove as acceptable as this would. But as I do not wish to press my amendment at a time when its friends would be somewhat divided, I now propose to withdraw it.

Mr. STEVENS. I had intended to offer an amendment to this section relieving the State-bank circulation, after the 1st of July next, from the ten per cent. tax, but understanding the Committee on Banking and Currency design to make a revision of the general currency act I shall withhold my proposition until then.

Mr. BALDWIN. I move to strike out in line twenty-four hundred and forty-eight, "five hundred," and insert "one thousand."

Mr. Chairman, my opinion is that the deposits in the banks described in this paragraph ought to be entirely exempted from taxation. They are banks having no capital stock, and do no other business than receive deposits to be loaned for the parties making the deposits, without compensation. A title to signify what these banks are would be "loan agencies." They are mere loan agencies. There is no more reason for taxing money put at interest through these agencies than for taxing money put at interest by other methods. In deference to the views of some gentlemen I waived the amendment I intended offering and submitted the one now pending. The depositors in these banks are generally poor people who make small gains and lay them aside quarterly or yearly. All their income from money invested through savings banks is taxed five per cent. without regard to its amount, while the income of richer people is exempt to the amount of $1,000. In view of that tax, I suppose it is not more than just to exempt all deposits below $1,000 from taxation.

Mr. MORRILL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MORRILL and BALDWIN were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 49.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to strike out these words:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to associations which are taxed under and by virtue of the act "to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," and the deposits in associations or companies known as provident institutions or savings banks, having no capital stock and doing no other business than receiving deposits to be loaned or invested for the sole benefit of the parties making such deposits, without profit or compensation to the association or company, shall be exempt from tax or duty on so much of their deposits as they have invested in securities of the United States, and on all deposits less than $500 made in the name of any one person: And provided further, That any bank ceasing to issue notes for circulation, and which shall deposit in the Treasury of the United States, in lawful money, the amount of its outstanding circulation, to be redeemed at par, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, shall be exempt from any tax upon such circulation.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I move to strike out in line twenty-four hundred and forty-two the word "or," and insert after the word "banks" the words "savings-fund and other savings institutions."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move to strike out the following:

Provided further, That any bank ceasing to issue notes for circulation, and which shall deposit in the Treasury of the United States, in lawful money, the amount of its outstanding circulation, to be redeemed at par, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, shall be exempt from any tax upon such circulation.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and fourteen be amended by inserting after the word "periodically" in the first sentence of the said section the words "or otherwise, or publishing any guide, almanac, catalogue, directory, or any other paper or book."

Mr. ANCONA moved to add the following:

And that section one hundred and fourteen be further amended in the last clause so as to exempt all newspapers whose average circulation does not exceed three thousand copies from all taxes for advertising.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 40; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN ordered tellers under the rule; and appointed Messrs. ANCONA and MORRILL.

The committee was again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 28, noes 70.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCOME.

That section one hundred and sixteen be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof as follows: that there shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income of every person residing in the United States, a duty of five per cent. on the excess over $1,000, and a like duty shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States, and a like duty shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the interest or dividends accruing upon investments within the United States, or upon bonds or other securities of the United States, or of corporations, or citizens thereof. And the duty herein provided for shall be assessed, collected, and paid upon the gains, profits, and income for the year ending the 31st day of December next preceding the time for levying, collecting, and paying said duty.

Mr. PIKE. I move to amend by striking out all after the words "United States" in line twenty-four hundred and sixty-six down to the end of line twenty-four hundred and seventy-five, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Or of any citizen of the United States residing abroad whether derived from any kind of property, rents, interest, dividends, or salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, a duty of five per cent. on the amount so derived over $1,000 and not exceeding $5,000, and a duty of ten per cent. on the amount exceeding $5,000. And a like duty shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States and not citizens thereof.

This is a matter of considerable importance. The chairman of the committee states that the change proposed in this bill lessens the revenue $17,000,000. The amendment proposes an exemption of incomes up to $1,000; otherwise it is a reenactment of the old law. The question arises as to the propriety of assessing an income tax of five per cent. on one amount, and a tax of ten per cent. on a larger income. Of course it is only upon the net income, and a tax of ten per cent. upon net income is not higher than many other rates imposed in this bill. Now, if we give away by this provision in the bill as it stands seventeen millions of revenue, we must look elsewhere to supply the deficiency. If we retain the seventeen millions of tax we may relieve many small and weak manufacturers of the country. Every laboring man in the country pays a tax upon what he eats, drinks, and wears. And until we come to the point of relieving the great body of people in the country from onerous taxes upon every day's consumption it is a question whether or not the men who are able to pay should not pay this increased proportion of their income to the General Government.

I have examined the English law from which this income tax is derived, and I find that for several years the system in that country was ten per cent. on large incomes, seven and a half on more moderate income, and five per cent. on the smaller, not divided precisely as we divide them, but by different kinds of property. They have always pursued the system of apportioning taxes upon property and income. In one instance a specific tax was laid on those who kept servants, commencing with one pound on one servant and increasing until the men who had eleven servants paid six pounds on each, thus recognizing the principle that the man of larger means should pay an increased tax in proportion to his means. That is a principle recognized by the bill of the Committee of Ways and Means when they exempt men of moderate income, up to $1,000, from taxation altogether. And it is carrying out the same idea when you have apportioned this from five to ten per cent. The principle is also recognized in the taxation of gas companies, where the tax ranges from five cents on a thousand feet to ten, fifteen, and twenty-five per cent., in proportion to the amount produced. It is a fair principle of taxation and one that sound political economy should recognize, because the aim always should be to lay taxes on that portion of the community that can most easily bear them.

I do not know that I am personally interested in the matter, but the great mass of those who are particularly interested I know would very cheerfully pay this additional sum, for I have not yet heard of any remonstrance from any gentleman whose tax is more than five per cent. according to the existing law. No one of this class has ever sent a request to this Congress to be relieved from taxation, and if we wait until that patriotic class of men shall ask to be relieved from their burden, I apprehend we will have to wait a great while. On the other hand, we do have petitions from struggling manufacturers coming to us from all quarters of the land, asking for relief. Now, we all desire to relieve all the processes by which wealth is created. We all desire to relieve, as much as possible, the labor of the country from taxation, because by doing so we produce the best general result. It is for this reason that I hope the House will follow the English example, and for a few years to come retain this tax of ten per cent.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the words "one thousand dollars" in line twenty-four hundred and sixty-eight, the following:

And not exceeding $10,000; and a duty of ten per cent. per annum on the excess over ten thousand and not exceeding twenty thousand dollars; and a duty of fifteen per cent. per annum on the excess over $20,000, and not exceeding $40,000; and a duty of twenty per cent. per annum on the excess over $40,000 and not exceeding $60,000; and a duty of twenty-five per cent. per annum on the excess over $60,000.

I concur in the views expressed so ably by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PIKE] upon this subject. But his amendment does not go far enough. The highest rate it proposes to put upon income is ten per cent. Now, it was very properly said by him that we must get this tax out of men who have large incomes. We cannot get it out of those who have none. And there is no reason, in my judgment, when a man's income reaches twenty, forty, or sixty thousand dollars why he cannot afford to pay fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five per cent. upon it.

It will be recollected that the country was electrified a year or two ago by the announcement that the capitalists of this country were going to make an effort to pay off the entire debt of the country. An effort was made in that direction, and we were highly gratified at the patriotism and liberality of some of the distinguished capitalists of the country in coming to the relief of the poor men from the burden of debt heaped upon them. The only reason they did not succeed was that a few stingy, miserly millionaires refused to cooperate with them. Now, the patriotic capitalists of the country will be gratified at this effort on the part of Congress to enable them to come to the rescue of our country and make those who are unwilling to contribute their proportion come to the scratch and relieve the Government from its indebtedness. I ask the House to give this matter a fair consideration. Patriotic capitalists will not object. Those who have incomes of two and three hundred thousand dollars can afford to pay twenty or twenty-five per cent. on their incomes for the purpose of relieving the poor people of the country from the enormous burden which is weighing them down and crippling their energies. I trust that this amendment will receive the favorable consideration of this House and that we will show that we are in earnest in endeavoring to relieve the poor people and placing the tax upon those who are able to bear it.

Mr. MORRILL. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. ROSS.] The only question which is really before the committee is whether we had better forego this tax or some other. I am as ready as the gentleman from Illinois to admit that the men who receive two or three hundred thousand dollars income can afford to pay an increased tax, but that is not the question here. The question is, can we afford to take it in this manner? The principle that we apply must be a just one, and living in a republican form of government as we do, I cannot see on what principle the tax proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] or the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PIKE] can be justified.

The example cited by my friend from Maine of England, which levies a tax of this kind, is no argument for us. There they have different classes. They have a titled class and distinctions of rank, and those classes ought to be made to pay for their titles. In this country we neither create nor tolerate any distinction of rank, race, or color, and should not tolerate anything else than entire equality in our taxation. So, then, I think the proposition cannot be justified upon any sound principle of morals. It can only be defended on the same ground that the highwayman defends his acts. It is saying to the man of wealth, "You have got the money and we will take it because we can make a better use of it than you will." And then it tends to create a great amount of fraud and false swearing. A man who is taxed only as high as his neighbor upon the amount he possesses is willing to pay his tax. Go beyond that and he believes himself to have been wronged and he will retaliate. But do you come to a man who owns five hundred sheep and say to him that he shall pay more than twice as much on his sheep as the man who has but two hundred and fifty? No. Do you go to the man who owns two hundred acres of land and say that he shall pay twice as much tax per acre as the man who has only one hundred acres? No. I say, then, that in a republican form of government we cannot justify this inequality of taxation.

Mr. SPALDING. May I ask to what tax the gentleman is now referring?

Mr. MORRILL. I am discussing the proposition that when the amount of income exceeds $5,000, a tax of ten per cent., instead of five, shall be imposed.

Mr. SPALDING. May I ask the gentleman what the law is now?

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman will have an opportunity to argue the question. I do not desire to discuss the matter in the form of a colloquy. The question arises here to-day, as I believe, whether this tax can be fairly justified on principle. If other gentlemen are persuaded, as I believe a majority of the House are persuaded, that it is just, I am not. But if gentlemen should reach the conclusion that it is justifiable upon principle, then the question arises whether this tax is one we ought to surrender or some other. I think, Mr. Chairman, that if gentlemen will look at the matter fairly, they will see that this is not such a tax as can be justified here and now with us, nor such as we can afford to incorporate permanently into our statutes.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order, there being an amendment to an amendment pending. The gentleman, however, can move to amend the text of the bill.

Mr. SPALDING. I will do so. I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line twenty-four hundred and sixty-eight, the following:

And not more than $6,000; and on the excess over and above $6,000, a duty of three per cent. per annum additional.

I must confess, sir, that I do not understand the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means when he says that a tax of this character is not in accordance with the principles of justice, and further, that it is "highway robbery." According to my logic, a proposition of this sort does not come within either of those categories. When we lay a general tax of five per cent. upon every man's income over the sum of $1,000, does not that take within its purview every man in the community subject to taxation? Then upon that annual revenue up to $6,000, as my amendment proposes, a tax of five per cent. is to be paid—not by one man, but by every man in the community having that amount of income. The assessment is equal. The amendment further provides for an additional assessment of three per cent. upon the amount of income over $6,000. Is not this just? Is it robbery? Why, sir, we adopted the other day a provision imposing a tax upon wooden bowls and upon corn brooms. We are prepared, too, it seems, to tax the brave soldiers who fought our battles during the last five years in every case where the amount of income is over $1,000; but we are not prepared to say that gentlemen who have incomes of $100,000 a year shall be taxed over and above the rate which we assess upon the income of the man of very moderate means. Now, as I have said time and again upon this floor, the tax is equal while the means of payment are unequal. The man who has the higher income has the greater means of payment and feels the tax less. The difference is in his favor. The poor man, to the extent of his modicum, pays his full tax. If he had a larger income he would of course be happy to pay the increased tax. Not so with the millionaires. They fix upon a moderate income of $5,000, and say, "Here we take our stand and set the tax-gatherer at defiance, because it would be inequality, it would be injustice, it would be highway robbery to make us pay from our overflowing coffers a trifle upon the excess above what is required to meet the necessary demands of life." Why, sir, I cannot see upon what ground, in morals or in ethics or in logic, the argument of my learned friend from Vermont has a resting-place. There is nothing in it in reason, nothing in it in justice. And I trust that the reflecting men upon this floor will ponder well before they can be induced to change the very equitable mode of assessment which we adopted here two years ago, and which did make some difference between the rich man and the man of moderate means.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] and I do so because I do not think it at all equitable. I do not think the amendment would make the tax bear equally upon all men, without regard to race or color. Now, sir, the matter is just this; and I want the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] to this proposition: we will suppose there are two men living neighbors to each other; the income of one is $5,900, of the other it is $6,100, a difference of just $200 between their incomes. They are neighbors, engaged in the same business, and occupying the same position and standing in the community. But you tax the one at the rate of five per cent., while you tax the other, with only $200 more income, at the rate of ten per cent. That is the way it works; you tax the man because he has the money.

Now, I want to defend the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] from the "highway robbery" charge. He did not say that it was highway robbery to take this tax; but he said that it was upon the same principle that the highway robber practices. And it is precisely as he stated. The highway robber goes out upon the highway, seizes a man by the throat, and says to him, "Your money or your life." The man looks at him and says, "Well, you cannot get any money from me, for I have none." The robber lets him go. But the next man he meets, and to whom says, "Your money or your life," must disgorge because he happens to have some money. Now, the highway robber never robs the man who has no money. He treats them all alike; he takes money where it is, and where it is not he does not take it. Now, in my opinion we better treat all men alike in this matter of taxation. If one man is more economical than another, and saves more money, and so at the end of some years is in possession of more income in consequence of such economy, I do not think he should be punished for that which should be considered a virtue. They should all be treated alike, without reference to the incomes they may have.

Mr. SLOAN. I move pro formâ to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] by striking out the word "four" and inserting the word "three."

Mr. SPALDING. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SLOAN] yield to me a moment for the purpose of modifying my amendment?

Mr. SLOAN. I prefer not to yield now, as I have but five minutes. I was surprised to hear the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] indulge in such strong expressions as he used. He says that the proposed change in this tax could not be defended upon principle, and that it amounted to a robbery of a certain designated class of people. Now, I suppose if a perfectly just system of taxation could be devised and put in force, every man would be taxed just in proportion to his ability to pay the tax; not perhaps in proportion to the amount of property he may have, or what he may produce, but in proportion to his ability to pay his tax; in proportion to the excess which he has left after meeting all the legitimate demands upon him. Now, throughout the consideration of this bill the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has resisted strenuously all propositions to relieve from taxation many articles the tax upon which is oppressive and burdensome to the industry of the country. The tax upon those articles tends to depress and check the business and enterprise of the country. Here is a tax where we allow a liberal income of $5,000 to be taxed at the common rate to which all are liable. On the excess beyond that amount a higher rate of tax is imposed.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that debate is exhausted upon the amendment moved by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] to the amendment moved by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PIKE,] and that the subsequent amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] is therefore out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] is an amendment to the text proposed to be stricken out by the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PIKE,] and therefore it takes precedence of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. ROSS.]

Mr. HALE. I would ask the Chairman how many amendments are now pending before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. PIKE] to be to strike out a portion of the original text. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] moves an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine. Pending those amendments, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] proposes to amend the matter proposed to be stricken out by the amendment of the gentleman from Maine. That amendment takes precedence of the other amendments, as being for the purpose of perfecting the text proposed to be stricken out. And the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio itself open to an amendment which has been proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. SLOAN.] Thus four amendments can be pending at the same time: an amendment to strike out and insert, and an amendment to that amendment; an amendment to amend the matter proposed to be stricken out, and an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. SLOAN. The main objection urged to the exemption of articles from taxation, or to the reduction of the tax heretofore laid upon those articles, has been that it would reduce the revenue to a point lower than it would be wise or proper to reduce it. Now I find that in this article of income alone there are involved $17,000,000 of revenue, an amount which I suppose will cover three or four times over all the taxes which have been lost by the amendments which the committee have made in exempting from taxation or reducing the tax upon those articles of prime necessity in common use in the industry of the country. And in a year or two all of them can be relieved from that tax. There are many items in this bill where relief can be afforded more justly and more equitably and more in accordance with the interests of the whole country, than by the change proposed by the committee.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that I feel no particular interest in this question, or as to how it shall be disposed of. Perhaps I may have expressed myself a little too strongly. I did not intend to take any part in debating this question, but to let the House take its own course. I only wish to keep myself right on the record. I have been from the first opposed to the principle of the tax. Our urgent necessities during the war having ceased, I think we ought to relieve ourselves at the earliest moment from such a tax. The particular effect of it is to harass men of great enterprise in the country. I do not see how gentlemen, after they have accumulated a certain amount of property, will be willing to continue their adventures thereafter for fear of becoming subject to the tax. It will have the effect, too, of creating absenteeism. When men have acquired a large fortune they will be very apt to go elsewhere to expend it. That is all I have to say on that point.

Mr. SLOAN, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. PAINE. I renew the amendment. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has pronounced the proposed amendment before the House discriminating in favor of incomes below $1,000 and against those above that amount to be unjust and wrong. I am sorry. If that be robbery, he has come into this House with his garments stained all over with robbery. I take it he does not disapprove the bill he himself introduced. I take it he approves that provision which requires a man worth $1,001 a year to pay a tax of five per cent. per annum, and yet exempts his neighbor who may only be worth $999 from the payment of any tax whatever. If this be robbery to make it ten per cent. above a certain amount, what will be said of that discrimination which compels a man to pay a tax when his income is over $1,000 and relieves him from taxation entirely when below that amount? But there is no robbery in either case. If the gentleman desires to put himself right on the record, let him wipe out what he has already written in this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to read to the committee a few paragraphs from a little work—Report of the United States Revenue Commission—which I presume is the vide mecum of the Committee of Ways and Means. Let me read from page 17:

"The remedy, therefore, for the difficulties above pointed out and illustrated, save in a few striking instances, which have probably resulted from oversight in the framing of the law, must, in the opinion of the commission, be sought for in such a revision of the internal revenue system as will look to an entire exemption of the manufacturing industry of the United States from all direct taxation. (distilled and fermented liquors, tobacco, and possibly a few other articles excepted.) This the commission are unhesitatingly prepared to recommend."

Then let me read from the bottom of the same page:

"Assuming, then, that the policy indicated—which we may here restate in brief to be the abolition or speedy reduction of all taxes which tend to check development, and the retention of all those which, like the income tax, fall chiefly upon realized wealth—" is accepted as the desirable future revenue policy of the country, the question next arises, in what manner and to what extent can it be carried out, and at the same time insure to the Government a revenue adequate to its necessities?"

Now turn to page 27 of the same report:

"Incomes.—In respect to the income tax the commission have not, from want of time, been able to give this subject the attention which its importance demands. Although in many respects an obnoxious tax, yet, failing as it does mainly on accumulation, it will probably be sustained with less detriment to the country than any other form of taxation, the excise on spirituous and fermented liquors and tobacco excepted. The discrimination at present in the rate levied on incomes under and in excess of $5,000 is, however, unjust, being in fact a tax on the results of successful industry and business enterprise; and the commission recommend that this discrimination be abrogated, and the rate be equalized at five per cent."

You must not tax industry, but must tax the results of industry; and then further on they say you must not tax realized wealth. It is impossible to frame a tax bill from such contradictory recommendations as these.

Mr. DAVIS. I oppose the amendment, and I do it for the purpose of saying that I believe the action of this House would be very unwise if we discriminate on the subject of tax on incomes. If there is any principle settled in our Government it is that of uniform privileges. It runs through the Federal Constitution and it runs through every State constitution. And, sir, but for the exigencies the war imposed upon us I do not think we would at the last Congress have departed from that system. The capital of this country should be protected. It should be invited to investments of enterprise and industry. If we discriminate against capital we interpose obstacles to business, because if men are successful we tax them unfairly and unjustly. Why should a man, on the principle which is advocated here, who owns a farm of five hundred acres, not be taxed five times as much per acre as the man who owns a farm of fifty acres? That is the principle that is involved here. You discriminate in consequence of the amount of property which a man holds. You take away from the accumulation of industry that which would go into capital except for the interference of the Government. You turn that portion of the capital over to the coffers of the Government. You thus derange and decrease the business of the country. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. PAINE. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PIKE. I renew it. When I was interrupted before I was about to make a proposition which I think the Committee of Ways and Means will accept, and that is to strike out this section and the next three succeeding sections, and allow this whole matter to go over until next year. The tax for this year is already assessed. The instructions have already gone out. The change of law will not affect it in any particular, either in the assessment or collection. This Congress adjourns, finally, on the 4th of March next. There will be abundant time to regulate this matter between the 4th of March, when Congress adjourns, and the 1st of May, when the tax is assessed. In the mean time we shall have the benefit of the experience during the vacation. The revenue commission has come to the conclusion, and it is the same conclusion to which we have all come, that the amounts to be realized from the assessments made in this bill are exceedingly uncertain. They depend upon business to be done hereafter, and whether or not the expectations of the Committee of Ways and Means will be realized, or the revenue fall very far short of the calculations made by the Committee of Ways and Means, nobody knows. Perhaps one intelligent gentleman here can guess as well as another, but the experience which we shall have between now and the next 4th of March will determine this problem. It would be wise, then, to postpone the whole matter until next session. If the House does not assent to this proposition, I hope that they will assent to my amendment, which will continue the present law except to exempt incomes up to $1,000.

I have one word to say in reply to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] I cited the example of England in this matter of income tax. I did it because British legislation has always been of a conservative character with regard to property, and no man can be accused of demagoguism or of pandering unduly to the popular taste who follows the conservative example of British legislation. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means replies to me that they have rank there, that they have lords and commons, a queen and dukes, barons and knights. Now, if the income tax under British legislation was assessed in proportion to rank, the argument would be a good one, but, as he well knows, some of these lords and barons are as poor as church mice; they are entirely barren of income, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] suggests, [laughter;] and consequently the reply made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is entirely mal à propos. Now, I have to say one word further. When the gentleman says that the Committee of Ways and Means in reporting this bill make no distinctions in rank, I reply that they have made two ranks—one is the great mass of the people who have less than $1,000 income, and the other rank is that smaller class of people who have an income of more than $1,000. I propose simply to add to the number of ranks, and make another over $5,000. Will the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means tell me the difference in principle?

Mr. MORRILL. I will answer the gentleman, although if he had noticed what I have said heretofore he would have already known what the answer is. As I said to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE,] we conceived that there was an inability on the part of a person with a small income, and who has a family to support, to pay any income tax. He must first support his family, and therefore we exempt $1,000 for every man or family. That, I think, is a sufficient reason. The other point which the gentleman from Wisconsin alluded to, I think is "point no point"—that in reference to the exemption among manufacturers to the amount of $1,000. The party, it will be remembered, has to sell his goods in the same market with all the rest of the country; and he gets the same price for those goods; and whatever is exempted is really a bonus given to the parties, on the same principle that we except $1,000 of income because of the inability of those small manufacturers to pay the tax. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. PIKE] alluded to the fact that the income tax in England is not assessed in proportion to rank or title. Does not the gentleman know that the titled aristocracy of England own nearly all the land of England? I do not remember the precise number of land-owners there, but I think it is not beyond thirty thousand in the entire kingdom; and it is from this source, from rents, that the largest incomes are there derived. If the gentleman had investigated the subject he would have ascertained, also, that while formerly they had different rates of income tax in England, the present law is a uniform law, imposing the same tax upon all incomes.

Mr. PIKE. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I renew it. A point has been made in favor of a discrimination between incomes up to $5,000 or $10,000, and incomes in excess of one or the other of those sums by a reference to the exemptions of incomes under $1,000; and it has been strenuously contended by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE,] by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PIKE,] and by other gentlemen, that the fact that incomes up to $1,000 are exempt from all tax is of itself a recognition of the principle that discriminations may be made according to the amount of the income of the party. With all deference to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, who has given his reason for that exemption up to the amount of $1,000, it strikes me that he has failed to give the true reason for it, and the one which removes it entirely from the line of argument which these gentlemen have adopted. I apprehend that the reason why incomes up to the amount of $600 under the present law, and $1,000 under the proposed law, are exempt from tax is not that the possessors of small incomes are unable to pay a tax, but that the law intended that the average amount understood to be necessary for the support of a family should not be taxed. It was understood, two or three years ago, that $600 was probably the average of the expense for the support of a family; now it is considered that $1,000 is probably that average; and it is proposed to exempt that amount, not as a discrimination in favor of the poor man as against the rich man, but as the average expense of the support of a family to every man throughout the country; in other words, it is not a discrimination; it applies equally to every man; it is only incomes above that amount of average expenses that are subject to taxation.

Now, I put it to this committee whether there is on principle any sound reason whatever why a man possessing an income of $100,000, if you please, should pay more than his ratio, his percentage on that income, more than the man with an income of $5,000 pays? Sir, I do not believe it is equal or just. We have the power to do it, as we have the power to go further and say that if a man has an income of over $5,000 the country shall take the whole. I do not know why it might not as well be done in that form as in the form proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, who runs the tax up by hundreds and thousands, increasing the grade until you get up to twenty-five per cent. I ask the gentleman, why does he not say that when a man's income exceeds $80,000 he shall pay fifty per cent., when it exceeds $100,000 he shall pay one hundred per cent., and when it exceeds $200,000 he shall pay two hundred per cent.? It does seem to me that the principle upon which these taxes have always been assessed has been upon a principle of equality. In our local taxation, our State taxation, we do not say that a man who holds real estate or personal property beyond a certain amount shall pay a greater percentage upon his property than the man who holds a less amount. I submit that however gentlemen may treat this argument it simply results in the proposition that the rich men being in the minority shall have injustice done to them. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. SPALDING.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 453) for the relief of Cornelius B. Gold, late acting assistant paymaster United States Navy.

STATE LAWS CONCERNING FREEDMEN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In answer to a resolution of the House, of the 27th ultimo, requesting a collation of the provisions in relation to freedmen contained in the amended constitutions of the southern States, and in the laws of those States passed since the suppression of the rebellion, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, to whom the resolution was referred.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 22, 1866.

The message, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the joint committee on reconstruction, and ordered to be printed.

CLERKS IN TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, made in compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, of the 7th instant, asking for information in respect to clerks employed in the several Executive Departments of the Government.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 22, 1866.

The message and accompanying document were referred to the select committee on the civil service of the United States, and ordered to be printed.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pending paragraph of the special order terminate in one half minute after the committee shall resume the consideration of the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. SPALDING.

Mr. SPALDING. I will withdraw my amendment, as I mistook the scope of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. PIKE.] I greatly prefer his amendment to my own, as he proposes to leave the law as it now stands, with the single change of exempting $1,000 instead of $600.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. ROSS to the amendment of Mr. PIKE.

The amendment of Mr. ROSS was as follows:

Insert after the words "a duty of five per cent. on the excess over $1,000" the following:

And not exceeding $10,000; and a duty of ten per cent. per annum on the excess over $10,000 and not exceeding $20,000; and a duty of fifteen per cent. per annum on the excess over $20,000 and not exceeding $40,000; and a duty of twenty per cent. per annum on the excess over $40,000 and not exceeding $60,000; and a duty of twenty-five per cent. per annum on the excess over $60,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. PIKE, which was as follows:

Strike out all after the words "United States," where they first occur in the paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Of any citizen of the United States residing abroad, whether derived from any kind of property, rents, interests, dividends, or salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, a duty of five per cent. on the amount so derived over $1,000 and not exceeding $5,000; and a duty of ten per cent. on the amount exceeding $5,000; and a like duty shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the gains, profits, and income of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States and not citizens thereof.

Mr. JENCKES. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last clause, as follows:

And a like duty shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States and not citizens thereof.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

On agreeing to the amendment of Mr. PIKE, there were—ayes 61, noes 34.

Mr. HALE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HALE and PIKE were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 42.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to amend by adding at the end of the paragraph the following:

Provided, That the amount, $1,000, exempt from the duty of five per cent. by this section, shall be held to take effect upon the assessments now being made, and to be collected upon incomes for the year ending December 31, 1865.

Mr. MORRILL. This cannot be carried out. The assessment has already been made.

On agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 12, noes 55; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. ANCONA and MORRILL.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 14, noes 79.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BERGEN. I move to amend by adding at the end of the paragraph the following:

No passport shall be issued from the State Department or by any minister, chargé, or consul, to any person unless he produces the receipt for all income taxes imposed on him from 1862 to the date of his application, nor shall any passport be renewed or viséd by any minister, chargé, or consul abroad, unless the same conditions be complied with.

The amendment was not agreed to; there being—ayes fourteen, noes not counted.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the amendment last adopted the following:

And a duty of fifteen per cent. per annum on the excess over $50,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HUBBARD, of New York. I move to amend by inserting after the word "thereof" in line twenty-four hundred and seventy-five the following:

Provided, That every person, not being a householder, nor having a family residing in the United States, shall pay the aforesaid duty or tax upon the excess over $500.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to amend by adding at the end of the paragraph the following:

Provided, That on all incomes derived from labor and fixed salaries the amount so levied and collected shall not exceed three per cent.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and seventeen be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that in estimating the gains, profits, and income of any person, there shall be included all income derived from interest upon notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States; profits realized within the year from sales of real estate purchased within two years previous to the year for which income is estimated; interest received or accrued upon all notes, bonds, and mortgages, or other forms of indebtedness bearing interest, whether paid or not, if good and collectable, less the interest which has become due from said person during the year; the amount of all premium on gold and coupons; the amount of sales of live stock, sugar, wool, butter, cheese, pork, beef, mutton, or other meats, hay and grain, or other vegetable or other productions, being the growth or produce of the estate of such person, not including any part thereof consumed directly by the family; all other gains, profits, and income derived from any source whatever; and the share of any person of the gains and profits of all companies, whether incorporated or partnership, who would be entitled to the same, if divided, whether divided or otherwise, except the amount of income received from institutions or corporations whose officers, as required by law, withhold a per cent. of the dividends made by such institutions, and pay the same to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or other officer authorized to receive the same; and except the salary or pay received for services in the civil, military, naval, or other service of the United States, including Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress from which the tax has been deducted. And in estimating the gains, profits, and income of any person in addition to $1,000 exempt from income tax, all national, State, county, and municipal taxes paid within the year shall be deducted from the gains, profits, or income of the person who has actually paid the same, whether such person be owner, tenant, or mortgagor; losses on sales of real estate within the year purchased within two years previous to the year for which income is estimated; the amount actually paid for labor or interest by any person who rents lands, or hires labor to cultivate land, or who conducts any other business from which income is actually derived; the amount paid out for usual or ordinary repairs; Provided, That no deduction shall be made for any amount paid out for new buildings, permanent improvements, or betterments, made to increase the value of any property or estate; And provided further, That only one deduction of $1,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of all the members of any family, composed of one or both parents, and one or more minor children, or husband and wife; that guardians shall be allowed to make such deduction in favor of each and every ward, except that in case where two or more wards are comprised in one family, only one deduction shall be made in their favor; and that no deduction shall be allowed in favor of persons described as "trustees" under existing laws.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I move to amend by adding at the end of the paragraph the following:

And provided further, That when any person or persons, whose annual income from all sources does not exceed $1,000, shall be possessed of any shares of stock or interest in any institution or corporation whose officers have withheld, as required by law, a per cent. of the dividends made by such institutions, and paid the same to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or other officer authorized to receive the same, such person or persons shall be permitted to prove and declare, under oath or affirmation, the amount of their said annual income, and to show by certificate of the officers of said institution or corporation, the amount so withheld and paid over to them, whereupon the assistant assessor, if he shall be satisfied with the proof, shall certify the same to the collector of the district, who shall repay to the person or persons entitled the amount so withheld and paid.

Mr. Chairman, the object and necessity of this amendment will be apparent at a glance. The present law has in its practical operation borne most unjustly and partially upon a class of persons who are least able to suffer such injustice. If it is the purpose of this House to exempt incomes less than $1,000, that object should be carried into practical effect. But it is well known that there is a large class of persons of small incomes who have not, under the present law received the benefit of the $600 exemption, and who will not under this bill enjoy the exemption of $1,000, unless some such amendment as that which I offer be adopted. They have been obliged to pay a tax of five per cent. upon the whole of their income. I refer especially to those whose income is derived from stocks, &c., in any corporation or institution the officers of which are required by law to withhold from the dividends, &c., of the stockholders a certain amount of tax to be paid over to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. If the amount of income from this source exceeds $1,000, the parties are afforded an opportunity of being credited with the amount; but if the income does not exceed $1,000, no such opportunity is afforded. The tax is withheld by the bank or other institution; and under the present law it is impossible for the party to recover the tax thus unjustly deducted. This system operates injuriously upon a class of persons composed almost entirely of widows and orphans, whose investments are made under the order of a court, so that they have no control over the investment. The law in its operation heretofore has presented this anomaly: that while a certain amount of income has been exempt by law these parties have been unable to get the benefit of that exemption.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, on the face of the gentleman's proposition it seems to be somewhat fair, but the difficulties of carrying it into effect, if passed, are almost insuperable. In the first place, there are few people who own bank stock to the amount of $1,000 who do not own something else. If any injustice be done by the provision in the bill, it will then only be in a very small number of cases. If we inserted the amendment into the law, it would give an opportunity to a great many readjustments, and it would lead to so many difficulties that I hope it will not be adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THAYER. I move after the word "favor" in line twenty-five hundred and thirty-four to strike out to the end of the sentence, as follows:

And that no deduction shall be allowed in favor of persons described as "trustees" under existing laws.

Mr. Chairman, I move this amendment for the purpose of enabling me to ask some gentleman on the Committee of Ways and Means to explain what this means. I want the gentlemen of the committee to explain what this provision means which excludes trustees from the privilege of making in favor of the cestui que trust the deductions others are entitled to make by law. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts to explain it.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that that was introduced at the request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who assigned a very good reason for it, but which has escaped my attention at the present time.

Mr. THAYER. I must insist on my amendment, as I have no idea of "going it blind" on the statement of any person.

Mr. HALE. What does the gentleman mean by "going it blind?" It is a thing strange to me.

Mr. THAYER. It is one of the expressions of the day, and means voting for a thing on the say-so of some other person when you do not know who the person is or what he says. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I have no recollection of the provision or that it was adopted in committee.

Mr. MORRILL. It may be a proper provision as I understand it, without remembering the explanation furnished by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The guardian of the estate should pay the amount due without any deduction. A trustee should not get a deduction on his own account and on account of his trust also.

Mr. THAYER. Of course not. That is not the point affected by these words. The paragraph specifies that guardians shall make these deductions in favor of their wards, and then it says trustees shall not make these deductions. It says trustees under a deed, marriage settlement, or in any other way, shall not make these deductions. I ask the reason for it.

Mr. STEVENS. It is unreasonable, and there is no reason for it. [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I move the following amendment:

On page 110, line twenty-five hundred and twenty-three, after the word "repairs," add:

And ordinary expenses when absent from home relative to matters connected with the business, trade, or profession of such person.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment at the request of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER.] If he were here he would doubtless explain the object of it much better than I can. I think it is in harmony with this part of the bill as proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means. It is well known that persons engaged in business are compelled to go abroad to promote the interests of the business in which they are engaged. A merchant, for instance, goes from home to purchase his goods. The judges of the court in my State are compelled to travel from county to county, and receive $2,000, out of which they are compelled to pay $500 and more for traveling expenses. I think this deduction should be allowed.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRILL. I move, in line twenty-five hundred and forty-seven, after the word "except" to insert the words "that portion of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move, before the word "loss," in line twenty-five hundred and seventeen, to insert these words:

Loss actually sustained during the year arising from fire, shipwreck, or incurred in trade, or debts ascertained to be worthless, but excluding all estimated depreciation of values, and.

I offer this for the purpose of determining what loss may be deducted in addition to those now specified by the law. Last year it was held by the Commissioner that no loss should be deducted from the income which was not incurred in some business out of which the party derived a profit, and where the loss incurred overbalanced the amount of profit. Now, I propose to extend that so that all losses from the causes mentioned, either by fire or shipwreck, or incurred in trade, shall be deducted from the income. I think there can be no objection to it, and I believe the Committee of Ways and Means concur in the propriety of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend by inserting after line twenty-five hundred and thirty-six the following:

Provided, That any gains and profits of any company, association, or partnership which shall be returned and the tax thereon paid before the same shall be divided, shall to the amount on which such tax has been paid be exempt from tax when afterward divided.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I believe that is already provided for in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not find any such provision in it.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BERGEN. I move to amend by striking out the words "labor or" in line twenty-five hundred and nineteen, and by inserting after the word "interest" the words "and the actual cost of labor;" so that the clause will read:

The amount actually paid for interest and the actual cost of labor by any person who rents lands, or hires labor to cultivate land, or who conducts any other business from which income is actually derived.

The object of the amendment is this: as it now stands the farmer hiring men who board themselves charges their entire wages in his income account, while his neighbor who boards his own men and pays them ten dollars a month can charge but the ten dollars in his account. There should be an equality about it. The actual cost of the labor should be put in the bill in such a shape that the board might be reckoned in the one case as well as the other.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend by inserting after the word "purchased" in line twenty-four hundred and eighty-six the words "within the year or;" so as to make it grammatical, as follows:

Profits realized within the year from sales of real estate purchased within the year or within two years previous to the year for which the income is estimated.

Mr. MORRILL. No objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I now move to insert after the word "family" in line twenty-five hundred and thirty-three the words "and have joint property interests;" so that it will read:

Except that in case where two or more wards are comprised in one family and have joint property interests only one deduction shall be made in their favor.

This proviso in the case of wards as it now stands seems to be ambiguous. "Except that in case where two or more wards are comprised in one family." That means, I suppose, simply a residence with their guardian as a part of one family. I presume it is only intended to cover the case of those so connected by relationship or by community of property that they would constitute what would be considered as one family for the purpose of taxation only, and that I think is properly reached by the amendment I propose. Not that their property shall be necessarily all joint property, but if they have any joint property interests and are members of one family they shall have exemption. On the other hand, if they have no joint property interest they should be treated as individuals.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENCKES. I move an amendment in order to meet a point not covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr.

WILSON,] to insert in line twenty-five hundred and eighteen, after the words "two years," the words "or upon sales of other property;" so that the clause will read:

Losses on sales of real estate within the year purchased within two years or upon sales of other property purchased more than two years previous to the year for which income is estimated.

The amendment already adopted excludes estimated depreciation of property, but does not cover actual losses from the sale of property purchased to be held as investments, or of which the title is derived in some other way more than two years previous.

Mr. GARFIELD. That would never do. It would allow a purchase twenty years ago to come in.

Mr. JENCKES. Not at all.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move to insert after the word "estimated," in line twenty-five hundred and nineteen, as follows:

But the term real estate as herein used shall not be deemed to include mining stocks or mining claims where the paramount title of the lands on which the mines or claims are situated is in the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It seems to me the gentleman is not accomplishing what he desires. This is a deduction. I suppose he does not desire that mining stock shall not be included in the deduction.

Mr. BIDWELL. My object is to prevent men from deducting losses incurred in mining claims and mining stocks, calling it real estate.

Mr. GARFIELD. The language of the amendment is "mining stocks or mining claims where the paramount title of the lands is in the United States." As a matter of course they would not be considered real estate. Mining stock never was considered real estate. The terms are so vague and indefinite that I think we ought not to incorporate them in the law—certainly not "mining stock."

Mr. BIDWELL. If I am correctly informed, there is a large number of persons who are escaping the payment of just taxes by saying that their losses in mining should be deducted from their sales of real estate. It is for the purpose of saving to the Government the revenue that is its just due that I want this put in.

Mr. GARFIELD. The purpose of the gentleman is all right, but I think we ought not to use so indefinite a term.

Mr. BIDWELL. I am willing to let it be passed by for further consideration.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DODGE. I move to insert after the word "estimated," in line twenty-five hundred and nineteen, the following:

Provided, That money received for leases of coal, ore, or limestone lands which exhaust the freehold shall be taxed as sales and not as income.

The object of the amendment is this: there are large quantities of lands in the State of Pennsylvania, and in other States, that are leased on a royalty, coal lands, for instance, for a period of ten or fifteen years, the lessees paying ten, twelve, or fifteen cents for the coal in the ground, and in the course of ten or fifteen years the entire amount of coal is exhausted and the land is worthless. This amount received from year to year is not income but it is the proceeds of the freehold. It is the property itself. In ten years when the coal is exhausted the land in the mountains becomes worthless. It is the habit of the assessors to collect from the farmers and others who have leased these lands the amount they have received for the property. It is the very life-blood of the property that is taken. They reckon that as income. At the expiration of the ten years there is no income left, and the owner has two or three hundred acres of land rendered valueless because of the excavation below, or because it was of no value except on account of the mineral that was there.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust the amendment will not be adopted, either in substance or in form. It will be seen if it is inserted that it will make nonsense of the rest of the paragraph. But it ought not to be inserted even upon its merits. There are many similar cases. Take the farmer who raises tobacco. We may say he sells his land, because if he continues to cultivate tobacco on the same land from year to year in four years the land is worthless unless it is recuperated by putting on an amount of manure that would be equal to the value of the land.

Take the case of timber. If a man sells timber from his land he often sells off all the value there is in the land. Now, if we go into this question we shall be compelled to go much further than the gentleman proposes. Therefore I think we had better not adopt it.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to add at the end of the paragraph this additional proviso:

And provided further, That any gains and profits of any company, association, or partnership which shall be returned and the tax thereon paid before the same shall be divided, shall to the amount on which such tax has been paid be exempt from tax when afterwards divided.

I was told that that provision was already made in the bill. I find that the provision alluded to does not cover the point I had in mind at all. The provision in the bill is this:

And the share of any person of the gains and profits of all companies, whether incorporated or partnership, who would be entitled to the same, if divided, whether divided or otherwise, except the amount of income received from institutions or corporations, whose officers, as required by law, withhold a per cent. of the dividends made by such institutions, and pay the same to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or other officer authorized to receive the same.

There are many cases where the corporation cannot divide it up. But by this provision the individual stockholder is required to return the undivided profits of the company or association, and when he returns that it is considered as a part of his income and taxed, and afterward when the company or association makes the dividend the company or association must pay the tax. Now, if we would do justice and prevent the payment of the tax twice over, it seems to me the amendment I have offered should be adopted.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. If I understand the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] I can see no necessity for it. No corporation makes a return; only persons are called upon to make returns. I think his amendment would only obstruct the operation of the law, and I hope it will not be adopted.

The amendment of Mr. DAVIS was rejected.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert a provision that was omitted by mistake. It is the provision of the present law, with the change to $1,000 from $600. I move to add to the paragraph the following:

And provided further, That in cases where the salary or other compensation paid to any person in the employment or service of the United States shall not exceed the rate of $1,000 per annum, or shall be by fees, or uncertain or irregular in the amount or the time during which the same shall have accrued or been earned, such salary or other compensation shall be included in estimating the annual gains, profits, or income of the person to whom the same shall have been paid, in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and eighteen be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that it shall be the duty of all persons of lawful age to make and render a list or return, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to the assistant assessor of the district in which they reside, of the amount of their income, gains, and profits, as aforesaid; and all guardians and trustees, or any person acting in any other fiduciary capacity, shall make and render a list or return, as aforesaid, to the assistant assessor of the district in which such guardian or trustee resides, of the amount of income, gains, and profits of any minor or person for whom they act as guardian or trustee; and the assistant assessor shall require every list or return to be verified by the oath or affirmation of the party rendering it, and may increase the amount of any list or return, if he has reason to believe that the same is understated; and in case any person, guardian, or trustee shall neglect or refuse to make and render such list or return, or shall render a false or fraudulent list or return, it shall be the duty of the assessor or the assistant assessor to make such list, according to the best information he can obtain, by the examination of such person, and his books and accounts, or any other evidence, and to add fifty per cent. as a penalty to the amount of the duty due on such list in all cases of willful neglect or refusal to make and render a list or return, and in all cases of a false or fraudulent list or return having been rendered, to add one hundred per cent. as a penalty, to the amount of duty ascertained to be due, the duty and the additions thereto as penalty to be assessed and collected in the manner provided for in other cases of willful neglect or refusal to render a list or return, or of rendering a false and fraudulent return: Provided, That any party, in his or her own behalf, or as guardian or trustee, shall be permitted to declare, under oath or affirmation, the form and manner of which shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that he or she, or his or her ward or beneficiary, was not possessed of an income of $1,000, liable to be assessed according to the provisions of this act; or may declare that he or she has been assessed and paid an income duty elsewhere in the same year, under authority of the United States, upon his or her income, gains, and profits, as prescribed by law; and if the assistant assessor shall be satisfied of the truth of the declaration, shall thereupon be exempt from income duty in said district; or if the list or return of any party shall have been increased by the assistant assessor, such party may exhibit his books and accounts, and be permitted to prove and declare, under oath or affirmation, the amount of annual income liable to be assessed; but such oaths and evidence shall not be considered as conclusive of the facts, and no deductions claimed in such cases shall be made or allowed until approved by the assistant assessor. Any person feeling aggrieved by the decision of the assistant assessor in such cases may appeal to the assessor of the district, and his decision thereon, unless reversed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall be final, and the form, time, and manner of proceedings shall be subject to rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the paragraph by inserting after the words "and in case any person, guardian, or trustee shall neglect or refuse to make and render such list or return, or shall render a false or fraudulent list or return, it shall be the duty of the assessor or the assistant assessor," the following:

After notice to the party so neglecting or refusing, or making or rendering such false or fraudulent return, and after a reasonable hearing being afforded to such party.

The hour of half past four o'clock having arrived, the Speaker resumed the chair, and the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

TAX BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAVIS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. HALE, to insert after the words "and in case any person, guardian, or trustee shall neglect or refuse to make and render such list or return, or shall render a false or fraudulent list or return, it shall be the duty of the assessor or assistant assessor," the following:

After notice to the party so neglecting or refusing, or making or rendering such false or fraudulent return, and after a reasonable hearing being afforded to such party.

Mr. HALE. I do not propose to urge a vote to-night upon the amendment which I have proposed, after conversation with some of the members of the Committee of Ways and Means; but I wish to call the attention of the committee very briefly to what strikes me as a palpable defect of this paragraph, which ought to be remedied, and toward which the amendment I proposed was directed. When I proposed this amendment I did not consider it sufficient to cover the whole case. I offered it merely as pointing in that direction, and with a view of putting it into a proper form hereafter. This paragraph as it now stands corresponds in many respects with the provisions of a previous section of the act which I understand has been considered in Committee of the Whole at a time when I was not present, but which I understand has been reserved for future consideration.

In both these sections—the fourteenth and the one now under consideration—very vague, general, and loose language is used, which is upon its face susceptible of what strikes me at least as very dangerous constructions. This paragraph provides that an assistant assessor may increase the amount of a list or return, if he has reason to believe that the amount is understated. It provides that in case of refusal to make a return he may prepare a return according to the best information he can obtain. It provides that, if he shall come to the conclusion that a party has rendered a false or fraudulent list or return, he shall have power to make a new return for the party. It does not provide in terms that he shall give any notice or hearing to the party interested in either of these cases; but it does provide that he may go on and impose a penalty, in the one instance of fifty per cent., and in the other of one hundred per cent. It has come within my personal knowledge that it has been assumed by assistant assessors that they have power on ex parte evidence, without any hearing of the party, to make up a corrected return in lieu of what they have been pleased to consider a false and fraudulent return, and to impose a penalty for such false and fraudulent return.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HALE. For the purpose of concluding what I desire to say, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. Now, sir, I do not believe that such a construction of this paragraph was contemplated by the framers of the law. I doubt if that be the fair construction of the paragraph as it stands. If that be the proper construction of the paragraph, I certainly have no doubt that it is in violation of every principle of law, and it is, I believe, an unconstitutional provision. I therefore wish that this section and the fourteenth section, both upon the same general subject, and both seeking to attain the same general end, shall be so modified as to provide for a proper hearing, and a proper examination, both in the case where a person neglects to make a return, and where a person is charged with making a false return, and that in the latter case the question may be brought before a competent tribunal which shall have power, according to the Constitution, and according to settled principles of law, to impose the penalty which the law seeks to impose.

In conformity, therefore, to the suggestions which have been made by other members of the Committee of the Whole, including some members of the Committee of Ways and Means, I will, if it be acceptable to the committee, withdraw my amendment, with the understanding that this paragraph shall pass over for further consideration in connection with the fourteenth section, which has already been passed. I trust that a carefully prepared and proper substitute may be found both for this paragraph and for that, so that the objections which I have pointed out may be obviated.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the understanding that this paragraph shall be reserved for action hereafter?

Mr. ALLISON. I will not object, if it be understood that it shall be open to amendment with reference only to the points presented by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE. I desire that it should be amended purely with reference to the machinery of the act—the manner of making returns and imposing penalties.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, such will be the understanding.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and nineteen be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that the duties on incomes herein imposed shall be levied on the 1st day of May, and be due and payable on or before the 30th day of June, in each year, until and including the year 1870, and no longer; and to any sum or sums annually due and unpaid after the 30th of June, as aforesaid, and for ten days after notice and demand thereof by the collector, there shall be levied in addition thereto the sum of ten per cent. on the amount of duties unpaid, as a penalty, except from the estates of deceased and insolvent persons.

Mr. GARFIELD. With the consent of the committee, I desire to offer an amendment to the previous paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by inserting at the end of line twenty-five hundred and ninety-six the following:

Provided further, That the list of incomes in the office of the assessor and collector shall be open to the inspection of the public; but neither the assessor nor collector shall furnish such list or any portion thereof for publication, nor permit the same to be copied for publication.

Mr. Chairman, one feature of the internal revenue law which has made it very odious indeed in many parts of the country, and perhaps justly so, is that provision under which the business of every man has been dragged into public view through the newspapers. This has very much disturbed the relations of business men toward each other. It has subjected men's affairs to what no man would willingly consent to. We all know that the reason why in the present law facilities were afforded for the publication of these lists was the apprehension that there might otherwise be in many cases a failure to make the proper return of income. But, sir, it is believed that the same object can be secured by providing that these lists shall be open to the inspection of the public, so that any man who desires to ascertain what income return his neighbor has made can have access to the list, but that the list shall not be furnished systematically for publication, and be paraded in the press simply to gratify public curiosity.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to the opinion that the amendment ought not to pass, and for the very good reason that in my mind the publication of the amount given in by persons upon which they pay income tax has been increased from the fact that they knew it would be published. If a man makes a fair and honest return he has no objection to its being made known. If he does not make a fair and honest return then everybody ought to know it. It is different in allowing it to be published in the newspapers and in allowing men to go and see it. Not one man in five hundred will go into the office to see what the returns are. It will be poking his nose into every man's business. If it is in the newspapers every man will see it. Men will put in a larger income if they know it is to be published in the newspapers. An honest man has no objection to the world seeing what he does. A dishonest man may not want his return to be made public.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa is mistaken when he says an honest man has no objection to the public understanding about his private affairs. Suppose a man has had serious losses during the year, so that his income would be smaller than people expect it to be. Now, he would not want to let that be known so as to alarm his creditors and bring them all down upon him when otherwise he would come out safely. There is no reason in the world, unless the public interests require, that the private affairs of individuals should be brought out and paraded in the public papers. I admit that some sort of publicity is necessary to act as a pressure upon men to bring out their full incomes, but if the lists are left open for public inspection it will be an ample pressure upon them. I do not agree with the gentleman from Iowa that not one in five hundred would go to look at the lists. I know they do go now. If a man comes up to the county seat he is sure to inquire what is the income of his neighbors. I am satisfied it is all the publicity necessary to effect the purpose without having the offensive feature. I am desirous of making the laws as efficient as possible without making them odious. I believe the feature I am now discussing is unnecessarily odious. I think my amendment will take away that odious feature. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out the last word, simply to say in response to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] who thinks no honest man can have any objection to his affairs being published to the world, it strikes me there are two classes of honest men who may have objection to the publication in the newspapers of their incomes: the one class being those who have large incomes and the other those who have not. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. I trust the committee will observe the argument used for the purpose of keeping this information out of the papers. The first class, those who have large incomes, the gentleman says will object to have them published in the papers. He does not say why they will object. We have only his ipse dixit. He says the other class who have small incomes will object to it; he does not tell us why. It is a matter of opinion.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] says a man who is in a failing business does not want the world to know it. If he is in a failing condition his creditors will know it without publication in the papers. But that is an extreme case, and when the gentleman has to resort to that sort of argument to bolster up his amendment he has a bad case. If you pass the amendment you will lose millions of dollars on that one item. I repeat, that an honest man has no objection to the world seeing his affairs at any time. If he is in a bad condition he has only to make the best of it. If the man is dishonest the world should know it.

Mr. HALE, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I move to strike out the words "nor permit the same to be copied for publication," so that the amendment shall simply provide that the officer shall not furnish lists for publication. I would be glad if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] would accept that amendment. It seems that there is nobody on the other side to-night to raise the constitutional question. When anything good is to be done, or anything bad is to be stopped, we always hear from the other side that it is not constitutional. And I had looked for some gentleman over there to raise that question in regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, to say that all the proceedings of this Government, except the secret sessions of the Senate, are public. The newspapers of the country are the eyes of the country. And if the editors and their correspondents are to be denied access to these records for the purpose of giving them publicity the public can have no real information upon the subject.

Take a district like the one I have the honor to represent, two hundred miles in length, with the office of the assessor at one end of the district and the office of the collector at the other. How are the people to know who of their neighbors are returning proper incomes, when their returns have been given in and sent off one hundred and fifty or two hundred miles? Are they all to go that distance and examine the records, for the purpose of ascertaining whether their neighbors are cheating the Government and compelling them to pay too much? Or are their neighbors who wish to guard them in the same respect to travel two hundred miles to look over the records? Let the editor who resides in the town where the assessor has his office, send his clerk if he chooses or go himself and copy from the records. That I think is constitutional; it is free speech and nothing else.

Now, if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] wants to place a padlock on the records, I warrant you that every wealthy man in the House will vote with him on this subject. If the gentleman wants to put a padlock on the return which the wealthy man makes, so that the poor man shall not see it, though the burden will fall upon him if the rich man does not pay his full share, then let him say so. But if he is willing that the public, if they go to the trouble to have it copied, shall have this record published, then I hope he will accept my amendment to his amendment, as it will still leave all of his amendment that is valuable, and will give the public an opportunity to know what is going on.

Mr. MORRILL. There are just two policies to be adopted in this matter: one is to provide that these lists shall not be published in the newspapers; the other is to allow them to be so published. If the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTFIELD] prevails, of course these lists are to be published as they have been hitherto. I think there have been few instances, when they have been heretofore published, that the collector or the assessor has been at the trouble and labor of furnishing a copy of the list. But the officer has permitted the newspaper reporter to take a copy. I must say that I feel somewhat indifferent in regard to this subject. But the argument upon the question has not been fully stated. There is no question that the publication of these lists has a tendency to increase the revenue. But is an inconvenience, and causes a great deal of complaint, not only among the wealthy, but among those who have moderate incomes. If a man has been doing a disastrous business, either in a mercantile or a manufacturing line of business, he does not quite like to have the fact immediately published to the world. If, on the contrary, he has been doing a very prosperous business, he does not like to have that fact published, because it might lead to serious competition.

Now, if we are to have any change at all, it should go at least as far as the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] If we are to have no change, then we can vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio or adopt the amendment proposed to that amendment by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOTFIELD.]

The question was upon the amendment to the amendment, to strike out the words "nor permit the same to be copied for publication."

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. GARFIELD's amendment.

Mr. SPALDING. Is it in order to move to amend the amendment by striking out "neither" and "nor" and inserting "either" and "or" in lieu thereof?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. SPALDING. Then I make that motion.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to amend by inserting the words "but shall not prevent the same from being copied for publication."

The question was put; and there were—ayes 30, noes 45; no quorum voting.

Mr. SLOAN. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. GARFIELD's amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. GARFIELD and SPALDING were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes fifty-six, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BERGEN. I move to insert at the end of the paragraph the following:

No passport shall be issued from the State Department, or by any minister, chargé, or consul, to any person unless he produces the receipt or other sufficient proof thereof for the payment of all income taxes imposed upon him from 1862 to the date of his application. Nor shall any passport be renewed or viséed by any minister, chargé, or consul abroad, unless the same condition be complied with.

Mr. MORRILL. I make the point of order that that amendment has once been offered and voted down.

Mr. BERGEN. Not as an amendment to this section.

Mr. MORRILL. I would say to the gentleman that his amendment is entirely impracticable, because one half of the people do not have any income at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The amendment is now offered to another section of the bill.

Mr. BERGEN. The object of this section is to catch dodgers. [Laughter.] I hold that every American citizen ought to pay his fair share toward the support of the Government. Now, many go to Europe and remain there to evade paying their share of the expenses of the Government. They claim the protection of the Government while they are there. When they are compelled to travel from place to place they call upon our ministers and other agents for passports. They then ask the assistance of our Government. The only way that I can see in which we can catch these parties and make them pay their share of our taxation is to refuse them passports until they have paid their share of our taxes. If my amendment would not reach such parties, I hope some member of the committee who is more conversant with the matter than I am will so amend it as to put the matter in such condition that they will be reached.

Mr. MORRILL. I hardly think that we should gather any very great increase of revenue from the provision of the gentleman if it should be adopted, and I think it is wholly impracticable. A passport is not so essential in visiting foreign countries that every person needs one. I do not think that one half of the persons going abroad stop to think of the necessity of taking a passport; and it will be noticed that this amendment applies to every one. Whether the party pays an income tax or not, he must show a receipt that he has paid one every year for the past four years.

Mr. BERGEN. I call for tellers on my amendment.

Tellers were not ordered.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. On page 114, in line twenty-six hundred and eight, I move to strike out the word "and" and insert "or" in lieu thereof; so that it will read:

And to any sum or sums annually due and unpaid after the 30th of June, as aforesaid, and for ten days after notice and demand thereof by the collector there shall be levied in addition thereto the sum of ten per cent. on the amount of duties unpaid, as a penalty, except from the estates of deceased or insolvent persons.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and twenty be amended by striking out the proviso to said section and inserting in lieu thereof the following: Provided, That the tax or duty upon the dividends of life insurance companies shall not be deemed due until such dividends are payable; nor shall the portion of premiums returned by mutual life insurance companies to their policy holders, nor the annual or semi-annual interest allowed or paid to the depositors in savings banks be considered as dividends.

That section one hundred and twenty-three be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all salaries of officers or payments for services to persons in the civil, military, naval, or other employment or service of the United States, including Senators and Representatives and Delegates in Congress, when exceeding the rate of $1,000 per annum, a duty of five per cent. on the excess above the said $1,000; and it shall be the duty of all paymasters and all disbursing officers under the Government of the United States, or in the employ thereof, when making any payments to officers and persons as aforesaid, or upon settling and adjusting the accounts of such officers and persons, to deduct and withhold the aforesaid duty of five per cent., and shall, at the same time, make a certificate stating the name of the officer or person from whom such deduction was made, and the amount thereof, which shall be transmitted to the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and entered as part of the internal duties; and the pay-roll, receipts, or account of officers or persons paying such duty as aforesaid, shall be made to exhibit the fact of such payment. And it shall be the duty of the several Auditors of the Treasury Department, when auditing the accounts of any paymaster or disbursing officer, or any officer withholding his salary from moneys received by him, or when settling or adjusting the accounts of any such officer, to require evidence that the duties or taxes mentioned in this section have been deducted and paid over to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue: Provided, That payments of prize money shall be regarded as income from salaries, and the duty thereon shall be adjusted and collected in like manner.

Mr. MORRILL. On page 115, in line twenty-six hundred and thirty-one, I move to strike out the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the word "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In line twenty-six hundred and thirty-two, I move to strike out the word "and" before "persons" and to insert "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In line twenty-six hundred and thirty-four, after the word "and" I move to insert the word "they."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. At the end of the paragraph I move to add the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That this section shall not apply to payments made to mechanics and laborers employed upon the public works.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. In line twenty-six hundred and forty-eight I move to insert after the word "revenue" the words "or other officer authorized to receive the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out all after the word "clause" in line twenty-six hundred and twenty down to the end of the paragraph. The effect of the amendment would be to so amend the law as it now stands as to strike out the section that requires the tax to be deducted from the pay of officers in the employment of the Government and give them the privilege of making the deductions that persons not in the employ of the Government are entitled to. I cannot see the propriety of making a discrimination against persons in the employ of the Government.

Mr. MORRILL. I am delighted to see the gentleman from Pennsylvania showing such a kindly disposition toward office-holders, but I trust we shall not adopt his motion. There is, perhaps, no class better able to pay this tax than the office-holders of the country. Until there is less ambition to accept of public station, with all the duties and costs of office, I think we may very well retain this tax.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to call the attention of the committee to an amendment which I think should be made in the paragraph which we have just passed. On page 107 an amendment was made to insert the words "or savings" after "provident."

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I understood that it was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that it was not.

Mr. MORRILL. With a view to make the provisions identical, I move to insert in line twenty-six hundred and seventeen, after the word "in," the words "provident institutions or."

Mr. THAYER. I ask the gentleman to insert the words "savings institutions" also.

Mr. MORRILL. That amendment was rejected when the other section was under consideration, and I must object to it.

Mr. THAYER. I would inquire if the amendment was not adopted on page 107. The Clerk states that according to his recollection it was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerks state that the amendment was not adopted.

Mr. THAYER. It ought to have been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is any motion made in reference to the matter?

Mr. THAYER. I will ask unanimous consent to move that those words be inserted. They will not alter, in any respect, the sense; they simply adopt a term by which these institutions are known in certain parts of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the offering of such an amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. THAYER. I move, then, to amend by inserting after the word "banks," in line twenty-four hundred and forty-two, the words "or savings institutions."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend by inserting the words "or savings institutions" after the words "savings banks" in line twenty-six hundred and seventeen.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by striking out the word "duty," in line twenty-six hundred and twenty-seven, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "tax;" also, by inserting after the word "dollars," in line twenty-six hundred and twenty-eight, the words "and a tax of ten per cent. on the excess above $5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BERGEN. I move to amend by adding at the end of the paragraph the following:

It shall not be lawful for the State Department, or any minister, chargé, or consul, to issue a passport to any party, unless he produces receipts, or other satisfactory evidence of the payment of all income taxes imposed on him from 1863 to the date of his application; nor shall any passport be renewed or viséed by any minister, chargé, or consul abroad, unless the same conditions are complied with.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that if members of the House fully understand this matter, they will determine that this proposition should, in some shape or other, be adopted, so that persons may not go abroad to avoid the payment of the income tax, but that all may be compelled to contribute their just share to the support of the Government. This is the object of the amendment. It seems to me obviously proper, and I hope it will be adopted.

On agreeing to the amendment there were—ayes twenty-one, noes not counted.

Mr. BERGEN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BERGEN and PRICE were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes thirty-one, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and twenty-four be amended by inserting after the words "duty or tax" where they first occur in said section, the words "whenever the party interested in such legacy or distributive share or property or interest aforesaid shall become entitled to the possession or enjoyment thereof, or to the beneficial interest in the profits accruing therefrom, such duty or tax."

Mr. ALLISON. With a view of having a similar provision inserted in the next section, I move to amend by striking out this paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. I desire to move an amendment to section one hundred and twenty-four of the present law. The portion of the section which I wish to have amended is not incorporated in the bill before us, and I shall therefore be compelled to refer to the pamphlet edition of the amended tax law, as passed March 3, 1865. Members who have this pamphlet before them will find the section on pages 86 and 87. For the information of those who have not the section before them I will state that it provides for the taxation of legacies and distributive shares of personal property. The taxation is not uniform, but the more remote or distant the relationship of the party receiving the property to the party whose estate is to be distributed, the higher is the rate of taxation. There is no exemption from this taxation where the whole estate to be distributed amounts to $1,000, except that contained in the proviso to the section, which I will read:

Provided, That all legacies or property passing by will, or by the laws of any State or Territory, to husband or wife of the person who died possessed, as aforesaid, shall be exempt from tax or duty.

The exemption here in favor of the wife is just and humane; that in favor of the husband, who is supposed to have sufficient ability to take care of and support not only himself but the entire family, is, in my opinion, of very questionable propriety. But there is another class of persons liable to taxation under this section whose claim to exemption is at least as strong as that of the wife and mother, and much stronger than that of the husband and father; I refer to the minor children of a deceased party. I have been troubled in my own mind to find any reason which will justify the exemption of the father while the property of the children is subjected to taxation. It appears to me a sufficient calamity for a child of that age to be deprived of a parent without being subjected to taxation by the Government for the privilege of becoming an orphan. I think I am justified in saying that in a large majority of cases where the father dies the children are left with a property insufficient to provide for their education and for their support until they attain the period of their majority. I do not speak of estates where the parent dies insolvent, but where small estates, amounting to from $1,000 to $5,000, are left for distribution between the widow and the children. Where no will is made, the widow generally receives one third, while the remainder is equally divided among the children. The portion belonging to the minor children passes into the hands of trustees, executors, or guardians, the pay for whose services comes out of the children's share of the estate.

Now, sir, if there is a class of persons in the community who have a stronger claim than any others upon the justice and humanity of the Government; if there is any class on whom the hand of the Government should be laid only for the purpose of protection and not for the purpose of taxation, it is the class of persons to whom I have just referred. My own opinion is that this class of persons should be entirely exempted from taxation; but I find that such a proposition will encounter the opposition of the Committee of Ways and Means; and knowing how difficult it is to pass any amendment which that committee oppose, I have concluded to modify the proposition which I intended to offer and to submit an amendment which shall exempt from taxation the legacy or share of a minor child to the amount of $1,000. Believing that in this shape the proposition will receive the concurrence of the committee, as well as the assent and support of every member of the House, I move to amend by inserting the following:

That section one hundred and twenty-four be amended by adding thereto the following proviso: And provided further, That any legacy or share of personal property passing as aforesaid to a minor child of the person who died, possessed as aforesaid, shall be exempt from taxation or duty under this section, unless such legacy shall exceed the sum of $1,000, in which case the excess only above that sum shall be liable to such taxation or duty.

Mr. MORRILL. I am very much gratified to be able to approve the proposition of the gentleman from New York; but I am pained to inform him that he is simply proposing to reenact the existing law. To satisfy him on this point let me read from the commencement of section one hundred and twenty-four:

That any person or persons having in charge or trust as administrators, executors, or trustees, any legacies or distributive shares arising from personal property, where the whole amount of such personal property, as aforesaid, shall exceed the sum of $1,000 in actual value, &c.

Mr. HOLMES. The language there is "where the whole amount of such personal property, as aforesaid, shall exceed the sum of $1,000," and under that provision there is no exemption where the amount of the whole estate exceeds that sum. My amendment provides for an exemption to the amount of $1,000 for each child. The law, as it now is, exempts the estate where the aggregate amount before division does not exceed $1,000. If it exceeds that sum there is no exemption.

Mr. MORRILL. If that is the distinction which the gentleman makes I do not see any objection to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the amendment of my colleague [Mr. HOLMES] by striking it out and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That section one hundred and twenty-four be amended by striking out from the first subdivision thereof the words "lineal issue or;" also by inserting in the proviso, at the end of said section, after the words "husband or wife," the words "or lineal issue."

The effect of this substitute is to abolish entirely the inheritance of legacy tax in the case of lineal descendants. I conceive that this is the just and true policy. I do not believe that legacies in the line of lineal inheritance should be made the subject of taxation. I do not think that a tax of this sort is levied in the manner in which taxes ought to be levied so as to produce the least oppression. On the contrary, I believe that these taxes are felt to be more oppressive than all others. This substitute, if adopted, will leave subject to taxation all collateral inheritances and all legacies, except legacies to lineal descendants, who will receive their legacies free from tax precisely as does the husband or wife of the deceased person.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from New York will not be adopted. The tax imposed upon lineal descendants or ascendants is only one per cent. There are many large estates where all the heirs, though lineal descendants, are not mere children but full-grown men.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to make a remark or two on this subject. I agree entirely with the remarks of my learned friend from New York [Mr. HALE] in support of the amendment he has just offered. It seems to me the argument made by my friend from New York, [Mr. HOLMES], is applicable to the whole subject-matter of this section and furnishes conclusive reason why it should not be adopted. I have been at a loss to understand why the catastrophe of death should be singled out as the opportune occasion for the exercise of the governmental power of taxation. I know the idea comes from the old feudal law, from the system of relief, one of the oppressive appendages of that system, which rested upon the idea that the tenure of the individual was a tenure for life, and the fee was the ultimate property of the suzerain, so that when the ancestor died it was necessary the estate should be "lifted up" again. Hence the word "relief," from the Latin relevare.

Gentlemen propose to reenact these oppressive incidents of the feudal tenure. I do not know why it is we should avail ourselves of the most deplorable catastrophe which can occur to a family—the loss of its head—to strip the children and those who are helpless of the patrimony which would otherwise descend to them. I suppose there is no case where the life of the founder of the family is not worth more to those who depend upon him for support than the property he has, and where the family would not exchange the one for the other. This is certainly not in accordance with the humane theory announced by the gentleman from Vermont when he opened the debate. He said:

"If a horse runs away with a carriage, or a locomotive gets smashed, it seems oppressive for the Government to seize the opportunity of such misfortune for levying a fresh tax."

This is also taxing calamity. It is no more than reviving one of the oppressive appendages of the feudal ages.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTWELL. If we exempt the property of minor children it is as far as we need go. The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMES's amendment was adopted.

Mr. HOLMES. I move to insert the words "personal property." As it now reads it covers all kinds of property, real as well as personal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and twenty-five be amended by inserting after the words "United States," in the first sentence of said section, the words, "and every administrator, executor, or trustee, having in charge or trust any legacy or distributive share, as aforesaid, shall give notice thereof in writing to the assessor or assistant assessor of the district where the deceased, grantor, or bargainee last resided, within thirty days after he shall have taken charge of such trust;" and by inserting after the words "shall make out such lists and valuation as in other cases of neglect or refusal, and shall assess the duty thereon," the words "and in case of willful neglect, refusal, or false statement by such executor, administrator, or trustee, as aforesaid, he shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $1,000, to be recovered with costs of suit."

Mr. ALLISON moved the following amendment:

Strike out line twenty-six hundred and fifty-nine, and insert in lieu thereof, the following:

That section one hundred and twenty-five be amended by inserting after the words "that the tax or duty aforesaid," the following: "shall be due and payable whenever the party interested in such legacy or distributive share, or property, or interest aforesaid, shall become entitled to the possession or enjoyment thereof, or to the beneficial interest in the profits accruing therefrom, and the same;" and.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. WIESON, of Iowa. Does that affect the phraseology of the one hundred and twenty-fourth section of the original act?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If it changes the language of section one hundred and twenty-five by being made an amendment to that section, it leaves the language of section one hundred and twenty-four in the original act still remaining as the law, so that the two provisions make nonsense.

Mr. ALLISON. The original act does not provide when this tax shall be due and payable. There is no provision in the law when it becomes due and payable.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment for the purpose of suggesting to the gentleman who made the motion that it seems to me it requires some modification. Under the rule now held at the Commissioner's office, if a person is entitled to an annuity of $100 for life, the tax is assessed on the present value of that annuity and deducted by the executor from the first payment of the annuity. Now, that is palpably wrong and unjust. For instance, a widow has left to her an annuity for her support. It is what she depends upon. Under the construction now adopted at the office of the Commissioner the whole tax on the present value of the annuity is deducted from the first installment of the interest. It is all wrong. It should only come out pro rata year by year.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] proposes. We do not change the existing law except as to the time when this tax shall become due and payable. Now, it should be payable, it seems to me, at the time when the party comes into possession of the annuity. If the gentleman desires to change the law in that respect, any amendment that he will suggest to the committee will of course be considered. But I do not see why, if this tax is to be paid at once, it should not be paid upon the value of the estate at the time the beneficiary comes into possession or is entitled to receive the enjoyment of the property, whether in the shape of an annuity or of actual possession of the property.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw my amendment and substitute another, to insert after the word "thereof" in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa the words "or, in case of an annuity, payable on each installment of the said annuity as the same shall be due." I think the gentleman misapprehends what the ruling in this case is. A widow or any other person who is dependent upon an annuity for support, and who requires the payment of the first installment, is subjected to a deduction therefrom of the tax on the computed present value of the whole annuity. In other words, when a widow is to receive this year $500 for her support, and next year $500, the whole $500 for the first year is wiped out by the tax on the present value of the whole annuity, leaving her destitute.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that the amendment proposed now does not meet what the gentleman desires to remedy, because it would then subject the annuity to an annual tax equivalent to the whole value of the property, which certainly ought not to be. It would take it out every year, whereas by the existing law the property of the estate is valued, and one tax is taken out, and that is the end of it. But the gentleman proposes to take this out every year.

Mr. HALE. My proposition will take the tax of $500 out whenever $500 is payable; no more and no less.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. ALLISON, and it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and thirty-seven be amended by inserting after the words "imposed by this act" the words "shall be assessed in the collection district where the estate is situate, and."

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and thirty-eight be amended by adding thereto the words, "and every administrator, executor, or trustee, having in charge or trust any disposition of real estate or interest therein, subject to tax or duty under this act, shall give notice thereof in writing to the assessor or assistant assessor of the district where the estate is situate, within thirty days from the time when he shall have taken charge of such trust, and prior to any distribution of said real estate, together with a statement of the character and value thereof; and for willful neglect or refusal to do so, shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $500, to be recovered with costs of suit."

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the words "every administrator, executor, or trustee," in the first part of the paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof "such persons."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the words "statement of the character" in the latter part of the paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof "description;" also, to insert after the words "value thereof" the words "and the person interested therein."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. I move to amend the paragraph by inserting at the close the following:

That section forty-one be amended by striking out the following proviso: "Provided, That if the estate of the successor shall be defeated in whole or in part by its application to the payment of the debts of the predecessor, the executor, administrator, or trustee so applying it shall pay out of the proceeds of the sales so made the amount so refunded."

The provision which I propose to strike out amounts to this: that if a party who has received real estate as heir or devisee and paid the taxes upon it, by this act shall find himself dispossessed of the whole or any portion of such estate by reason of the executor or administrator selling the same to pay the debts of the "predecessor," that the executor or administrator shall pay out of the proceeds of the sale so much of the tax as is to be refunded under the provisions of this act. Now, sir, the Government has received this tax, and this is the proposition: either to take it again from the pocket of the party who has paid it once, or from the creditor whose debts are to be paid. I do not see any propriety or justice in either of the provisions. It is simply in one case selling the property of the person who has paid the tax for the purpose of refunding it to him instead of making the Government repay it, and in the other of making the creditor whose debts are to be paid contribute to the payment of the tax, as a punishment, I suppose, for collecting his debt from the estate of the "predecessor." The Government having secured the tax ought to refund it, instead of collecting it again from the "successor" or compelling an innocent creditor to pay it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think this amendment ought to be adopted. The provision as it now stands is that if a party delays asserting his title, whether it be that of mortgagee or owner, until after the succession has passed, then that party shall refund to the beneficiary the amount of tax thus paid. Now, I think that is a just provision and that it ought to pass. The Government of the United States ought not to be required to levy this tax, make the collection, and then have a mortgagee or owner of the land come in two, three, or five years afterward and assert his title.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to amend by striking out the words "shall give notice thereof in writing to" in line twenty-six hundred and eighty-two and inserting "who shall receive notice thereof in writing from;" so that it will read:

And every such person having in charge or trust any disposition of real estate or interest therein, subject to tax or duty under this act, who shall receive notice thereof in writing from the assessor or assistant assessor of the district where the estate is situate, within thirty days from the time when he shall have taken charge of such trust, and prior to any distribution of said real estate, together with a description thereof.

I think when we employ and pay an officer of the Government it is his bounden duty either to take less pay or discharge his whole duty. How would it operate where an administrator of an estate with a very limited knowledge of the law shall have been selected? As soon as the thirty days expire the officers of the law will go and complain of him, and he is at once subjected to the payment of the penalty of $500 named in the section, a part of which I have just read. We ought to use some caution in a matter of this kind, and I simply propose by my amendment to change it from devolving the duty upon the administrator, who may be ignorant of the law, and transfer it to the officer of the law, whose duty it is to see that no man escapes the performance of the duty which is required by law.

A word more and I have done. A year or two ago, when we had the Army bill up, I ventured to make the remark that there were too many tinkers about it. Now, it seems to me that that remark will apply in some measure to this bill. I fear me much that proper consideration has not been given to the various provisions of this bill. While I have the highest respect for the amiable chairman, and the competent committee who have had this matter in charge, it seems to me that in going over what we supposed to be the plain provisions of a just law, we have turned it by proposed amendments into a sort of metaphysical disquisition. And the Scotchman's definition of metaphysics, I think, will apply here: "When the mon that's listening dinna ken what the speaker means, and the mon that's speaking dinna ken what he means himsel, that's metaphysics."

Mr. SPALDING. I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. WRIGHT:]

It shall not be lawful for the State Department nor any ambassador, minister, chargé, or consul, to issue a passport to any party unless he produces receipts or other satisfactory evidence of the payment of all income taxes imposed on him from 1863 to the date of his application. Nor shall any passport be renewed or viséed by any ambassador, minister, chargé, or consul abroad, unless the same conditions are complied with.

Mr. MORRILL. While I know the resources of wit in that corner of the House to be ample, I shall regret to see the poverty of resources which will be displayed in the columns of the Daily Globe to-morrow; and therefore I must raise the point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] that it has already been voted down three or four times, and besides, it is not germane to anything now under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the ground last stated by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

Mr. SPALDING. Will my amendment be in order at another stage of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot tell when it will be in order.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. WRIGHT.

Mr. UPSON. I think the objection raised to this paragraph by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WRIGHT] is fully obviated by reading the closing sentence. The gentleman argues as if it was meant to impose a penalty on a man for neglect, when made in ignorance of the law. The last clause says that "for willful neglect or refusal so to do he shall be liable to a penalty," &c. Therefore it seems to me that his amendment is unnecessary.

The amendment of Mr. WRIGHT was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and forty-five be amended by inserting after the word "years" the words "from the time when such tax or duty shall have become due and payable."

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and fifty be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and fifty-two be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that it shall not be lawful to record any instrument, document, or paper required by law to be stamped unless a stamp or stamps of the proper amount shall have been affixed and canceled in the manner required by law; and the record of any such instrument, upon which the proper stamp or stamps aforesaid shall not have been affixed and canceled as aforesaid shall be utterly void, and shall not be used in evidence.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] whether there is any provision in this bill in relation to a title-deed which may have been left unstamped or have been improperly stamped through inadvertence.

Mr. MORRILL. There is a provision elsewhere in this bill providing that the deed may be stamped within a year.

Mr. DAVIS. Is there any provision by which the record of the deed in such case may be used in evidence for the purpose of substantiating the title? According to this paragraph, if the deed should be destroyed, the original paper destroyed, the record cannot be used, because it does not appear from the record that the original paper was stamped in the precise manner required by law. Therefore, there is no mode of deducing title through a defective record. I think that point ought to be provided for, if it is not now.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman will look at the paragraph on page 122 of this bill, I think he will find that ample provision has been made upon the point to which he refers.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and fifty-four be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that all official instruments, documents, and papers used by the officers of the United States Government, or by the officers of any State, county, town, or other municipal corporation, shall be, and hereby are, exempt from tax or duty: Provided, That it is the intent hereby to exempt from liability to taxation only such State, county, town, or other municipal corporations, in the exercise of functions strictly belonging to them in their ordinary governmental and municipal capacity, and not to any special exemption to individuals dealing with such corporations.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the sentence "that all official instruments, documents, and papers used by the officers of the United States," &c., by striking out the word "used" and inserting the word "issued."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the proviso by striking out the word "only" after the word "taxation," and by inserting the word "only" before the words "in the exercise of functions strictly belonging to them," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out the words "and not to any special exemption to individuals dealing with such corporations."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and fifty-five be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that if any person shall forge or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be forged or counterfeited, any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, or any part of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, which shall have been provided, or may hereafter be provided, made, or used in pursuance of this act, or shall forge, counterfeit, or resemble, or cause or procure to be forged, counter-foited, or resembled, the impression, or any part of the impression, of any such stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, as aforesaid, upon any vellum, parchment, or paper, or shall stamp or mark, or cause or procure to be stamped or marked, any vellum, parchment, or paper, with any such forged or counterfeited stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, or part of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, as aforesaid, with intent to defraud the United States of any of the duties hereby imposed, or any part thereof; or if any person shall utter, or sell, or expose to sale any vellum, parchment, paper, article, or thing, having thereupon the impression of any such counterfeited stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, or any part of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, or any such forged, counterfeited, or resembled impression, or part of impression, as aforesaid, knowing the same respectively to be forged, counterfeited, or resembled; or if any person shall knowingly use any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, which shall have been so provided, made, or used, as aforesaid, with intent to defraud the United States; or if any person shall fraudulently cut, tear, or remove, or cause or procure to be cut, torn, or removed, the impression of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, which shall have been provided, made, or used in pursuance of this act, from any vellum, parchment, or paper, or instrument or writing charged or chargeable with any of the duties hereby imposed; or if any person shall fraudulently use, join, fix, or place, or cause to be used, joined, fixed, or placed, to, with, or upon any vellum, parchment, paper, or any instrument or writing charged or chargeable with any of the duties hereby imposed, any adhesive stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, which shall have been provided, made, or used in pursuance of this act, and which shall have been cut, torn, or removed from any other vellum, parchment, or paper, or any instrument or writing charged or chargeable with any of the duties hereby imposed; or if any person shall willfully remove or cause to be removed, altered or cause to be altered, the canceling or defacing marks on any adhesive stamp, with intent to use the same or cause the use of the same after it shall have been once used, or shall knowingly or willfully sell or buy such washed or restored stamps, or offer the same for sale, or give or expose the same to any person for use, or knowingly use the same, or prepare the same with intent for the further use thereof; or if any person shall knowingly and without lawful excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the person accused) have in his possession any washed, restored, or altered stamps, which have been removed from any vellum, parchment, paper, instrument, or writing, then, and in every such case, every person so offending, and every person knowingly and willfully aiding, abetting, or assisting in committing any such offense as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit the said counterfeited stamps and the articles upon which they are placed, and be punished by fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment and confinement to hard labor not exceeding five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move the following verbal amendment in line twenty-seven hundred and thirty-seven: strike out "debts" and insert "taxes;" and the same amendment in lines twenty-seven hundred and fifty-four and twenty-seven hundred and sixty-four.

The amendments were severally agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move the following amendments:

In line twenty-seven hundred and forty-four strike out the word "respectively;" in line twenty-seven hundred and fifty-nine, after the word "stamp," insert "or impression of any stamp;" in line twenty-seven hundred and sixty-seven, before the word "cause," insert "to;" and in line twenty-seven hundred and fifty-eight strike out "debts" and insert "taxes."

The amendments were severally agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move the following, to come in at the proper place:

After line twenty-six hundred and ninety-three insert the following:

That section one hundred and forty-seven be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person liable to pay duty in respect to any succession shall give notice to the assessor or assistant assessor of his liability to such duty within thirty days from the time when he shall become entitled in possession to such succession, or to the receipt of the income and profits thereof; and shall at the same time deliver to the assessor or assistant assessor a full and true account of said succession, for the duty whereon he shall be accountable, and of the value of the real estate involved, and of the deductions claimed by him, together with the names of the successor and predecessor, and their relation to each other, and all such other particulars as shall be necessary or proper for enabling the assessor or assistant assessor to fully and correctly to ascertain the duties due; and the assessor or assistant assessor, if satisfied with such account and estimate as originally delivered, or with any amendments that may be made therein upon his requisition, may assess the succession duty on the footing of such account and estimate; but it shall be lawful for the assessor or assistant assessor, if dissatisfied with such account, or if no account and estimate shall be delivered to him, to assess the duty on the best information he can obtain, subject to appeal as hereinafter provided; and if the duty so assessed shall exceed the duty assessable according to the return made to the assessor or assistant assessor, and with which he shall have been dissatisfied, or if no account and estimate has been delivered, and if no appeal shall be taken against such assessment, then it shall be in the discretion of the assessor, having regard to the merits of each case, to assess the whole or any part of the expenses incident to the taking of such assessment, in addition to such duty; and if there shall be an appeal against such last-mentioned assessment, then the payment of such expenses shall be in the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

That section one hundred and forty-eight be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that if any person required to give any such notice or deliver such account, as aforesaid, shall willfully neglect to do so within the time required by law, he shall be liable to pay to the United States a sum equal to ten per cent. upon the amount of duty payable by him; and if any person liable under this act to pay any duty in respect of his succession shall, after such duty shall have been finally ascertained, willfully neglect to do so within ten days after being notified, he shall also be liable to pay to the United States a sum equal to ten per cent. upon the amount of duty so unpaid, at the same time and in the same manner as the duty to be collected.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to insert in line twenty-seven hundred and twenty-seven these words: "the stamp or frank of any member of Congress or head of any bureau."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move in line twenty-seven hundred and forty-six after the word "used" to insert "or framed to be used."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph commencing with line twenty-six hundred and ninety-nine be reserved for amendment hereafter.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and fifty-eight be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person or persons who shall make, sign, or issue, or who shall cause to be made, signed, or issued, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever, or shall accept, negotiate, or pay, or cause to be accepted, negotiated, or paid, any bill of exchange, draft, or order or promissory note for the payment of money, without the same being duly stamped or having thereupon an adhesive stamp for denoting the duty chargeable thereon, and canceled in the manner required by law, with intent to evade the provisions of this act, shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of fifty dollars, and such instrument, document, or paper, bill, draft, order, or note shall be deemed invalid and of no effect: Provided, That the title of a purchaser of land by deed duly stamped shall not be defeated or affected by the want of a proper stamp on any deed conveying said land by any person from, through, or under whom his grantor claims or holds title: And provided further, That hereafter, in all cases where the party has not affixed to any instrument the stamp required by law thereon, at the time of making or issuing the said instrument, and he or they, or any party having an interest therein, shall be subsequently desirous of affixing such stamp to said instrument, he or they shall appear before the collector of the revenue of the proper district, who shall, upon the payment of the price of the proper stamp required by law, and of a penalty of fifty dollars, and where the whole amount of the duty denoted by the stamp required shall exceed the sum of fifty dollars, on payment also of interest at the rate of six per cent. on said duty from the day on which such stamp ought to have been affixed, affix the proper stamp to such instrument and note upon the margin of said instrument the date of hisso doing, and the fact that such penalty has been paid; and such instrument shall thereupon be deemed and held to be as valid, to all intents and purposes, as if stamped when made or issued: And provided further, That where it shall appear to said collector, upon oath or otherwise, to his satisfaction that any such instrument has not been duly stamped at the time of making or issuing the same, by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or urgent necessity, and without any willful design to defraud the United States of the stamp duty, or to evade or delay the payment thereof, then, and in such case, if such instrument shall, within twelve calendar months after the passage of this act, or within twelve calendar months after the making or issuing thereof, be brought to the said collector of revenue to be stamped, and the stamp duty chargeable thereon shall be paid, it shall be lawful for the said collector to remit the penalty aforesaid, and to cause such instrument to be duly stamped.

Mr. MORRILL. I move in line twenty-eight hundred, after the word "note," to insert "not being stamped according to law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move in line twenty-eight hundred and thirty-one, after the word "instrument," to insert "or, if lost, a copy thereof duly certified by the officer having charge of the real estate records in the proper town or county."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It seems to me if this is to have any effect at all it is to destroy the effect of the paragraph commencing on line twenty-six hundred and ninety-nine. That paragraph provides where the instrument has been unstamped the record of it shall be utterly void and shall not be used in evidence. If a party examines the record and finds it unstamped the unstamped deed so recorded is no notice to another subsequent purchaser. If it is the intention of the committee to go back and make this unstamped copy a correct record which we have already declared shall be utterly void and of no effect, then the amendment is proper. If that is not the intention then it is an improper one.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly the statement of my colleague is true. I think it is proper that we should go back and amend the paragraph to which he alludes. But I hope he will allow this amendment to pass. Of course if this paragraph is amended that will be also.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Would it not be well for the committee to provide some amendment which will protect an innocent purchaser who has taken a title to lands when there may be an outstanding unstamped title—no stamp whatever upon the record? By sending in a copy of the record and having it stamped the holder of the outstanding title may deprive the innocent purchaser of his title.

Mr. ALLISON. I will withdraw my amendment if the committee will consent that this paragraph shall be considered in connection with the paragraph just passed over.

No objection was made.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out the word "duty" wherever it occurs and inserting "tax" in lieu thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Out of charity to the reporters, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAVES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. WRIGHT, (at a quarter past ten o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BANKS: The memorial of James Jettow, of Massachusetts, contractor for construction of gunboats, for relief on account of losses sustained by reason of the high prices of labor and materials in the satisfactory completion of his engagements with the Government.

By Mr. ECKLEY: The petition of Jacob Harbough, and 146 others, wool-growers of Columbiana county, Ohio, asking increased duty on wool and an increase of tariff on imports.

By Mr. MARVIN: The petition of Obed Blowers, for payment of bounty due his son Samuel F. Blowers, who was accidentally killed before his muster into the United States service.

By Mr. ORTH: The petition from citizens of La Fayette, Indiana, on the subject of insurance.

By Mr. RITTER: The petition of Mrs. Nancy Hinton, whose husband was killed while fighting for the country, asking for a pension.

Also, the petition of Mrs. Martha Stout, whose husband was killed while fighting for the country, asking for a pension.

By Mr. WOODBRIDGE: The petition of Z. Nearing, and 37 others, citizens of Brandon, Rutland county, Vermont, praying for an additional duty on foreign wool.

Also, the petition of J. Stowe, and 36 others, citizens of Weybridge, Addison county, Vermont, praying for an increased protection on foreign wool.

Also, the petition of C. A. Paddock, and 25 others, citizens of Pownal, Benning county, Vermont, praying for an additional tariff on foreign wool.

Also, the petition of Samuel Evars, and 42 others, citizens of Cornwall, Addison county, Vermont, praying for an additional tariff on foreign wool.

Also, the petition of Hon. Barnes Frisbie, and others, citizens of Poultny, Rutland county, Vermont, praying for an increased duty on foreign wool.

Also, the petition of C. E. Sweet, and 42 others, citizens of Benson, Rutland county, Vermont, praying for an increased duty on foreign wool.

By Mr. WRIGHT: The memorial of Messrs. Smith & Brother, of Newark, New Jersey, in regard to the manufacture of pearl buttons and mother of pearl.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

By Mr. SPALDING: A bill for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Frank Lynch, of the twenty-seventh Ohio volunteer infantry.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 24, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

HOMESTEADS IN SOUTHERN LAND STATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed as the committee of conference on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 86) for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, Mr. KIRKWOOD, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. DAVIS.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GRIMES. I present the memorial of H. Nielander and sundry others, citizens of Lansing, in the State of Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of a law which will authorize the erection of bridges across the Mississippi river that will be obstructions to the navigation thereof. The subject, I believe, is before the Senate now, and I will therefore move that the memorial lie on the table.

It was so ordered.

Mr. HOWE presented the memorial of the Sugar River Valley Railroad Company, praying for a grant of lands to aid in the construction of their road from Freeport, Illinois, to Madison, Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SUMNER. I present the petition of George W. Lake, late second lieutenant of the ninth Veteran Reserve corps, in which he humbly prays Congress to take measures to secure the trial of Jefferson Davis by a military commission to be convened by the President of the United States under the authority of the Congress of the United States, and he proceeds to set forth sundry reasons in detail for his prayer. Among other things, he says "The American people demand the trial of Jefferson Davis by a military commission, so that justice may be done to the American people and the thousands of Union soldiers who have gone to their final resting-places through the traitorous acts of the said Jefferson Davis, as well as justice to the said prisoner." He then says that his petition is not drawn up out of a desire for revenge, but that the prisoner, Jefferson Davis, may have the proper mode of trial prescribed for all prisoners of war, and by which traitors have been tried before; that the American people consider Jefferson Davis a prisoner of war, captured by the Union forces; and they also consider that their representatives in Congress have the power to bring him to trial as soon as possible, in such a way as they think proper.

I offered the other day a petition somewhat similar in character to this, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia. I ask the same reference of this petition.

It was so referred.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of Graham J. Lester, of New York, praying that the Secretary of the Treasury may be authorized to issue to him an American register for the Prussian-built bark Marget; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the memorial of George W. Fisk, praying for compensation for services rendered as United States consul at Ningpo, China, and for damages incurred by reason of the protest and return of his drafts to China; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Benjamin Franklin, a private in company H, second Minnesota volunteers, praying for a pension, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 339) granting a pension to Benjamin Franklin. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

BILL RECOMMENDED.

On motion of Mr. WILLEY, it was Ordered, That the joint resolution (H. R. No. 24) for the relief of Lucretia M. Perry, widow of the late Nathaniel H. Perry, United States Navy, be recommended to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

DEPOSITS IN NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. WILSON. I submit this resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire into and report upon the condition of the national banks in the city of Washington in the following particulars, namely: first, what amounts of Government funds have been deposited in said national banks or any of them, in the past twelve months; second, by whom, and under what authority such deposits were made; third, what amount and rate of interest, if any, has been allowed on such deposits, and to whom payments of interest, directly or indirectly, have been made.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest to the honorable member from Massachusetts that he had better make his inquiry more extensive, perhaps, and propose to inquire as to deposits in the other national banks, for the same system has gone on elsewhere, I am told.

Mr. WILSON. I have no objection to make the resolution apply to other banks, if the Senator from Maryland so desires. I will simply say that rumors are rife in regard to the public moneys that have been deposited in these banks in this city, and I wish to have them investigated. I am willing, however, that investigation shall be made in regard to all the banks of the country. I regard the whole system as wrong, and I think it ought to be arrested, and certainly in all our large cities, where it can be done, the public moneys should be deposited in the Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON. No doubt about that.

Mr. WILSON. I saw that there were the other day $3,300,000 or $3,400,000 of Government money deposited in this city in five national banks.

Mr. JOHNSON. A great deal more than that has been deposited.

Mr. WILSON. And one of these banks has recently failed, and failed under circumstances which, it seems to me, are certainly not creditable to some of the Government officers. I think it is time the system ceased. It is worse than the old "pet-bank" system in the days of General Jackson. I am for the sub-Treasury system out and out, and letting the Government take care of its own funds. We have heard a great deal, lately, about expansion, and still public money has been deposited in these banks, in some cases to enormous amounts, for the purpose of expanding credits. The whole system is wrong, and I desire to see an end put to it.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member, I trust, did not suppose that I was hostile to the investigation.

Mr. WILSON. Certainly not.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am in favor of it; but the same reports to which the honorable member alludes as applicable to the banks here, I have heard as applicable to the banks almost everywhere. Whether they are well founded or ill founded I do not know; but it is very important to the interests of the Government that the matter should be investigated. I hope the honorable member will alter his resolution so as to make it general.

Mr. GRIMES. I trust the Senator from Massachusetts will consent to adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland, and change his resolution so as to apply to all of these banks. I am very glad that he has called the attention of the Senate and of the country to this subject. Some weeks ago I introduced a resolution directing the Committee on Finance to inquire and report to the Senate as to the propriety of requiring by law that all public moneys in cities or in the vicinity of cities where there is a sub-Treasury should be deposited in the sub-Treasury, and in the city of Washington in the Treasury of the United States. I supposed the Committee on Finance had that subject under consideration, but I have not heard anything from it. I do not know much about this subject of deposits, except from general rumor and newspaper reports. If there be any accuracy in the statements we see published, it seems to me this is a crying evil that should be remedied at once, and I trust that something will be done to save the Government from any further such losses as have occurred by the disastrous failure of the Merchant's Bank of Washington. It seems to me, if the present system shall be continued, we are liable to just such disasters as that, only on a still more momentous scale than the one that has occurred here right under our eyes.

Mr. WILSON. I propose to modify the resolution by striking out after the word "bank" the words "in the city of Washington;" so that it will apply to the national banks generally.

Mr. JOHNSON. That will do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be modified agreeably to the suggestion of the mover, who has the power to alter it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear it read as it now stands.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would recommend to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts either to provide for the appointment of a special committee on this subject or to send the resolution to the Secretary of the Treasury. I suppose that all the information asked for in the resolution, except in the last part with reference to the interest paid, which would require a specific examination, could be furnished at the Department without any difficulty. I should have no objection to the resolution going to the Committee on Finance but for this reason: we are now very near the last of the session, and the Committee on Finance have quite as much business before them as it is possible for them to attend to. In a very short time we shall have the tax bill, which will take up a great deal of our time, and probably occupy every day and every evening for some considerable period; and with the other bills and business on hand it would be impossible for that committee to make this inquiry, in my judgment. I therefore propose that some other direction shall be given to the resolution. As to the subject-matter of it, I think it is highly proper, and in the existing state of things essential, that such an inquiry should be made.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest to the honorable member from Massachusetts that he had better refer the subject to a special committee, as the Committee on Finance have more business than they can attend to, or as much, at any rate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the Senator had better do that or send it to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WILSON. I will modify the resolution still further by changing it to a special committee.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to hear the resolution read as modified.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee be appointed to inquire into and report upon the condition of the national banks in the following particulars, namely: first, what amounts of Government funds have been deposited in said national banks or any of them in the past twelve months; second, by whom, and under what authority, such deposits were made; third, what amount and rate of interest, if any, has been allowed on such deposits, and to whom payments of interest, directly or indirectly, have been made.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, or the Senator from Massachusetts, who I suppose has examined the subject, whether the national banks are not made depositories by the law.

Mr. GRIMES. They can be designated.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized by the law to make certain banks depositories of the public money.

Mr. CLARK. He designates which of the banks shall be depositories.

Mr. HENDRICKS. And upon such security as he may see fit to require.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state that I have examined the law on this subject, in pursuance of the order of the Senate, and I do not see anything in the banking law that justifies any one depositing the public money in the national banks except the Treasury Department and the collectors of internal revenue. The habit that has sprung up of paymasters and disbursing officers depositing the public money in these banks, it seems to me, is a violation of the law.

Mr. CLARK. But the Senator will find that the Department does designate certain banks as depositories.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that; but I say there is nothing in the law that directly contemplates the depositing of public money by disbursing officers in national banks, and such a practice is very wrong.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. R. No. 74) providing for the acceptance of a collection of plants tendered to the United States by Frederick Pech.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (S. No. 167) to incorporate the Women's Hospital Association of the District of Columbia, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 116) to prevent the introduction of cholera into the ports of the United States.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 466) erecting the Territory of Montana into a surveying district, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 616) for the relief of Lucinda Gates.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bill; which thereupon received the signature of the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 453) for the relief of Cornelius B. Gold, late acting assistant paymaster United States Navy.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. WILSON. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 134, relative to appointments in the Military Academy of the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Rhode Island, I believe, has an amendment to propose to the resolution. It was laid over the other day to enable him to do so.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer this amendment to come in as a new section:

And be it further resolved, That in all appointments of cadets to the Military Academy after the present year the person authorized to nominate shall nominate not less than five candidates for each vacancy, all of whom shall be actual residents of the congressional district, Territory, or District of Columbia, entitled to the appointment; and the selection of one shall be made from the candidates according to their respective merits and qualifications, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War shall from time to time prescribe; but this shall not apply to the appointment of cadets authorized by the President of the United States.

This is in accordance with the recommendation of General Delafield, the head of the Engineer corps, and is also in the spirit of the recommendation of every Board of Visitors of the Military and Naval Academies for a number of years. General Delafield, in his last annual report, says:

"The difficulties that have been experienced for years past in training the minds and bodies of the young gentlemen sent to the Academy to prepare them for usefulness as members of the military profession arise mainly from the qualifications of the candidates being so exceedingly limited. While at the present time it may not be expedient to increase the standard for admission, I do urgently recommend that a selection from at least five candidates to be nominated for each appointment may be authorized by law, when every section of the country would more certainly have its due proportion of graduates entering the Army annually. Should this principle be authorized by law, the examination of the candidates could be ordered in several sections of the country, at convenient military posts, and thus save a great annual expense now incurred by partially educating and returning deficient cadets to their distant homes, insure a much greater proportion of members who could master the course of studies, and avoid the numerous and frequent discharges from the Academy for inability to acquire the requisite information and proficiency for a graduate of this institution."

The principle of this amendment was adopted by the Senate at the last session of Congress, but it failed to receive the assent of the House of Representatives. The amendment is now modified in such a way that I hope it will secure the assent of the other branch of Congress. It has been recommended by all the Boards of Visitors; it is recommended, so far as I know, by all the military officers and the naval officers and by all the educators of the country. It is a principle which has been adopted in every other military country. It has prevailed in France for more than seventy years, and military men know how much it has done for the renown and glory of the French power. It has been adopted in England since the Crimean war from the observation of the superiority of the French service over the English. A commission was appointed to inquire into that evident superiority, and upon the report of that commission the competitive system was adopted in the English service. It prevails in Austria; it prevails in Prussia; it prevails in Italy, and, so far as I know, in all military countries except Russia. What the practice there is I do not know.

Mr. HENDRICKS. When this joint resolution was called up the other day, I asked the postponement of it until the Senator from Rhode Island should return, with a view to his being heard upon this proposition. Since then I have reflected somewhat upon the proposition, and I believe it would be well to adopt it in its present shape. I think it would to a very large extent reduce the per cent. of appointees to that institution who are found not qualified for the position. I think it would be well enough to try it, to say the least of it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs why it is that it is proposed to fix the age at twenty-two rather than the age that has been fixed heretofore.

Mr. WILSON. The ages now are sixteen and twenty-one. This proposes to make it seventeen and twenty-two. It was thought by many persons, and some of those connected with the institution, that sixteen was an age too young for admission, that seventeen was about the proper age; and therefore this change has been made to carry it up one year, and extend it one year beyond twenty-one excepting in some special cases of soldiers who have served in the war. Those, however, will be very limited.

Mr. GRIMES. I have not heard of any objection to the present limit; and I was fearful that probably this provision resulted from such a condition of things as happened two years ago when we changed the limit as to admission to the Naval Academy. There happened to be a likely young boy who was a little over the age of seventeen and could not be admitted; and I believe that it was purely through the influence that was exerted by the friends of that young man that we changed the period to eighteen years. He was admitted, went to the Academy, was there three months, and was unable to make any progress in his studies, had not any adaptation to the profession at all, and was dismissed; and we have now upon the statute-book a limit of eighteen years in place of seventeen years, when every naval officer concurs in the opinion that the shorter number of years is the proper age for boys to go into the naval service. I do not know whether there is any such difficulty in the case of the Military Academy.

Mr. WILSON. This measure comes from the House of Representatives, and General SCHENCK, chairman of the Military Committee there, was one of the visitors at West Point last year. I am not sure that that board recommended this change, but I know they recommended the change in regard to waiting a year after the appointment.

Mr. NESMITH. With the permission of the Senator from Massachusetts, I will state that the board last year did recommend and almost every board for several years has recommended the change; and with the permission of the Senator, I will read the recommendation from the report of the Board of Visitors last year:

"Candidates may now be admitted between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one. We recommend that in future no one be received who is under seventeen or more than twenty-two years of age. The severity of the physical training and discipline is such that youths of sixteen often do not possess the requisite strength and power of endurance. A greater maturity of mind and body of those entering seems desirable."

That is the recommendation of the board last year.

Mr. WILSON. General Delafield strongly recommended carrying the minimum age to seventeen.

Mr. NESMITH. I desire to offer the following amendment:

And be it further resolved, That hereafter the Superintendent of the Military Academy may be selected from any corps of the Army.

At present the Superintendent is compelled to be selected from the Engineer corps, and it has been thought by a great many that, as the character of the institution has changed a good deal since its first organization, this is an unjust discrimination against other officers of the service; and I will read what the Board of Visitors last year recommended on that subject:

"1. We are of opinion that the law should be so changed as that the superintendency of the Academy may be thrown open to the whole Army instead of confining the selection, as now, to an officer of the Engineer corps. The institution having ceased to be only, or mainly, a school for engineers, as at first established, and having become the one great national military and polytechnic institute of our country, the reason for such exclusiveness no longer exists, and it is recommended that the appointment be free hereafter to every arm of the service."

Mr. WILSON. I doubt very much the expediency of this amendment. I know that many eminent men of the Army have been in favor of this change, but we do not know certainly how it may work; and if the change is made men may be appointed for other than military considerations. I certainly hope that the proposition will not be put upon this resolution now, for I am anxious to get the resolution through this morning, and we shall very soon probably have up the Army appropriation bill or some other bill to which this amendment can be moved; and as attention has now been called to the subject, Senators can reflect upon it. I hope it will not be pressed to a vote now; if it is, I shall vote against it.

Mr. NESMITH. I think it is exceedingly appropriate that this amendment should be put upon this resolution. This is a joint resolution in relation to the Military Academy, and I think there can be no more appropriate place for it. If the Senator from Massachusetts will consult the Army officers, and those of most distinction in the country, I think he will find that they pretty unanimously concur in the idea that the superintendency of this institution ought not to be confined exclusively to one corps of the Army. There is no reason for it. There are many very distinguished officers serving in the line who might with propriety be selected to superintend the institution. I am opposed to this exclusiveness, and I believe the tendency of it has a deleterious effect upon the institution and upon the Army itself. For my own part, I am anxious that the amendment should be adopted, and that the superintendency of the institution shall be thrown open for the Secretary of War to select the person best fitted for that position from any corps in the service, whether he belongs to the line or the staff, whether to the engineers or the ordnance, the infantry, the cavalry, or the artillery. I think it is proper that the change should be made. There is no reason why the selection should be confined to the Engineer corps now. There was a reason for it, perhaps, when the institution was originated, for it was then strictly an engineer school. If it was strictly an engineer school now, it would be proper to confine the selection to an engineer officer; if it was a cavalry school, it would be proper that a cavalry officer should have charge of it; and so, if it was an infantry or artillery school, an officer of that branch should have charge of it. But now it embraces all branches of the service. I think the restriction which is now imposed on the Secretary of War in selecting the Superintendent should be removed, and that he should have authority to make the best selection he can from the entire Army. I do not think there is any more appropriate place for a provision making the change than this resolution. The Board of Visitors for several years have recommended this change. I have already read the recommendation made by the board of last year; and it is the very first recommendation which they made in their report, and I think they urge very good reasons for it.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Oregon what are the deleterious effects he speaks of that have resulted from permitting this School to continue under the charge of the Engineer corps.

Mr. NESMITH. There is an exclusiveness about it that I think is improper in the Army. I do not think that an engineer officer is any better fitted to manage an institution of this kind than a cavalry or infantry or artillery officer. I think the wrong consists in the exclusion, and it causes dissatisfaction in other corps of the Army, and I know of no reason why it should continue. I know that the Boards of Visitors who have devoted their attention to the subject, have come to the same conclusion that I have. Officers in other corps of the Army see no reason why this superintendency should be confined to the Engineer corps, while the School is not a mere engineer school; and I think so myself.

The amendment was rejected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

Mr. NESMITH. I now renew my amendment in the Senate, which was rejected in committee; and I ask for the yeas and nays on it. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. Ever since the foundation of the Government, the Military Academy has been under the superintendency of the Engineer corps. I believe that the first time in my life that I ever heard special objection urged to it has been here to-day, although I think on some former occasion some member of this body did propose such an amendment as is now offered by the Senator from Oregon.

There are several reasons why the rule was established and enacted into a law that the Engineer corps should have the charge of the Academy. One was—and it is a principal reason with me now—that the moment you open it to the whole Army you make it much nearer a political office than it is now. There will be a constant scramble among the five thousand officers in the infantry, the artillery, the cavalry, the ordnance, and the engineers, to secure the superintendency of the Academy; and it will go, not on account of the merits of the particular person who may seek it, but because of the political influence that may be brought to bear in his behalf.

I am as much opposed, I believe, to any kind of exclusiveness as anybody ought to be; but it seems to me that the reason I have just given is a very substantial reason why the old system should be adhered to, especially when we know that it has thus far worked well. The reason why an engineer has been hitherto selected for this purpose and why the law requires him to be selected is that the Engineer corps is composed of what properly, I think, may be called the élite of the men who graduate at the Military Academy. They are the best educated men; they are the first two or three men in each class who graduate at the head of the class, the most accomplished men. Now, sir, if you owned the Military Academy yourself, and were going to educate your boys there, would you select a man who graduated at the foot of his class, or would you select a man who was confessedly the best scholar or one of the best scholars of the class? Taking the Superintendent from the Engineer corps leaves a range, it seems to me, sufficiently large. I think there are above the rank of first lieutenant some thirty-five or forty officers, the most accomplished men in the Army in point of education and accomplishments of every description; and without any substantial reason being given for it, except the mere recommendation of a board of civilians who went there, a part of them, I believe, at that time in the volunteer service, and each of whom thought he was perfectly competent to take charge of the Military Academy himself, and perhaps looked forward to the time when he would be Superintendent of the Military Academy, I do not think it is wise for us, without any further consideration than we have been able to give the subject here in this morning hour, to change the rule that has existed ever since the Academy was established in 1801.

Mr. NESMITH. The Senator from Iowa, I apprehend, is under a mistake in saying that this is a new question. I have often heard of it before. It is a question that has been agitated in the Army for many years, and I think has been embraced in several reports of the Boards of Visitors to the Academy. As to this proposition making a scramble in the Army or increasing the area of that scramble, I do not think there is any evil of that sort to be apprehended from it. If evils are to result from that scramble, we have them now in the Engineer corps, and I do not think it will be enlarged by enlarging the area from which this selection may be made. I do not think any evil is going to result from a scramble among Army officers to get a place where they do not properly apply for it, but where the Secretary of War, under the direction of the President, makes the selection from the officers that he considers the most competent.

Now, sir, in relation to this matter of graduating at the head of the class, I do not believe because a man happens to graduate at the head of his class at West Point that he has any superior capacity or qualification for training up young men as soldiers than the man who may happen to have graduated lower down. I know some very distinguished officers in the Army who have graduated at West Point very near the foot of the class, and I know some very great fools who graduated near the head of the class. I think, on an average, you will find about as much capacity along half way down the list of those who graduated in that institution as you will in those who graduated at the head. Those who graduated at the head are those who manifest superior capacity in mathematics and those questions that have no direct relation to soldiery or the capacity as soldiers, but a mere inclination derived from books and a capacity of demonstrating mathematical problems. I do not think that sort of qualification is entirely necessary to train a man up and make him a good soldier. Under your old rule, Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Hancock, and fifty other officers whom I might name, would be excluded, and I apprehend any of those officers would be just as competent to take charge of this institution and train up men for soldiers as any officer who can be selected from the Engineer corps. I believe they are better qualified for the position. They are men of more practical common sense, and they are likely to instill and inculcate such ideas into the young men who are there. I am opposed to this exclusiveness and to keeping the superintendency of this institution in any single corps of the Army. I believe this practice should be abolished. I believe the interests of the Army, the interests of the institution itself, and the interests of the country demand it; and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the Senator from Oregon is mistaken in supposing that this proposition has ever been recommended before in any report of the Board of Visitors. I do not think that the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy, as it is generally made up, is very well calculated to advise anybody on the subject of military affairs. Once in awhile some persons are appointed who may be competent to do so; but on looking over the list, you find a distinguished clergyman, a distinguished lawyer, the editor of a newspaper—friends, probably, of the members who selected them, according to the rule of selection, from their several districts. I understand the rule to be that they represent all the States, not all at once, but in rotation, and the districts of the several States, also; and the selection of the person to visit the Academy is generally given to the member from the district; sometimes to a Senator who has a friend. Upon many matters of business that occur at the Military Academy, upon the state of the buildings, and the improvements necessary to be made there, and occasionally the scholarship—for sometimes a distinguished professor of a college is sent there to attend the examination, &c.—they might be competent to judge; but as to what is advisable in regard to military matters, I should say they were no more fit and no better qualified, ordinarily, to decide those questions than we are ourselves, if we were placed in the same relation, and I certainly should not think my information very good on that subject.

But, sir, my rule has been in public affairs, when I found that a thing had, in the long course of years, worked well and been productive of good, to stand by that rather than to try an experiment to see if I could make it better. The principle upon which the superintendency of the Academy was given to the Engineer corps has been correctly stated by the Senator from Iowa. The Military Academy is a school of instruction, not a school of practice exactly, for that practice makes but a small portion of what is taught there. Tactics are learned there, to be sure, and horsemanship, and other things connected with military service; but it is a school of instruction, that is, instruction in those things which a military man should know. Although, as the honorable Senator from Oregon intimates, a man may graduate at the head of his class and turn out to be of very little consequence afterward, yet, as a general rule, I think the principle is a safe one, that those who are the best instructed are the best qualified to oversee and direct instruction; and for that reason, as it is a school of instruction, the superintendency has hitherto been, by law, confined to those who graduate in the front rank of their respective classes. If you will look through the Army records you will find that those men have, generally speaking, made distinguished and valuable officers, and even in the field many of them have distinguished themselves.

That being the case, as it is a school, I think the man to be placed at the head of it should be a man who is able to judge of how instruction should be given in all the branches of education; and the engineers are the men who are the best instructed in all the branches.

Their rank is not made up from their proficiency in one study particularly, but in all branches, and, among other things, conduct and character. As this principle has been established and has operated so well and been productive of no evil, there is no motive to throw it open that I can imagine, except that occasionally a man may be found, who does not belong to that particular corps, who may be entirely competent to make a good Superintendent of the Academy; but it does not follow that a man who has distinguished himself in the field, and shown himself to be a very capable and able officer in the field, in the command of men, is a proper man to take charge of a military academy, a school of instruction. You may go through the ranks of our Army and pick out men who have distinguished themselves most, and among them you would certainly find a very considerable number who would not be competent, or the right kind of men, to place at the head of the Military Academy.

I have regarded this movement as one rather to gratify the pride of corps than anything else, and perhaps the pride and ambition of individuals. Now, there are other fields for the gratification of the ambition of leading and distinguished officers. They are not abused by being excluded, on account of their not belonging to this particular corps, from the exercise of this particular duty. The moment you throw it open, and admit half a dozen corps to be selected from, you will have, in the first place, rivalries among all the corps to see which shall furnish the Superintendent, and in addition the rivalries existing among many individuals seeking to be selected for that particular place, which perhaps is thought to be an honorable one. I have never known any great rivalry of any great consequence to exist among these officers for this position heretofore. There are but a few, perhaps, who would be considered as the proper men for it, but there are always a sufficient number from whom to select. But if you adopt this principle instead of having that quiet in regard to the Academy which it is desirable should exist, you would introduce the confusion and the rivalries that would result from making the number of men from whom to select so very large. I do not feel disposed to risk the institution itself, to risk its advantages, to risk its good and well-being, upon a struggle of this kind, which can have no other purpose than to open this position to a large number of men who might be ambitious to be placed in a situation for properly discharging the duties of which they had given no evidence whatever by any particular distinction in the line in which they ought to be distinguished in order to preside over a school of this character. For these reasons I hope the amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from Oregon will not be adopted.

Mr. NESMITH. I think the Senator from Maine is not entirely correct in his statement with reference to this Academy, and the character of the boards of annual visitors. He states that it is entirely a military question. On the contrary, it is a question of education, and those men who are qualified, as he himself states most decidedly on that question, are the very men who are competent to decide on this. He says they are generally educated men, presidents of colleges, editors of newspapers, and men who have practical knowledge upon the very questions which is there brought to their attention and consideration; that is, the question of education, education generally to fit men for the discharge of their appropriate duties in the Army.

The Senator says that an engineer officer is selected for the discharge of this important duty on account of his superior qualification and fitness. And he says that he is superior in all the branches of the service. There never was a greater mistake in the world. The engineer officer graduates at the head or near the head of his class because of his proficiency in, perhaps, a single branch, the branch of mathematics.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator is entirely mistaken. His standing in the class is made up from his proficiency in all branches.

Mr. NESMITH. It is not on account of superiority in any other branch. Mathematics is the principal point upon which that selection is determined at the time the class graduates. Now, sir, when these men go forth from the Academy, the engineer officer who is so proficient in mathematics, in place of going into the field, in place of going into the artillery, the cavalry, or the infantry, or any other department of the Army, goes directly into an office, and there discharges the duty of an engineer for ten, fifteen, or twenty years; and without even having been placed in command of troops or having any direct contact with them, because he is expert in figures, he is supposed to go back to the Academy with superior qualification for the purpose of educating men to be soldiers. You may take an instance. A man, say, graduates number five in his class and becomes an engineer; another man graduates number six, and goes into the line of the Army. The man who graduates number six goes into the line of the Army with nearly as much knowledge of mathematics as the man who graduated number five, and in place of being cooped up in an office or discharging some clerical duty connected with the Army, this man goes into the field, serves five, ten, fifteen, or twenty years with the different corps, the cavalry, the artillery, and the infantry, and gains a superior knowledge of all those corps over the individual who is confined almost entirely in his duties to the summing up of columns of figures or demonstrating mathematical problems; this man, I say, acquires all the information of the different branches of the service, while the knowledge of the engineer who has graduated nearly at the head of the class and has remained in the engineer service, is confined to that particular department, and he goes back to the Academy, perhaps, competent to teach boys mathematics and demonstrate those problems and make them good mathematicians, but he has no knowledge upon the other qualifications requisite to make a man a good soldier.

If the young men who graduate at West Point were all to go into the Engineer corps, were all to become mathematicians and nothing else, as the engineers are, then it would be proper that an engineer officer should have the control of the institution; but, sir, on the contrary, out of a class of forty or fifty or sixty, five, six, or eight may go into the Engineer corps, while five sixths of the class go into the other arms of the service, and they go into them, under the present arrangement, without being under the tuition of a Superintendent who is capable of imparting those particular qualifications. So far as the Superintendent is concerned, so far as all the superior abilities, capacity, and training he brings to their culture are concerned, he is simply able to teach mathematics, and nothing more. I do not think the position occupied by the Senator from Maine as to an engineer officer knowing all about the Army, and all about the different corps, is correct. I think the history of the men who have graduated there, and the services they have performed in different corps, demonstrate very clearly that any other man who is a graduate from West Point and has been kept out of the engineers has more multifarious knowledge of the subjects and duties connected with the Army than a mere engineer has himself.

Mr. GRIMES. The sum and substance of the argument of the Senator from Oregon seems to be this: that if a man graduates at the head of his class, or near the head of his class, and becomes an engineer, he goes into an office or takes charge of the building of a fortification, while a man who was the twentieth of his class goes out and is stationed at Fort Ridgely, as a cavalry officer or an infantry officer, at a post remote from civilization and books and men, and he is going to acquire such a vast amount of information that he will be vastly superior to the engineer officer, who is employed in fortifying your coast. I believe that is the sum and substance of the argument. If there be any validity at all in the Senator's proposition he ought to propose to exclude an engineer entirely from being selected to command at West Point.

Now, Mr. President, I do not pretend to deny that the fifth man of a class may be just as competent to command at West Point and superintend education there as the first; that is, in some instances; but what I object to is, that for the sake of getting one of those fifth men, who may be an exceptional man, you open the whole to confusion and competition between from five thousand to eight thousand officers, and in the course of a few years you will find a man selected and put in charge there who has never had any education at all, but who will be made the Superintendent because of the political influence that may be brought to bear in his behalf. That is what I am afraid of; and these excellent officers who have served and distinguished themselves so much, to whom the Senator from Oregon has alluded, having been educated at West Point, under the present system, the Academy having accomplished as much as it has, it having turned out to be such a complete success, I do not see really any urgent necessity that should impel Congress to make this change.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is House joint resolution No. 127.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEWART. I rise to take the floor upon the special order.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I intended to say a word on the other subject.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Senator from Nevada to allow us to take the vote on this question in relation to the Military Academy.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope not. It will be further debated, and I must adopt the rule, when the morning hour expires and the constitutional amendment comes up, of insisting upon going on with it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Suppose we take the vote without debate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I must adopt the rule and not yield in any case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday, being House joint resolution No. 127, is before the Senate.

WITHDRAWAL OF A PETITION.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope the Senator from Nevada will allow me to make a statement that will take but a moment before he begins. I ask leave to withdraw from the files a petition which I presented to the Senate some ten days ago, perhaps, from citizens of Augusta county, in the State of Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It was a petition stating that Union men in that locality were without protection from the local authorities, and asking that the military power be not withdrawn. Some days after that petition was presented to the Senate, the Senator from Delaware, not now in his seat, [Mr. SAULSBURY]—and I am sorry he is not here—applied to me for a copy of the petition. It purported to be signed by one hundred and six Union citizens of Augusta county, Virginia, and attached to it were affidavits that the parties signing it were bona fide citizens of that county. At the time the Senator from Delaware applied to me for a copy of it I informed him that it had been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I think the very day after I was applied to for this copy, I received a letter from the gentleman who sent me the petition, stating that its presentation in the Senate had led to inquiries by persons at Staunton, which is in that county, and that threats had been made against any persons there who had signed such a petition and sent it to the Congress of the United States, and that they were determined to find out who the petitioners were, and he presumed that steps were being taken to get a copy of the petition with a view of persecuting the men who had sent it here. The letter requested me to interfere for their protection if I could do so, but I knew no way to do it. The matter rested there, until to-day I received another letter from this same gentleman at Staunton, dated May 20, 1866, in which he says:

"The rebels of this place through A. H. H. Stuart, of Staunton"—

He had informed me in his former letter that the prosecuting attorney there was also one of the persons who had made threats against these loyal men for sending a petition to Congress—

"The rebels of this place through A. H. H. Stuart of Staunton and Joseph Segar, as I learn, have gotten the names from Washington of the signers of the petition of the Union citizens of this county praying for troops, &c., which you recently presented to Congress. It was done for the purpose of injuring us in every possible manner, as events have proved. The rebels have even intimidated some of the signers, some six or seven, until they have actually signed cards in the rebel papers, denying that they signed the petition. I therefore respectfully request that you will cause to be forwarded to me immediately the original petition in order that those who procured the names may be relieved of this infamous charge against us of forgery. Is it possible, sir, that we have no rights (which in this case are guaranteed by the Constitution) because we are white, loyal men?"

I ask leave to withdraw the original petition with a view of sending it to the gentlemen who forwarded it to me that they may protect themselves, as far as this will enable them to do so, against the accusations which have been brought upon them; and I regret it is not in my power to propose some measure that shall protect them from the ignominy and persecution that is brought upon them for no cause save their loyalty to the country and the exercise of a constitutional right belonging to the humblest citizen in the land of petitioning Congress for a redress of grievances. A copy of the petition can be left with the committee, which I suppose will answer every purpose. I ask leave to withdraw the original petition, leaving a copy with the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved and seconded that the Senator from Illinois be authorized to withdraw from the Committee on Military Affairs the petition presented by him which was referred to that committee by order of the Senate some time since.

Mr. HOWARD. I beg to say that some weeks ago I received a letter from a gentleman of my acquaintance residing in Staunton, Virginia, requesting me to procure a copy of the petition to which the honorable Senator from Illinois has referred and forward it to him, he alleging in his communication to me that he had strong reason to believe that the signatures, or many of them, attached to the petition were forged, and that it was impossible to ascertain in Staunton or in the vicinity any person who had set his name to the petition. The letter which I received was written in a spirit quite hostile to the signers of the petitions or to those who sympathized with the object of the petition. I immediately resorted to the committee-room of the Committee on Military Affairs and made a personal examination of the petitions; there were two or three of them I believe. I examined the signatures with considerable care and ascertained that there was a certificate of authenticity attached to each one of the petitions, setting forth that the signatures were genuine and identifying the individuals who had signed them.

I replied to my correspondent stating what I had done, saying to him that under the circumstances I did not feel at liberty to furnish him with copies of those petitions, but at the same time informing him of the nature of the petitions and the mode in which they were authenticated, and assuring him that so far as I could discover I had every reason to believe that the signatures were all genuine and that the persons signing the petition were genuine persons.

That is all I know about it. It is my duty to state these facts to the Senate in order to show with what perseverance it is that certain persons at Staunton have sought to obtain matter of accusation against persons who are supposed to have signed these petitions. I do not know, I confess, what good will result from the withdrawal of the petition.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It will enable these men to protect themselves against the charge of forgery.

Mr. HOWARD. If that is the sole object the Senator has in view, I shall have no objection to that, but I would not propose to have the petition withdrawn if any further wrangling or ill feeling was to be the result of the withdrawal of the petition.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The petitioner himself who sent it to me has asked leave to withdraw it.

Mr. WILSON. I have sent to the committee-room for the petition; and I find that there are four oaths made before proper officers to the genuineness of the signatures. I will say that Mr. Segar, one of the Senators-elect from Virginia, called on me and expressed a wish to obtain a copy of the petition and the names of the petitioners. He did not state to me why he wanted it, or for what purpose, except that it was thought by some persons that the signatures were not genuine. He went to my committee-room and my clerk made a copy for him. I did not suppose there was any improper purpose in it. I am sorry to learn, as I have learned, that this has been used for the purpose of oppressing, persecuting, and threatening the signers of the petition. I will have a copy of the paper made and return the original to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senate will not take this step without considering its importance. I do not mean to oppose the taking of it, but I do wish to call the attention of the Senate to what I may call its gravity. I am not aware that a petition has ever before been withdrawn on a motion like that which is now made. A petition once presented comes into the possession of the Senate; it passes into its files and into the archives of the Capitol. I think we are about to make a precedent for the first time. I do not, however, say that the occasion does not justify the precedent. I incline to agree with my friend from Illinois that it does. We surely owe protection, so far as we can afford it, to these petitioners; and as the Senator from Illinois suggests that this is the best way, I am disposed to follow his suggestion; but in doing it, I wish that the Senate should take notice of the character of the step, and of the precedent that they are about to make.

But this is not all, sir. I wish the Senate to take notice that they are called to adopt this unusual precedent by the abnormal and brutal condition of the social system about these petitioners. The very fact which the Senator from Illinois now brings to the attention of the Senate, and on account of which he invokes an unprecedented exercise of power, is important evidence as to the condition of things in one of these rebel States. It goes to show that they are not yet in any just sense reconstructed, or prepared for reconstruction. Such an abnormal fact as this could not occur in any other part of our broad country. That it occurs here is to be referred peculiarly to those remains of rebellion which have not yet been subdued, but which you are now called upon, in the exercise of all the powers intrusted to you under the Constitution, solemnly to subdue. Therefore, sir, regard this transaction in a double light: first as an important precedent to be established in the business of the Senate; secondly, as illustrating a condition of things in the rebel States to justify every exercise of care and diligence on our part to the end that it shall not bring forth similar fruits hereafter.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope we shall now proceed with the regular business of the day, and I really must call upon our friends to be a little forbearing when that business comes up in its regular order. When it is called up it is usual to bring up something or other that a Senator wants to get off his hands; and then everybody debates it, and time goes on, and it is not fair to the Senator who has the floor, nor is it exactly the thing with reference to the business of the Senate. I hope, therefore, unless there is a pressing necessity for this matter, that it will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is disposed of, I think.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I hope Senators will talk no more about it.

Mr. WILSON. If it is not disposed of let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The parties want the paper in consequence of these accusations. I suppose there will be no further debate about it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is not an unusual thing to withdraw a paper from the files of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois, that he be permitted to withdraw this petition from the Committee on Military Affairs for the purpose stated by him.

The motion was agreed to.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 127) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the pending question being on the amendment offered by Mr. WADE.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I am satisfied that it is impossible for this Congress to fully agree as to what is expedient to be done to harmonize factions and restore peace to our distracted country. Every one is liable to estimate the sentiments of the whole country by the views of a few friends or a small portion of his constituents, modified by his own peculiar ideas and wishes. This has and will continue to produce an irreconcilable conflict of opinions upon all questions of mere expediency. There is very little difference of opinion among Union men as to what ought to be done if we had the power to do it. I have always been of the opinion that it was expedient to do right. In this case we must agree as to what is right and do it, for we cannot agree as to what is expedient or what is likely to return A, B, or C to Congress. The Union party are agreed that all men are entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and they will indorse any necessary means to secure these inalienable rights to every American citizen. The more direct and positive the plan the better. All digressions from principle or compromises of human rights, whether by Congress or the President, only involve us in new difficulties and increase our embarrassments. The President's plan of restoration was unsatisfactory, because it ignored the rights and excluded from constitutional liberty four million loyal citizens guilty of no offense but fidelity to the Government, and at the same time deprived the friends of the Union of the co-operation of these loyal citizens in maintaining the integrity of the Constitution, the honor of our brave soldiers, and the financial burdens of the war; because it placed the State governments of the South in the hands of the very men who plunged the country into war for secession and the extension of slavery, and because it admitted into Congress an increased representation of the disloyal elements of the rebellion. Yet it was better than no plan, no restoration, no Union, and no peace. The paramount importance of speedy restoration made me hesitate to condemn the plan of the President for want of a better. I was unwilling to pull down without the material at hand with which to rebuild.

But in the progress of events, two noble sentiments became manifest to me upon which the people of the loyal North might unite; protection for the Union and the friends of the Union, and mercy to a fallen foe. The attainment of these humane objects promised restoration and peace. I reflected seriously upon a solution of our difficulties by an appeal which addresses itself only to the most Christian qualities of humanity, and examined with great anxiety every plan presented. I found none which promised security for the future and protection for the friends of the Government, and at the same time extended mercy to its enemies. Every proposal was wanting either in justice or mercy. Mercy pleaded generous amnesty; justice demanded impartial suffrage. Both were buried beneath an ocean of prejudice. But the voice of an enlightened press and the arguments of earnest men in Congress inspired me with the hope that a direct proposition for a settlement of the questions at issue might finally succeed. I proposed pardon for the rebels and the ballot for the blacks. The general plan was, and still is, approved by the loyal press with no important exception, while every scheme based upon expediency alone has disappeared like the mist of the morning before the rising sun. Although the advocacy of the resolutions subjected me to some invidious criticisms by persons who judge the motives of others by their own, yet no one has attempted an argument against the humanity and justice of the propositions.

If those who have always entertained the same views upon all subjects cannot vote for my resolution because they think it inconsistent for me to advocate negro suffrage, I shall be satisfied if I can obtain the votes of those only who have held themselves open to conviction and have sometimes changed their opinions. Give me the votes of those who have changed with the progress of events during the last six years, and the balance may vote as they please. Those who, in the language of Mr. Lincoln, "adopt new views whenever they appear to be true views," are the only persons wise or useful in this age of progress. The world moves, and those who do not perceive it are dead to the living issues of the day. I have always advocated the necessity of taking the world as we find it, and following the logic of events. The development of new facts is constantly exploding old theories. The trouble is that some men do not seem to comprehend the new facts. The attempt to apply the theories of slavery to a condition of freedom is the most dangerous evil of the age, yet those who do this boast of their consistency. They were educated to believe that a negro was a slave, possessing no rights that a white man was bound to respect, and they believed it still, and they are astonished at the inconsistencies of the world and its tendency to recognize the rights of man.

In advocating this plan my only hope of success is predicated upon the principles involved, and although it may receive no favor and few votes now, I am profoundly impressed with the conviction, that if this Union is ever restored, it must be done with impartial suffrage and general amnesty. Gentlemen on all sides freely admit the justice of these principles, but express a fear that the country is not yet prepared to meet the issue. Let us not deceive ourselves; the people understand these questions better than we suppose. The leading minds of the nation have proclaimed from the beginning the doctrine of these resolutions. The people are in advance of Congress in their demands for justice, and in their magnanimous generosity to a vanquished enemy. All they demand is security for the future, and with it they proceed to the work of restoration "with malice toward none, with charity for all." To start right in this matter it is only necessary to adhere to first principles, and constantly bear in mind that—

"Mankind are all by nature free and equal,
'Tis their consent alone gives just dominion."

Protection and allegiance are reciprocal. It is the duty of the Government to protect; of the subject to obey. Where both these duties are performed by the respective parties, peace and order must follow. Monarchical government is founded upon the idea that the sovereign is the source of all power and the guardian of the rights of the people. Republican government is founded upon the idea that the people are the only source of legitimate authority and the guardians of their own rights through the instrumentality of the ballot. The theory of monarchical government is that the sovereign only can be trusted; the theory of republican government is that the people must be trusted. Monarchical and republican Governments are the only Governments tolerable among men. The mixed forms of oligarchies and aristocracies are only a multiplication of tyrants to prey upon the people. Our fathers established a republican Government on the representative basis, and declared that all power emanated from the people, and that all men were equal in the right to exercise that power in a constitutional way at the ballot-box. But in practice they failed to come up to the high standard of their theory; they even tolerated slavery as an unavoidable evil, and from a supposed necessity ignored all the civil and political rights of the colored man, and even counted him as a chattel. It was a declaration of rights for all men, but a Government for white men only. The theory was good, the practice in this respect fatally defective. Disfranchisement and slavery in a portion of the Republic produced the results which might have been expected. The master exercised, both in the local and General Government, the power belonging to him as a freeman and the power belonging to his slaves. This created an inequality in the beginning. The slaveholder was more powerful than the non-slaveholder. This inequality and violation of republican principles produced arrogance and intolerance on the part of the slaveholding South, and jealousy and hatred on the part of the non-slaveholding North. Free labor was odious to the southern aristocracy, slave labor was still more odious to the Democracy of the North. For a time an effort was made by our statesmen to keep up a balance of power between the slave and non-slaveholding States, and all manner of expedients were attempted to compromise and reconcile the irrepressible conflict between slavery and freedom, but all to no purpose. Neither felt safe, or, indeed, was safe, while its antagonistic principle existed in the Government. The inevitable conflict came, and after four years of death, carnage, and desolating war, democracy was triumphant, and the aristocratic institutions of the South, based upon slavery and inequality of human rights, were overthrown and utterly crushed. The triumph of arms was complete. The question now presented is, shall the triumph of democratic principles be equally so? There are two great obstacles in the way, both based upon passion and prejudice, and each seems nearly insurmountable. One is hatred of rebels; and a demand that they shall be disfranchised and enslaved—for disfranchisement is slavery. The other is hatred of the negro, and a demand that he shall be disfranchised and robbed of the power of self-protection and virtually reenslaved. The great mass of the people of the South are either rebels or blacks, and if we yield to either demand the struggle is not ended. The democratic principle of the equality of all men in the right to protect themselves at the ballot-box will still be denied. The party left in power, whether it be black men or white men, will soon display all the meaner qualities of petty despotism, intolerance, arrogance, contempt for labor, and above all a fierce hatred for the democratic protective principle of the equality of man. If we yield to both these demands, and disfranchise both blacks and whites, what will become of our free Government, for which we were willing to sacrifice the last dollar and the last man? I am aware with what effect the argument for disfranchisement of rebels can be urged to the soldier, still heated with the conflict of battle; to the widows and orphans, destitute and sorrowing beneath the afflictions brought upon them by a wicked and cruel rebellion; with the laboring masses of the North, still smarting under the insults heaped by southern aristocracy upon the "mudsill" democracy of the loyal States—in short, with every loyal man who loves the Union and hates its enemies. But it is not the part of men and Christians to appeal to these most natural sentiments of the human heart unless it be necessary to continue the conflict for the attainment of a great principle. Now is the time to declare for human rights and the equality of man before the law, and if that be still denied no human power can stay the conflict. But can we not now claim that the loyal men of this nation by their valor and by their sacrifices have won not only for themselves but for every man in all this broad land the glorious right of self-government, and that they and their posterity are to reap a rich harvest of blessings as the fruits of the free institutions they have rescued? May we not say to the South, "It was not your young men whose lives we sought, it was not your property we desired to destroy, but we found these sheltering and protecting and hedging about an institution in conflict with human liberty, and in conflict with the Union, and in destroying it we were compelled to overthrow its defenders; but if you have ceased to defend it and war upon the Union we will now cease to harm you?" All we want is justice for all men, and we will become the advocates of mercy for all men and amnesty and forgiveness for the past and a promise of friendship for the future. Let justice and mercy stand together, and the demands of each are satisfied.

"The quality of mercy is not strained;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath; it is twice blessed;
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes;
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown;
His scepter shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings;
But mercy is above this scepter'd sway;
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings;
It is an attribute to God himself;
And earthly power doth then show likest God's,
When mercy seasons justice."

Let justice be done and then it becomes the duty of every loyal man to invoke mercy even for those who have attempted the destruction of our free institutions. We will then reflect that the South is not alone responsible for slavery and all its woes; that the North and civilized Europe have all played a part in planting this vile institution upon the most favored section of our common country; and that the whole nation has been clothed in sackcloth and ashes for this great crime. When the evil is removed and the rights of man acknowledged we will cease to inquire who is most to blame or who is most guilty, but we will labor to forget the past in view of the bright prospect of universal peace and universal justice. But while the war lasts, whether it be a conflict upon the battlefield or at the ballot-box, all men loyal to equal rights and even-handed justice will be arrayed in fierce antagonism with the enemies of liberty.

But it is said that the negro is ignorant. Grant it. That he is inferior to the white. Grant it. That the great mass of them will not vote intelligently. Grant it. But what are you to do with him? He must either exercise his own political rights or somebody must exercise them for him. You once trusted the duty of exercising both the civil and political rights of the blacks to the whites and it came near destroying every spark of republicanism they ever possessed. It destroyed all their love for democratic institutions, and caused them to make almost superhuman efforts to destroy the best democratic-republican Government ever organized.

It is now a fixed fact that it is not safe to add to the political and social power of the white man the political and social power of the black man. The white man cannot exercise that amount of power and remain a friend of free institutions; hence it becomes a necessity either to destroy the negro so that he shall no longer be a source of power to corrupt the whites, or to trust him with his own political and civil rights. One thing is certain, that the negro must have the ballot or have no friends; and being poor and friendless, and surrounded as he is by enemies, his fate is extermination.

But give him the ballot, and he will have plenty of white friends, for the people of the United States love votes and office more than they hate negroes. I need not allude to the kindly feelings the ballot secures for the poor, for you have plenty of illustrations at every election. There are many classes of poor people in the North who would be little better than slaves but for the power of the ballot, before which not only politicians but merchant princes and millionaires tremble; and the mighty Executive of forty million people bows in humble submission to the omnipotent power of the ballot. In a republic it is mightier than both pen and sword. Before slavery was abolished the master was interested in protecting the slave from ruffianism and violence, but now he has no protection but the sword or the ballot. We will not give him the former. We want no more blood. We must give him the latter or betray him from slavery, not to liberty, but to destruction. We talk of giving equal civil rights, but he answers in the language of the poet—

"So let them ease their hearts with prate
Of equal rights which men ne'er knew;
I have a love for freedom too."

Give him the ballot and he will secure his own freedom, which includes all the balance.

Freedmen's Bureaus, civil rights bills, are all very well in their way, but very expensive in their operation. They can effect very little in protecting or governing four million people. The government of a Freedmen's Bureau is not self-government, and the sooner we commence to give these people self-government the better. Immediate and universal suffrage may not be wise, but what danger can there be to allow all the negroes to vote with like educational, intellectual, and moral qualifications with the whites hereafter to become voters. If the rising generation of whites are unable to compete on equal terms in these respects with their late slaves, the negro must be regarded as superior. But there is no question of competition in it. It is simply a question of self-protection, and the negro must have the ballot for his own protection, and it must come to this before the conflict will cease. The whites who have been in this rebellion must also have the ballot and full enfranchisement or they must be driven out of the country, for if you retain them here disfranchised enemies, the extraordinary powers necessarily devolved upon the few whom you trust with political rights must make them tyrants. The principle is that a man to be free must exercise political power for himself. If he is not allowed to do this he is a slave. If he is allowed to do more he is to that extent a despot. Every attempt to govern the people of any State by a minority, however loyal that minority may be, is a mockery on republican institutions and will inevitably produce anarchy and discord. We must either abandon our principles or repudiate the idea of dealing with irresponsible minorities and calling them the people. There will be no peace or prosperity in Maryland, Missouri, or Tennessee until the people are enfranchised.

But we are told that if the rebels are allowed to vote those States will fall immediately into disloyal hands; that the power of those States will be used to embarrass the Government and to degrade and persecute loyal men. This is undoubtedly true if the rebels only are enfranchised; but that they will ultimately, and at no distant day, achieve the ballot no sensible man can doubt. In their struggle to obtain this, so necessary for their protection, millions of the American people will sympathize, aid, and approve their efforts, for the principle that a white man (who is allowed to live) ought to vote is too deep-rooted in the nature of the American people to be ignored or repudiated. But they tell us when this is done the life and liberty of every loyal man, both black and white, is in jeopardy. Grant it. Nobody is insane enough to doubt it. But what is the remedy? There are but two: military despotism by the General Government, or an extension of the franchise to the loyal as well as the disloyal; for in each of those States the majority of the whole people are to-day acknowledged to be loyal; and whether we are in favor of negro suffrage or not is not the question. The question is, shall this Government be in loyal or disloyal hands—in the hands of its friends or the hands of its enemies? It is too late for the Republican party to dodge the issue. There have been too many speeches made in this Congress in favor of negro suffrage to deny that it is a part of the Republican creed. There have been too many votes in this Congress sustaining the principle of suffrage to admit of any doubt of the real design and purposes of the Union party. If we deny our principles the proof of our insincerity will overwhelm us before the people. There is nothing left, if we would have a party, but to affirm and justify our principles. Any attempt to hide them is prima facie evidence that they are contraband of political warfare, and subject to confiscation before the tribunal of the people. I was slow in committing myself to the necessity of negro suffrage. My constituents were opposed to it; my education and mode of thinking had been opposed to it; but when I found the Union party committed to it; when I was thoroughly convinced that it alone would protect the negro and redeem the pledge of the Government that he should be free; when I was forced to the conclusion that the fifteen original slave States must shortly be handed over to the enemies of the Government to aid the Democracy in repudiating the national debt, and, perchance, paying the confederate debt, in making loyalty odious and treason honorable, in rewarding traitors and persecuting Union men, unless we extended the ballot to the friends of the Union for our mutual protection, I was resolved to meet the issue, and meet it squarely. Any attempt to conceal our designs will be proof positive of a conscious weakness and a want of faith in the correctness of our principles.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. STEWART. I prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Does the Senator from Nevada say that the Democratic party of this country would, if they had it in their power, repudiate the national debt or would assume the confederate debt? I should like a frank answer. I only refer to it because I observe that the Senator has repeated an intimation which I have seen in the public press.

Mr. STEWART. I will answer the Senator very frankly. For myself, I think there is too much danger to run the risk of giving them the power, and I propose to retain it and not take the chances.

The second section of the constitutional amendment proposed by the committee can be justified upon no other theory than that the negroes ought to vote; and negro suffrage must be vindicated before the people in sustaining that section, for it does not exclude the non-voting population of the North, because it is admitted that there is no wrong in excluding from suffrage aliens, females, and minors. But we say, if the negro is excluded from suffrage he shall also be excluded from the basis of representation. Why this inequality? Why this injustice? For injustice it would be unless there be some good reason for this discrimination against the South in excluding her non-voting population from the basis of representation. The only defense that we can make to this apparent injustice is that the South commits an outrage upon human rights when she denies the ballot to the blacks, and we will not allow her to take advantage of her own wrong, or profit by this outrage. Does any one suppose it possible to avoid this plain issue before the people? For if they will sustain you in reducing the representation of the South because she does not allow the negro to vote, they will do so because they think it is wrong to disfranchise him. Why, then, I ask, will they not sustain you in stopping the wrong at once? Why license the South to outrage equal rights for the small compensation of reduced representation? You do not license murder. Why not? Because it is a crime. Why should you barter away human rights and authorize oppression? Is that no crime?

It is most evident, sir, if we gain a victory at all it will be because the people are satisfied the black loyalist ought to vote; the verdict will be for suffrage. But the verdict will be surplusage. No judgment can be entered on it in favor of human rights. The issue in the pleadings is too narrow. The relief sought cannot be granted. The rebel State governments, with all their local machinery, must at once fall into the hands of the enemies of the Union, and both the black and white loyalists must then be turned over to the tender mercies of a fierce people smarting under a thousand imaginary wrongs and burning with unquenchable vengeance. But you say you will disfranchise the rebels, and the plan of the committee proposes continuance of test oaths, disfranchisements, exclusions from Federal office, &c. The accomplishment of this involves military despotism and the utter destruction of republican institutions in the South. This only aggravates the evils, adds to the calamities of our common country; for, instead of liberating four million blacks, you will have enslaved eight million whites. The President of the United States will become Dictator as well as President—Dictator of eleven States, President of twenty-five. Since it is evident that we must either have disfranchisement and military despotism or enfranchisement and liberty, there can be no doubt of the verdict of the American people. They have had more difficult questions to decide, and have decided on the broad principles of human rights. The united voice of the loyal North demands the opportunity to settle every question that can again disturb the peace or endanger the liberties of the people or the perpetuity of the Union once for all. The patriotic sentiments echoed from the mountains of Switzerland are reëchoed from the loyal American heart. Grant impartial suffrage and universal amnesty, and the great work is accomplished. I ask the Secretary to read the Swiss address.

The Secretary read as follows:

Address of the Swiss Conventions (Comités) (of Geneva, Lausanne, Neuchâtel, Tessin, and Berne) in favor of the freedmen, and of the Assembly convoked at Geneva on the 29th March, 1866, by the Geneva Convention.

To the President and

Congress of the United States of America:

Mr. President, Messrs. Members of Congress: For four years we have, as it were, lived with you, have borne your grievances, been rendered joyous at your deliverance, and have gloried in your success.

When the election of Lincoln announced to the world that you had had enough of the system which abused you, enough of complicity and compromise with slavery, of man-hunting ordained by slavery, of conquests for the profit of slavery, of politics in favor of the party of slavery, we gave thanks to God.

When your Union was disrupted by revolt, when your prosperity was crippled, (écroulé) when many voices had prophesied the dissolution of the Union, we hailed the commencement of a new and a better life for your people.

When military reverses menaced your noble cause, we still believed that it would not perish. When Europe lent, or seemed to lend, an intervention in favor of the South toward violating your blockades and in recognition of the rebel confederacy, we always believed that something would interpose itself between the design and the execution; that your grand principle would intervene, and through that you would become invincible.

When it was generally believed and said that peace negotiations would render nugatory the moral results of the war, that you would compromise with the prejudices and the institutions of the South, we always believed that you would not lay down your arms until you had destroyed your real enemy, that is to say, slavery.

When the death of Lincoln plunged us in mourning, we believed that Lincoln's successor would stake his honor on the continuance and the completion of his work.

Finally, when you have announced to the world that the constitutional amendment was adopted, that already there was no single slave upon the soil of the Union, we have heard within expressible emotion this glorious progress, this greatest event of our age.

It is this sentiment which we would manifest to-day as a duty. Of slight importance though the testimony may be, it shall not be said that the voice of Switzerland should not make itself heard in your applause. You have far surpassed the hopes of those who hoped the most. At the same moment in which your trials terminated you pronounced the talismanic word of freedom. It will make itself heard throughout the New World; the Spanish treaty will be suppressed; you will annihilate Brazilian slavery. A whole race suffering in bondage shall be freed at the sound.

These are rare days in the history of mankind, when politics and the Gospel move hand in hand—these days of sunshine unobscured by a cloud.

After such days, in resuming the course of ordinary life, we should guard against dangers from contingencies, and set aside obstacles. To finish is more difficult than to begin; to make sure its application more arduous than the announcement of a principle.

The labors that await you to-day are not less important, and are more complex and difficult to surmount than those of yesterday.

But the one goes not without the other. Sad will be the condition of your enfranchised slaves if you make not citizens of them.

Between slavery and liberty—real liberty—there are no breathing-places. Thus, what do the enemies of the Union now predict? That freedom will destroy the freedmen; that, tired of them, you will succumb to the ennui of the fatiguing problem; that you will no longer listen to the voice of the poor negroes; that it will not matter to you whether they remain or depart, whether they live or die; that in the rude contact with your prejudices and contempt they will perish, as the Indians have perished; that your pharisaical abolition will find itself resulting in their extermination; that the pure glory of to-day will turn to shame on the morrow.

We protest against such dark presages: we ask that they may be branded with falsehood. We know that your acts will so brand them, and very soon.

The more you desire the dark question to cease troubling the United States the more you will feel that it must be disposed of. Unfinished questions have no pity for the repose of mankind. And how shall that completion be attained? But two things remain to be done: to maintain your Freedmen's Bureau and to suppress all civil and political distinctions on account of color. To refuse Federal protection to the slaves that were—a protection indispensable to the transition—is to give them up purely and simply to the laws, the administration, the tribunals of the South. It would be to decree the reestablishment of slavery with the addition of hatred, and, by consequence, of atrocity. To conserve political exclusion to the black race, as a race, would be to deny the principle, even the name, for which the North has so valiantly combated.

That prudent measures should accompany the conferring of the right of suffrage in the South—that, for instance, it should be limited to those who can read and write, without distinction of color—we can well understand. But what we cannot understand, nor can any of those who teach and sustained your cause, is the exclusion of the race. If the southern States were readmitted to Congress without imposing upon them, as a condition, the equality of races, we should bitterly deplore it; we would bow the head in humility and sadness, and await in fear a recommencement of those hostilities between the South and North, between the Republicans and the Democrats, the end of which had seemed only to have come round.

But what would most disturb all our hopes would be to see those freedmen who had spilled their blood for the defense of the Union rewarded for their devotion by being deprived of those rights which are, in all republican Governments, the appanage of those brave men who are called to bear arms for their country, at the same time that the rebels, who had torn the bosom of their country, and begged the intervention of the foreigner, not only reënjoy the rights they had before the war, but made the arbiters absolute of the fate of loyal citizens. To give to those guilty of high treason the power to reduce good citizens to the position of political pariahs—to reward treachery and to discourage patriotism—to give in to those who pronounced self-government impossible and self-annihilating.

That one condition necessary to future peace should be imposed on the rebel States, the sense, namely, of the above, we doubt not you understand, for you have already imposed upon them an affirmative vote upon the amendment abolishing slavery.

One step more, and your task is finished. By the side of the abolition of slavery it remains to you to equalize the races before the law. What is abolition without equality? It remains to you to decide that the rebel States, before reëntering Congress, should abolish all distinctions based on color. Political franchises in all respects should be enjoyed equally by blacks and whites. These guarantees obtained, open to them your arms and hasten toward a general reconciliation. Avoid any unnecessary prolongation of the present interregnum, (régime exceptionnel). Add to your other glories that of reëstablishing the power of your Government at the immediate close of a bitter civil war. Liberty is bold and strong; and of what use are her boldness and strength if she cannot trust and pardon?

It is repugnant to us to conceive your stopping half way, and conferring upon the former slaves liberty without equality, or, in other words, liberty without the conditions of freedom; liberty without dignity; liberty with an unopened future, without possible progress; liberty without that upon which it becomes great and attains its end; thus you would reconstitute a new slave party in Congress—further oppressions of slaves throughout the South. Seeking for peace you would reorganize war—servile war at first, for you cannot pronounce with impunity the words RE FREE; and when those whom you have declared free feel that they have neither protection nor rights, nor means of regular action, they are almost infallibly driven to employ other means. Civil war would follow. Is it possible that the blood of the blacks shed on the other side of the Potomac, that cruel oppressions, would not speed that war, and that the generous instincts of the North would not reawaken? They would complain, they would denounce iniquities, they would intervene morally, and the ancient quarrel would blaze forth again. As faithful friends we have better hopes for you. We have said much, convinced that you will easily perceive that there is a warm sympathy in the depths of our fears, and that our sincerity is strengthened by respect and by attachment.

May He who has guarded you and protected you thus far continue to guard and protect you to the end; that He may empower you to finish what you have begun—to treat as fellow-citizens and to love as brothers those who, thanks to you, are no longer in slavery; and that He may accomplish for you now and hereafter all those good wishes with which our hearts are filled.

GENEVA, April 10, 1866.

Mr. STEWART. How truthful the remark that "unfinished questions have no pity for the repose of mankind." While four million blacks are struggling for the ballot as the only protection known in republican Governments for life, liberty, and property; while the military arm of this Government is outstretched to enforce disfranchisement of rebels and restrain them from warring upon the life of the nation and the rights of the disfranchised blacks, gentlemen may cry, "Peace! peace!" but there is no peace.

"For freedom's battle, once begun,
Bequeathed by bleeding sire to son,
Though baffled oft, is ever won."

The contest may be lost for years if left unsettled now, but there can be no repose for this country until the principles of the Declaration of Independence are fully acknowledged and practically enforced from ocean to ocean, from the Gulf to the Lakes.

I have often heard the appeal of earnest men in this great contest, and have too often hesitated at what seemed impractical or impossible, but before I could realize the grandeur of the design the work was accomplished. I hear the same warning voice of zealous reformers and earnest republicans proclaiming the simple truths of equal rights and generous amnesty; and as in the past the dark night of slavery and human bondage disappeared before the sunlight of humanity and justice, so in the future the clouds of prejudice and passion which envelope the rights of millions of American citizens will dissipate before the reason and patriotism of the loyal masses of the people.

What guarantees shall be demanded on the restoration of the South, and by what right do we demand guarantees? In proceeding to this branch of my subject I find my own views so well expressed in an able paper from the pen of Robert Dale Owen that I avail myself of his forcible language:

"To the Editor of the Chronicle:

"I take exception, in these days, to no contrarieties of opinion touching the proper mode of restoring harmony between the late belligerent sections of our country. That is a problem which may tax the best energies of the wisest among us, and in regard to the solution of which the ablest may differ. But if the task before us is difficult, it is not hopeless; not, I firmly believe, doubtful even. I have faith in the people. I have faith, stronger still, that God, who forsook us not in the gloom of the rebellion, will guide us now; when the scene of combat is changed from the field of battle to the election precinct and the legislative hall.

"The essential is, that we approach this great subject in a fitting spirit. It avails nothing to talk about the enormity of secession and the condign punishment it merits. The punishment of nations is in other hands than ours. If the judgments of God have not already stamped slavery as a sin and treason against a beneficent Government as a crime, in vain are the efforts of man in that direction.

"Nor let us, in our indignation, forget how that sin of slavery, the cause of the rebellion, originally came upon the South; against her own will; against her solemn protest. In December, 1770, the King of Great Britain commanded the Governor of Virginia, 'under pain of the highest displeasure, to assent to no law prohibiting the importation of slaves.' Virginia, in April, 1772, addressed the King in remonstrance, saying to him these remarkable words: 'The importation of slaves, a trade of great inhumanity, will endanger the very existence of your Majesty's American dominions.' Maryland and Carolina followed that lead.

"But aside from this, what so unphilosophical and unjust as the spirit of the Pharisee? It is due to a geographical accident that we were not born slaveholders in the city of Charleston. Dare we assert that if we had been we should have been juster men than they, more scrupulous about living by the labor of others? Shall we stand up, in the temple of our own self-righteousness, and say, 'God, we thank thee that we are not as other men, or even as these South Carolinians?'

"We can never, indeed, forget—God forbid that we should—the terrible consequences of treason; the hardships, the sufferings, the lost lives, the parents and widows bereaved, the countless thousands of homes made desolate among us. But to avert evils in the future better befits a Christian people than to avenge injuries of the past. Let us learn of the despised and the lowly. Is it we only who have injuries to requite? What were our sufferings during the war compared to the thousand wrongs perpetrated, throughout generations, against the millions of southern slaves? But though the iron entered into their souls, did they return evil for evil? Did they forget, when the day of liberation dawned, the words of the text, 'Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord?'

"If there be among our people a revengeful element, let us not pander to it. If we impose conditions before we restore political rights to those who, defying law and Constitution by force of arms, became public enemies, it ought to be in defense, not in requital.

"If we impose conditions.' To a dispassionate looker-on it must seem strange that, here in the North, that should be a question at all. At the close of a four years' embittered war—producing a radical change in the legal and social condition of four million people, creating two vast antagonistic public debts, and entailing a thousand diversities of interest between millions on one side and millions on the other—it would be a thing incredible that government could be properly or safely resumed, without stipulation or precaution, as if nothing had happened. At such a juncture in our national affairs wise precautionary measures are as strictly a dictate of duty as they are clearly a matter of right."

"To us, and not to the 'unjust aggressor' who appealed to the wage of battle and lost, belongs, at this time, the right to decide what guarantees are needed for the public safety, and how that 'unjust aggressor' shall be rendered 'incapable of doing mischief with the same ease in future.' Dearly we paid for that right! We shall commit a folly unparalleled in the annals of nations if we neglect to use it.

"But if all things are lawful for us, all things are not expedient. Thus, though due time must be taken for the maturing and consummation of precautionary measures, yet, on the other hand, one section of a Republic containing a fourth of its inhabitants cannot, except for a season, safely be shut out from Federal representation. Therefore the political rights of the States lately in insurrection should be restored to them at the earliest day consistently with the peace and safety of the country.

"The dangers attendant on unconditional restoration, which threaten that peace and safety, seem to me three in number; two of a political, the other of a financial character."

I concur with Mr. Owen that the dangers to be apprehended are three in number: two political and one financial. But I classify them thus: the political dangers are, first, immediate and absolute control of the several southern State governments by persons still hostile to the Union; and second, the increased representation in Congress of the disloyal elements of the South. The first is by far the greater evil, but for it the report of the committee furnishes no remedy whatever. The second and the lesser evil is but partially provided for. It is not proposed to eradicate the evil, but if possible to diminish its extent by a small reduction of representation in the other House. I very much fear that this will rather intensify the rebel elements than induce an extension of suffrage. While the franchise is restricted to the whites the rebels will be sure of a full voice in the Senate and a united (though a reduced) vote in the House and complete control of their several State governments. The danger of a division of this immense power by the extension of suffrage would more than counterbalance the loss in the other House. They would submit to this small loss of power and attempt to obtain satisfaction therefor in a more unlimited control over the destinies of the race we have attempted to liberate. I doubt very much whether this change will benefit the black man. It relieves him from misrepresentation in Congress by denying him any representation whatever.

The financial danger, so far as it depends upon an assumption or payment of the rebel debt or compensation for emancipated slaves, is properly guarded against in the fourth section of the report. But the further and greater financial danger which threatens our national credit grows out of the political dangers which I have mentioned. The commotions and agitations, and perchance civil wars, growing out of the unsettled political questions will disturb our financial system more than the rebels could possibly do by any efforts they might make to saddle upon a loyal people a debt incurred in the interest of slavery and secession. There are but two possible modes of escape from the political dangers which menace the peace and prosperity of our country. The first is disfranchisement of rebels by military power, for it can be done in no other way. To this I am opposed, because it violates the democratic principle and is utterly repugnant to free institutions; because it is against Christianity and humanity; because it is the usual and direct road to despotism; because it has been often tried, and its fruits have been in all ages, in all times, and in all countries, the bitter dregs of slavery, tyranny, human misery, and wretchedness; and because it must inevitably result in the destruction of the Union and the liberty of the people. The second is enfranchisement of the blacks. The trying times which Mr. Lincoln thought might come when the colored man could help "to keep the jewel of liberty in the family of freedom" are upon us. Two fifths of the people of the eleven States are colored, and are instinctively loyal and real friends of the Government. This two fifths was a great drawback upon secession, and after the emancipation proclamation, in spite of all efforts to deceive the blacks, they felt that the Government was their friend, and although they may have done very little effective fighting, still they aided us and injured the enemy in a thousand ways: by giving information, by kindness to prisoners, by the moral effect of enemies at home upon the cause of secession, and by the subtraction of their labor from the rebels and adding it to the resources of the Government.

After this proclamation the South became a house divided against itself, and the work of tearing down was half accomplished. Suppose to-day the South were united against the Government, and we became involved in a war with Great Britain or France, would we not expect a fearful struggle? But suppose we had two fifths of the people in the South as our friends, would we not regard that fact as a great acquisition of strength? Who can say that an emergency of this kind may never happen when we will need friends in the South as we did during the late war? And remember that the blacks are now free and capable of being more useful friends than they were as slaves. Suppose in settling with our enemies we should make no effectual provisions for the safety of our friends, but turn these State governments over to the late rebels, our friends would be at the mercy of our enemies and compelled to make terms. Would it be impossible, in that event, for our late enemies to convince our late friends that our friendship after all was of little value? And might not the act of emancipation be regarded by the blacks as a snare and a delusion rather than a blessing? Deserted by all the world, surrounded by their enemies, without means of self-protection, might they not under such circumstances sink in despair and relapse into a hopeless state of wretchedness and misery, awaiting in silence their fate of extermination, prepared for them according to the predictions of the late slaveholders? After all this might not the Union soldier in another war for liberty look in vain for the trusted black friend whom he found ministering to his wants in the darkest hours of the late rebellion?

But aside from their usefulness to us in aiding to sustain the Government, dare we offend a just God by failing to redeem the solemn pledge of liberty which this nation made to the slave? Has not the late war proved a sufficient warning that nations are punished for wrong and oppression and for disregarding human rights? But you still insist the negro is ignorant and ought not to vote. Are not many of the whites also ignorant? This argument proves too much, and if practically put in force so as to exclude all ignorant men, both North and South, the reduction would be too great. But if you allow, as you must, ignorant men who are disloyal to vote, why not let ignorant loyal men vote? All that the friends of suffrage ask is, that the black should vote upon a like educational, property, and moral qualification with the white. Let the States place the standard where they will, provided a majority are not disfranchised and a government not republican set up in violation of the Constitution; but let it be impartial. We go even further, and, not wishing to disfranchise any who now vote, we propose to relieve them from restrictive qualifications which may hereafter be imposed on voters, but we insist that the ballot shall be placed within the reach of every American citizen of whatever race or color. Place any safeguards you please on the ballot, but make them impartial, and we will take the chances for the negro.

Does any one suppose that the Senators and Representatives from South Carolina would not soon have a loyal constituency if the ballot were within reach of the black man? In that State over one half of the people would be a solid column (a black column, if you please,) of loyalty. Does any one doubt that there would be whites enough to join them to obtain control of the State? Suppose those who join them are mere politicians, and they go with the negroes for office and spoils, would it be the first political combination formed for that purpose, and would not those who should obtain office and power by such means be compelled to respect the loyal sentiments of their constituents in order to retain power; and would not the ordinary desire of the politician to serve his friends prompt him to make equal laws and sustain the Union? The more this question is considered the plainer it becomes. I like a platform of principles which will bear examination and investigation. The simple fact is, give the people the ballot and the rulers are their servants, withhold it and the people exist at the will and sufferance of their rulers, and this rule applies South as well as North. Suppose you should withhold the ballot from the laboring classes of the North and allow capital to legislate for labor, aristocracy to make laws for democracy, how many civil rights bills and Freedmen's Bureaus would it require to secure freedom to the masses of the people and make them contented and happy?

But let Senators be warned by the grand demonstrations of the people in favor of these measures of protection for the blacks. Let this voice be understood. What does it mean? Is it difficult of interpretation? Not at all. It means that the blacks shall be free and that Congress shall demand full and complete securities for their freedom. In less than six months every Union man will see that there is no protection, no freedom, for the blacks without the ballot, and the universal sentiment of the loyal masses will demand the enfranchisement of the oppressed race. This is security for the future, self-supporting and self-sustaining security. It permits every man to protect himself, and his own self-interest will prompt him to do it well. It will not impoverish your Treasury and burden you with taxation. It will not consolidate your Government and destroy the legitimate functions of the States; but it will strengthen the foundations of the Republic and enlarge the base and prepare it for the grand superstructure which the builders of our institutions designed when they proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence the equality of every man in the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and the perfect equality of every man to strive to equal and to strive to excel his neighbor in everything great, good, and useful.

But I am asked, would you allow the leaders of the rebellion to return to Congress to insult the loyal North with their odious presence in the councils of the nation, there to plot treason and revive loyalty? I answer, no. I would take the proper measures to prevent it. I would chain them to the ballot of the loyal blacks, and hold them in the strong grasp of a loyal people. They will not send them here. You may frame all the exclusion bills you please, but if you exclude loyalty from the ballot-box, and allow none but rebels with a small portion of loyal whites to vote, disloyalty will find expression in your national Legislature in the persons of lower and meaner men than the intellectual chieftains of the rebellion. The desire to exclude a few from office as an exception or an expression of a sentiment can accomplish no great good. It is not worth serious consideration. It is like disputing about an old whip in a negotiation for a first-class six-horse team. Exclusion from the franchise and office is idle. It is too difficult to accomplish, and no good results can possibly follow. We do not wish to punish the South. It has already been sufficiently scourged and humiliated by the inevitable results of a bloody war. The avenging hand of Providence has desolated and devastated their land and smitten down the first-born in every household, and if they will now let the bondmen depart from oppression in peace, with the ballot as their shield and buckler, why should we demand further vengeance? "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord."

I will not attempt a description of the horrors of the civil war brought upon the South by the crime of slavery and the conspiracy for its perpetuation. In the language of Burke, "A storm of universal fire blasted every field, consumed every house, destroyed every temple." The furnaces of retribution for the sins of the people were heated seven times hotter than they were wont to be heated, and the vials of wrath were poured out in torrents on the heads of the conspirators, consuming slavery and destroying treason. Are we not satisfied? Cruel slavery and foul treason shall be no more in America unless we revive and resuscitate the former by disfranchisement and oppressions until it breed new treason to be expiated upon our children with more terrible vengeance than the sins of the fathers have brought upon us. It is no time for crimination and recrimination. This war was not the work of man but of God. Let the North mourn her dead heroes sacrificed in the cause of liberty and humanity, the noblest cause in which man can die. Let the South mourn her dead sacrificed for the crime of slavery, and let her respect the sacrifice and go and sin no more. Let the vengeance of man be stayed. The visitations of destruction and punishment are beyond our comprehension or control. Let not our small individual wrongs and personal prejudices, too insignificant for consideration when we contemplate the grand dispensations of Providence, delay us, or stand as barriers to the consummation of the great work of enfranchisement and liberty. I proclaim as the true platform of principles, which shall survive this Congress and the present age and serve as a landmark for the future, "Peace and good-will toward all men;" liberty and union; impartial suffrage and universal amnesty.

I appeal to every Union man to declare his faith and stand by his principles; deal honestly with himself and frankly with the South. It is time they understood the full extent of our demands. The opponents of equal rights never argue the right or wrong of impartial suffrage. They assume that it is a great political crime and then argue that the Union party is committed to it. If we join issue with them on this point we must fail, for we are committed to it, and they can prove it. Upon that issue we must lose before the people. But suppose we admit what is true and cannot be denied, and justify our conduct by declaring that we are in favor of impartial suffrage because it is right, and ask our opponents, do you object? If so, why? Dare you deny protection to the friends of the Union while you demand political rights for its enemies? Dare you say that a Union soldier shall not vote, but a rebel soldier shall? Dare you say that he who fed our starving prisoners shall not vote, but that he who starved them shall? Dare you say that this Government shall punish its friends and reward its enemies? Dare you contend that four million loyal citizens shall be outlawed and trampled under foot and allowed to perish because our enemies are exasperated against them on account of their friendship for us, and at the same time ask enfranchisement for our enemies so that they may destroy our friends, menace our liberty, and embarrass our finances? Dare you deny liberty to the loyal and claim power and freedom for the disloyal? In politics as in law, if you join issue on a false plea you will lose your cause. It is false to say we are not in favor of impartial suffrage; and if we make that issue we shall be defeated. But it is true that all men are equally entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and if our enemies dare join issue with us on these great principles we are sure of an overwhelming verdict from a loyal and liberty-loving people. Suppose we declare that when the rights of man are freely acknowledged and made secure, that we are in favor of amnesty and mercy for our enemies; dare our opponents say they are for vengeance and blood? Suppose we say that we are contending for justice, and when that is secure our enemies shall enjoy all the civil and political rights of American citizens; dare our opponents say that they shall not enjoy those rights? Suppose we rise to the true grandeur of this great contest and declare that we mean justice, humanity, liberty, and Union; dare our opponents say they mean wrong, oppression, secession, and slavery?

Let me appeal to the people of the South to cease contending for wrong and injustice, and learn to do right and love mercy. "Blessed are the merciful for they shall obtain mercy." Men of the South, put not your trust in modern Democracy. "Beware of false prophets which come to you in sheep's clothing but inwardly are ravening wolves." Have you not heard enough of their vain-glorious boasts of power to aid you? Did they not encourage you to rebel and promise you aid and comfort in your struggle to overthrow the Government, and did they not desert you in the hour of your greatest trial? Were they not invisible in war as they had been invincible in peace? Do you desire to be betrayed into another conflict with the overwhelming forces of liberty and union? Have not your efforts to destroy the Union and trample upon equal rights been sufficiently disastrous? Do you desire your homes to be again visited by war, pestilence, and famine? Has not the work of destruction satisfied you that there is a just God who takes vengeance on the oppressor and him who denies mercy to the poor and friendless? Think not that modern Democracy can shield you from the terrible retribution that awaits you if you longer deny the inalienable rights of man. A just God has declared oppression and wrong shall depart from the land, and the loyal millions who stand by the Union will execute His commands. For a time the arts of demagogues and the cohesive power of public plunder may seem triumphant, yet they do but seem. The same grand sentiment that rallied the loyal North to strike for liberty and union will still inspire the heart and nerve the arm to finish the work so gloriously begun. The little spring from which first gushed the waters of liberty has become a mighty torrent, sweeping slavery and oppression to destruction. Modern Democracy is but the flood-wood that maddens the rushing waters but cannot stay the flood. Regard not this floating trash but heed the loyal fountains from whence the torrent flows. Attempt no further obstruction of its course, but let it do its work and wash the crime of slavery from a land sacred to freedom. Attempt not impossibilities.

The chains of bondage are broken, the shackles have fallen from the limbs of the slave, and no earthly power can rob him of enfranchisement and liberty, the birthright of an American citizen. Engage not in this wicked work, for the avenging hand cannot be stayed from those who still oppress. In such a conflict your own liberty is in jeopardy, and destruction and devastation threaten your country. Men of the South, let by-gones be by-gones and join in the glorious work of enfranchisement. Let your afflicted country have repose from this fearful strife. Give the ballot to the black man and retain it for yourselves and your posterity. The ballot is a gracious boon and none the less precious because enjoyed by the poor as well as the rich, the black as well as the white. It is the only guarantee of liberty. Is liberty less sweet when secured by all mankind? I appeal to the South in the name of the Father of the Revolution, in the name of justice and humanity, in the name of peace and union, and in the sacred name of Christianity itself to grant the ballot and receive the cordial friendship and fellowship of the brave and generous people of the loyal States. Let it be distinctly understood that if the evils of confiscation, disfranchisement, and military despotism come upon the South it will be because she refused to hear the truth from her friends, and refused to aid them to give her peace, but trusted to her enemies and those who would barter away her liberties in the vain hope of obtaining power for themselves.

Sir, my mountain home and the bold pioneers with whom I have passed all the days of my manhood, and whom I know well, call for no more blood, no more desolation, no more widows and orphans, no more accumulation of debt, but they hope for peace, union, and liberty for all. My constituents love the country and the whole country. There is no State in the Union that is not the native land of many citizens of Nevada. Their home is in the far-off mountains, but their affections cling to every village and hamlet in America. We have lived together upon the shores of the Pacific for near twenty years. The good and bad fortunes of a miner's life have been common to us all. We have learned to appreciate and respect men from all sections, and our destinies are so interwoven in our common pursuits and common interests that the continuance of this unnatural conflict disturbs and mars the happiness of all our people. Nevada advocates everything for security, nothing for revenge; everything for political safety, nothing for partisan power. Her prosperity depends to a great extent upon friendly and cordial relations among her citizens. The restoration of the South will bring peace and happiness to Nevada, and I should not represent her if I were not zealous in that work. I deny that blood, confiscations, disfranchisement, and military despotism is any part of the platform of the Union party to which I belong. If to be a radical means to thirst for human blood, love human misery, and hate mercy, then I am no radical. If to be a radical means to love the Union, the Constitution, and the free Government of the fathers, to do justice to all men and respect the rights of all, then I am a radical. I know not what others may do, but as for me I shall labor honestly and zealously to secure the adoption of any plan which offers any hope of peace and union on the principles of justice and humanity. I shall not despair until a plan looking to revenge and partisan rule shall have been adopted; a plan based on the worst passions of our nature shall have been sanctioned by this Congress, and then I shall lose all hope of any good results from our deliberations. I appeal to Senators to consider this momentous issue in the light of reason and Christianity, to be charitable for the sins of our common humanity, to deal justly, and love mercy.

I shall first offer my resolutions for amnesty and suffrage as a substitute. If I fail in that, I shall ask that they may be submitted as an alternative proposition, and if I am still unsuccessful, I will vote for the plan of the majority so long as it is a better plan than that of the President. But when Congress shall have committed itself to a platform which means either disunion or despotism, I shall await in despair the evils that threaten our country, hoping that an all-wise Providence may avert the pending storm.

I have no disposition to find fault with the committee on reconstruction. I realize the difficulties which they have been called upon to encounter. That they have acted a noble part in their efforts to harmonize conflicting opinions no one has any just reason to doubt. I rejoice in the manner in which the report is presented and the liberal spirit manifested by the committee toward those who are anxious to aid in the perfection of their plan. I hope for good results when debate shall have terminated and final conclusions shall be presented to a generous public. I cannot believe that if Congress should finally reach the conclusion that the late rebels must be supreme in their local State governments, that they will then adopt measures to exasperate those whom they trust with the life, liberty, and happiness of the black man. If the generosity of the South is to be the only guarantee of a precarious existence that is to be secured for the negro, it is cruelty to him to enrage his master—for master he will be—with aggravating legislation. If you leave him in the lion's mouth do not exasperate the lion, but appease him if possible. If you have no means of security admit the South at once and extinguish the hope of liberty in the breast of the negro, and let him make the best terms he can for his hopeless life.

The President's plan is by far the best, if Congress only aggravates and enrages the South but fails to eradicate the acknowledged evils. The President, according to Mr. Seward, is willing to take votes as a basis of representation, which differs but little from, and I think is an improvement upon, the report of the committee in that regard. He also wishes the confederate debt and claims for emancipated slaves repudiated. If nothing better can be done, let Congress take any plan that will end the conflict; but if we have principles, as we profess to have, it is our duty to affirm and vindicate them. It will be time enough to say the States will not adopt a just plan when that experiment has been tried and failed. If we are to be defeated, let us fall with our face to the foe. I have no ambition to die in an irregular or guerrilla war. My motto is civilized warfare or a square surrender. The country will not justify a distinction without a difference. If there is no difference on questions of principle there ought to be no further cross-purposes between Congress and the President. The world will brand us as factionists and our efforts as a struggle for partisan power, if we rely too much on expediency.

I hope the Senate will pardon the frankness with which I have attempted to express my views. Let amnesty and suffrage be submitted, and allow each State to act separately, and if the South adopt it, the North must; and if the North does, how can the South refuse? It is safe to say she will not jeopardize her peace and security in any such way. Let the plan embody civil rights, impartial suffrage, and repudiation of both rebel debt and claims for emancipated slaves on the one hand, and universal amnesty and restoration of rebels to civil and political rights on the other hand, and the country will finish the work. And when it is done it will be well done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WILLIAMS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment to the joint resolution proposed by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE.] Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. HOWARD. I suggest that the discussion be postponed until to-morrow, and I make that motion, that the further consideration of this subject be postponed until to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is it in order to move to strike out the third section as it stands now without offering a substitute for it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such a motion would be in order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I make that motion.

Mr. GRIMES. The question will stand, then, on that motion?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the vote will be taken on the motion to postpone the further consideration of the joint resolution until tomorrow at one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have prepared a constitutional amendment, or rather an amendment to the proposition of the committee of fifteen, which more nearly meets my own idea than any proposition that has been made, and at the suggestion of others I submit it and ask that it be printed. I do not say that I shall offer it, because I desire to vote for that proposition which will combine the greatest strength, but as this expresses more nearly my own individual idea than any other, I will ask that it be printed.

Mr. GRIMES. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Strike out sections two and three, and insert as follows:

Representation shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to the number in each State of male citizens of the United States over twenty-one years of age qualified by the laws of such State to choose members of the most numerous branch of its Legislature, and including such citizens as are disqualified for participating in rebellion.

Direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States according to the value of the real and personal taxable property situated in each State not belonging to the State or to the United States.

The proposed amendment was ordered to be printed.

BOUNTY TO INDIAN REGIMENTS.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the joint resolution (S. R. No. 87) to provide for the payment of bounty to certain Indian regiments.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It requires the Secretary of War to cause to be paid to the enlisted men of the first, second, and third Indian regiments the bounty of $100, under the same regulations and restrictions as now determine the payment of bounty to other volunteers in the service of the United States.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OFFICIAL HISTORY OF THE REBELLION.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up the joint resolution (S. R. No. 86) to provide for the publication of the official history of the rebellion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. In order to insure the publication in proper form, and at the least possible expense, of the reports and orders of commanding officers, and of all correspondence by telegraph or otherwise, and of all other documents of every description relating to the late rebellion, accumulated in the archives of the War Department since the 1st of December, 1860, as authorized by the joint resolution entitled "A resolution to provide for the printing of official reports of the operations of the armies of the United States," approved May 19, 1864, this joint resolution authorizes the Secretary of War to appoint a competent person to supervise the publication at the Public Printing Office, who is to receive a compensation for his services not to exceed $2,500 per annum, to be paid monthly by the Secretary of the Treasury, but this compensation is not to be paid for a longer period than two years from and after the passage of the resolution.

It is to be the duty of the person so appointed, with the advice of the Superintendent of Public Printing, to prepare in a proper manner for publication the manuscript of the documentary history of the rebellion, sent and to be sent from the War Department to the Public Printing Office, in strict accordance with the terms of the joint resolution of May 19, 1864, and in order to save unnecessary expense, to consolidate and eliminate therefrom, under the supervision of the Superintendent of Public Printing, such superfluous matter as will not affect the completeness and historical value of the whole; and he is to make regular reports of the progress of the work to accompany the report of the Public Printer to Congress; and the printing thereof is not to be commenced until a complete revision and arrangement of the manuscripts shall have been made.

Mr. WILSON. There is a report accompanying the resolution from the Committee on Military Affairs, which states the facts of the case perhaps with more brevity than I can state them now, and I should like to have that report read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. WILSON on the 18th instant:

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred Senate resolution No. 86, to provide for the publication of the official history of the rebellion, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

That they recommend the passage of the joint resolution without amendment. During the first session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress a joint resolution was passed, and approved by the late President, providing for the publication at the public expense of the "reports of commanding officers, all correspondence by telegraph or otherwise, and documents of every description, in relation to the existing rebellion, to be found in the archives of the War Department since the 1st day of December, 1860." The object of the resolution was to perpetuate the proud record made by the armies of the Republic in their efforts for the maintenance of the Union, and to furnish a means for historical reference and professional instruction, by the compilation and publication in a compact, convenient, and permanent form of what may be termed the official military history of the rebellion.

The war for the suppression of the rebellion being still in progress at the time of the passage of the resolution, the War Department, owing to the pressure of public business and the unavoidable incompleteness of the official records during the continuance of active operations in the field, was not able to carry out its provisions immediately. Since the return of peace, however, the work of compilation has been commenced and pushed forward as expeditiously as circumstances would allow.

Under the broad terms of the resolution all that the War Department is required and authorized to do is to furnish verbatim and literatim copies, arranged in chronological order, of every report, dispatch, letter, and other documentary paper relating to the rebellion on file in its various bureaus, for publication to the Public Printer. Although no exact estimate of the quantity of matter which the latter is called upon to print at the public expense under the law as it now stands can be made, it is evident from what is already in his hands that it is so vast, and in part of such doubtful value, as to call, on economical and other grounds, for amendatory legislation.

It is believed safe to assume that, with the comprehensive scope of the resolution, it will require a large number of volumes to comprise all the matter compiled and to be compiled by the War Department, which will make the total expense of the whole series, inclusive of the engraving of the maps accompanying the reports, amount to several hundred thousand dollars. Upon due investigation the committee have come to the conclusion that a large saving of this sum can be effected without defeating the object of the resolution. There is much matter, especially among the reports, that can be properly left out without doing injustice to any one or impairing the completeness of the publication. Of the many hundreds of maps of different size and merit, the engraving of all of which would require a vast outlay, a great number could be entirely omitted or consolidated. By proper condensation and elimination tens if not hundreds of thousands of dollars could be saved.

Nor is this the only feature of the proposed work susceptible of improvement in the opinion of the committee. The form as well as the substance of the matter to be printed needs a thorough revision. Owing to the fault partly of the authors and partly of the copyists, many of the reports are not in a condition to be incorporated in an authoritative publication that is to form an authentic record of the deeds of the loyal armies, and find its way as such into every library at home and abroad, and mold the judgment of history. Bad grammar, misspelling of geographical names, and of names of distinguished officers, and other shortcomings, should be eradicated from the manuscript before it passes into the hands of the printer.

It has also been found that the method of compilation followed under the orders of the Adjutant General is not in accordance with the terms of the resolution. It directs that the reports and all correspondence, by telegraph or otherwise, be arranged and published in "chronological order." The Adjutant General has only transmitted so far, to the Public Printing Office, reports of commanding officers, which he desires to be printed in a succession of volumes, to be followed by another containing the correspondence. As required by the resolution, the reports and correspondence pertaining to the same subject should be grouped together. It is obvious that the plan of publication adopted by the Adjutant General, if carried out, would seriously detract from the value of the volumes as a convenient means of reference, inasmuch as the orders, dispatches, letters, &c., of the War Department and commanding officers often form the key to an intelligent understanding of the operations to which they relate.

Again, the resolution requires that an index be prepared to each volume. The Adjutant General proposes to prepare a general one after the publication of the whole series. The effect of this deviation from the prescribed plan would be to render reference to the several volumes during the progress of publication a source of annoyance and perplexity. In the opinion of the committee a special index should accompany each volume, and a general one the series.

In order to insure the publication of the official military history of the rebellion in proper form, and at the least expense, the committee have deemed it best to recommend that the Secretary of War be authorized to procure the services of some competent person of ability and literary experience familiar with such work, whose duty it shall be to prepare the matter furnished by the War Department in the stated manner for the printer, and to supervise the printing of it. And for this purpose they recommend the passage of the accompanying resolution. They are confident that the small outlay of public money it authorizes will be a very economical investment and result in a large saving to the Treasury.

Mr. WILSON. I will briefly say that a resolution was passed two years ago providing for the publication of these official papers. It is a great undertaking, and it will cost several hundred thousand dollars. For the credit of the country, the work should be very carefully prepared. Besides that, if it is properly prepared, it will not cost more than two thirds as much as it will if it is printed on the plan provided by the present law. If the work is to be of real historical value, if it is to be any credit to the country, it should be well edited. It will make somewhere from thirty to fifty large volumes. The present plan is very defective indeed. In the first place, the documents and papers themselves are defective, with names misspelled, and are not well arranged. All this should be corrected. If we are to publish this work at all, it should be carefully prepared before it is put to press.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Do you mean to publish all the reports?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir; all the reports. Then there are several hundred maps that accompanied these reports. It will not be necessary to publish all those maps in order to illustrate the work, because many of them are almost duplicates of others. You want a revising mind over the whole. Whoever is to do this work should have some help, and I suppose the Department may detail clerks under him to do that kind of work. The work has to be done now in the Department.

Then there is another thing about it, and I am rather surprised at it. It would seem reasonable that whatever concerned one portion of the country or one army—General Sherman's army, for instance, in its movements and marches, all the public papers and telegraphic dispatches and reports in regard to it—should all go together because they illustrate each other; and so with the army of the Potomac; and so with all the other great military movements. Under the old resolution, the telegraphic dispatches and the reports are to be published separately, so that in order to understand them one has to read all these works. Then there is to be no index to the volumes until they are completed, and then a general index for the whole. Every volume should be indexed, and the subjects should be divided into their proper departments, so that any person wishing to learn about any of the movements of any of the armies under any of the generals would have it at his finger ends, all perfect, with the telegraphic dispatches, reports, and maps, and an index for the whole.

Now, sir, this is a simple proposition that some person shall be employed by the Secretary of War, at an annual salary of $2,500, for two years, to supervise and arrange this work. I believe it will save one third of the expense that would otherwise be incurred under the present plan. If it is carried on under the plan already ordered, the work will cost from $500,000 to $750,000. I believe that the expenditure of this $5,000 will not only make this work such a one as we ought to have, if it is put in the care of a competent man, but it will save $150,000 or $200,000. I have not a doubt of that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Would it not save more not to publish any of these things?

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Maine asks if it would not save more not to publish any. That is very true; but my judgment is that these reports and papers ought to be published, and published at the earliest possible day. They are of great historical importance. They should be properly edited and go into our libraries and before the country for the information and instruction of our own people, and as a historical work. We have already ordered them to be published. Congress has passed a resolution providing for their publication; and a large amount of them are in the printing office now. The Superintendent of Public Printing has been holding back for some weeks in order to see if anything is to be done here on this subject. If not, he will commence the publication, imperfect as it is, and I believe nearly every page will have a defect upon it unless we put it under the eye of a competent man. I hope, therefore, if we are to have this work published at all, that the Senate will see to it that it is properly edited, and that it is a work worthy of the country.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to strike out in the sixth and seventh lines of the first section the words, "and of all other documents of every description relating to the late rebellion." This proposition is a very comprehensive one. As the resolution now reads, it says:

That in order to insure the publication in proper form, and at the least possible expense, of the reports and orders of commanding officers, and of all correspondence by telegraph or otherwise, and of all other documents of every description relating to the late rebellion, accumulated in the archives of the War Department, &c.

That includes the muster-rolls and all sorts of communications of every kind and description. Certainly the Senator does not propose to have published everything in relation to deserters, applications to have a man pardoned for desertion, court-martial proceedings, &c.

Mr. POMEROY. What is the force of the word "otherwise," there? That includes all the rest. You ought to strike out the word "otherwise."

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir. The language is, "all correspondence by telegraph or otherwise." That, I suppose, was intended to relate to the correspondence between officers in command of departments and divisions, and so on, and the War Department; but the words in the sixth and seventh lines that I have proposed to strike out would include every conceivable thing, it seems to me.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think this proposition ought to go to the Committee on Printing. The honorable member from Massachusetts seems to suppose that it will only cost some four or five hundred thousand dollars, but in all human probability it will cost one or two millions. It will cost a great deal more than that if these words are not stricken out. I suggest to my friend from Massachusetts whether we had not better ascertain in some way what would be the probable cost of a work of this description.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator that on the best information I can gather it will take from thirty to fifty volumes to complete this work.

Mr. GRIMES. How large volumes?

Mr. WILSON. Good-sized, large volumes. Different estimates as to the number of volumes are made by those who have made some examination into the subject; and it will cost of course to publish any number of them several thousand dollars a volume. If we allow the work to go on and be completed according to the existing law, it will cost from five hundred thousand to seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars. This proposition will reduce it down at least one third in expense and make a perfect work of it. I am willing, however, to strike out these words, or modify it so that nothing will be published that is not a part of these reports.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suppose, whether these words are stricken out or not, that all the reports and all the correspondence made by the confederate army would be included. They are all in the War Office now. So far from its costing half a million dollars, I think it will cost some two or three millions before we are done with it. The honorable member's estimate, which he says he has made after as correct information as he could get, is not altogether as accurate, perhaps, as ought to be relied on. He says it will take from thirty to fifty volumes, leaving a margin of some twenty volumes. That is not much of an estimate.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator that it is simply an estimate. It is all that can be made. In the first place it is a guess, after such information as we could get. In regard to the number of volumes, some persons who have looked into the subject very carefully think the work will make fifty volumes; at any rate, all think it will make from thirty to fifty. Some of these reports are not yet in. There are a number to come in that are yet in the course of preparation.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the resolution of 1864?

Mr. WILSON. That resolution provides for the publication of these papers.

Mr. JOHNSON. Everything?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir; everything pertaining to these reports.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think we had better stop that.

Mr. WILSON. This resolution provides for having them properly arranged. I think if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa is adopted, it makes it very simple, and if we shall want to publish more hereafter, it can be done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I did not know really, until I heard this resolution called up to-day, that a resolution had been passed for the publication of these reports. I believe it is the first time in the history of any country—I do not know that that is any objection to it—where the Government has undertaken to publish immediately everything connected with a long war. My idea is that the time has hardly arrived yet to make such a publication, and that if we were to publish these papers at all, we ought to proceed in a very different mode from that which is suggested. In the first place, there ought to be competent persons to make a selection from this mass of papers of what is to be published. Everybody can see that under this general publication order, with nobody, in fact, to control it, it will go to an interminable length, and that we shall be publishing a vast amount of material that is not of the slightest use in the world. An undertaking of this sort ought to be deliberate, and ought to be carefully provided for, in my judgment, if you undertake it at all. My notion is, generally, that it would be as well to leave the whole of them to be looked over by historians who will write the history of these events, and put in what it is necessary and advisable that the world should know. But if you want everything published for everybody to look at and search out what may be good and what may be useless, the better way is to proceed deliberately about it; have some competent persons appointed to make the selection; to edit the papers, in point of fact; to select that which ought to be published or is worthy of publication; to arrange it under its proper heads, with reference to specific campaigns and specific movements, and put everything that belongs to one subject together; and that is a work of time and labor, and ought to precede any attempt to print the papers.

Now, as far as we have gone it is perfectly manifest that the whole labor has been thrown away and is worse than useless, because full of mistakes; and mistakes will be just as likely to follow under the resolution now proposed, though not to the same extent. Some money has been expended, though but a trifle in comparison to what this must cost. I think it would be better to reconsider the whole matter, to repeal the resolution of 1864, which is imperfect in itself, covers too much ground, leads to mistakes, and leads to no valuable results, and if then it is determined by Congress to publish these papers, to proceed as other people proceed who want to make papers valuable, to have them edited by competent persons and arranged so that the work may be something worth giving to the public. In that way you will accomplish two objects: in the first place you will cull out from the great mass what is good for something, and you will have that in a readable shape, and you will save a vast deal of money. But evidently to pass this resolution now on the statement of expense that my honorable friend from Massachusetts gives, is, to my mind, absurd. A margin of from thirty to fifty volumes is a very large one even for a guess. It shows manifestly that for anything my friend knows it may be a hundred.

Mr. WILSON. No.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Well, you cannot state the number. I have heard these papers described as being there by the cart load, and you cannot tell what number of volumes they will make. Clearly, if you get a publication of fifty volumes of the events of this war and the papers connected with it, without having the work edited, without having the subjects selected, without having the papers arranged, without having them properly indexed, nobody would give anything for the fifty volumes in his library, because he could not find what he wanted in them. He might just as well go to the War Office and hunt over the papers there to ascertain what there was that was good for something to be used.

Instead of passing this resolution in any shape, my judgment would be that we had better stop where we are, and repeal the resolution that was passed at the former Congress; and if you then decide to begin, begin a great work, (because it will be a great work,) as experience has proved the only proper method; let it be undertaken by competent persons as a work of time and not of hurry; and give to the people of this country at the end something that will be worth having, and will in a measure pay for the immense sum that we must expend in accomplishing it. In the present state of our finances I should rather hope the whole thing might be deferred to a better opportunity; but of that the Senate will judge. But if we are to undertake it, let us do it like sensible business people, and not push all this matter in a mass into the printer's hands to be published at vast expense, and to be good for nothing after we have got it.

Mr. WILSON. I agree with the Senator from Maine entirely; and the object of the committee in reporting this resolution is to have the thing properly done, if done at all. On the 19th of May, 1864, the Senate passed a resolution "to provide for the printing of official reports of operations of the Army of the United States." I will read this resolution, so that Senators may understand precisely what the law now is:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Superintendent of Public Printing with copies of all such correspondence, by telegraph or otherwise, reports of commanding officers, and documents of every description in relation to the existing rebellion, to be found in the archives of his Department since the 1st day of December, 1860, to the present time, and during the continuance of said rebellion, which may be, in his opinion, proper to be published with said correspondence, reports, and documents, which shall be published in their proper chronological order."

"SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That the Superintendent of Public Printing shall cause to be printed and bound (in addition to the usual number) ten thousand copies of such correspondence, reports, and documents, in volumes of not exceeding (as near as may be) eight hundred octavo pages each, which shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Senate as follows, to wit, five hundred copies to the War Department, one complete copy to each State library of every State in the Union, and five complete copies to public libraries in each congressional district of the United States, to be designated by the Representative of the present Congress from such district; and of the remaining copies three thousand shall be for the use of members of the present Senate, and six thousand for the use of members of the present House of Representatives.

"Sec. 3. And be it further resolved, That it shall also be the duty of the Secretary of War to cause a complete index of the matter contained in each volume to be prepared and inserted therein.

"Sec. 4. And be it further resolved, That all resolutions adopted by either House of Congress, at its present session, directing the printing of any of the correspondence, reports, or documents, as above contemplated, be, and the same are hereby, rescinded."

This resolution rescinded all the orders made for publishing documents, and made this general provision.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to make one other suggestion. I understand that we are in possession of a large mass of the confederate reports.

Mr. WILSON. They were not here when we passed the resolution of 1864.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If these papers are to be published they ought to be arranged by subjects; and all that we have of the confederate documents on the same subjects ought to be printed in juxtaposition, so that the whole subject-matter might be seen.

Mr. WILSON. That is what we want to do.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that the documents in the archives of the War Department are not yet in a condition to be published. I think it is much better that the work should be prepared, or at least that very considerable progress should be made in it before the publication is commenced, because otherwise we may repeat the same experiment that has just been made. This resolution provides for some competent person at a salary of $2,500 a year to undertake it. It would be the life-time of a man to do that work; it would take twenty men to perform that work as it ought to be performed, and I think it ought to be performed. I think that there should be a history of the war prepared from the documents in the possession of the War Department and from the rebel archives; and I would suggest that this resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that they report a plan for the prosecution of the work; and when the persons intrusted with this work shall report that they have made sufficient progress it will be time enough to commence the publication.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In the mean time we ought to suspend the resolution already passed.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir. If this resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs they can report a plan for the preparation of the work, which should precede for some time the commencement of the publication; and in that resolution we can provide for the suspension of the work now going on. I fancy there is nothing doing on it now; but I do not know. This matter does not belong to the Committee on Printing, and I do not wish to interfere with it.

Mr. WILSON. I certainly have no objection to that suggestion; but the object of the committee was to do precisely what the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Rhode Island, and I suppose the Senator from Iowa, desire; that is, if this matter is to be published at all, that it shall be well arranged and made a perfect work. We cannot tell, I assure the Senate we have not the means to tell, and I do not believe any committee of the Senate can possibly tell precisely how this should be done, but we wanted to put it in the hands of a competent man to make out a plan and see that the work is done according to a good plan. I have no objection certainly to arresting the publication of the present work, to repealing the present law, and letting the Secretary of War appoint a proper man or a number of men if necessary and let them report a plan at the next session of Congress and how much it will probably cost and give us all the facts of the case. If that is thought best, I have no objection to the recommitment; but the object we had in view was to prevent the publication of this vast mass of documents without any arrangement, imperfect as they are sent to the printing office. I have no objection to a recommitment, with the understanding that we are to report a proposition arresting the publication and authorizing the Secretary of War to appoint a proper man to prepare the work, and let a report be made at the next session of what they desire and about what it will cost.

Mr. SUMNER. We have already in our history had some experience by which we may be taught on this question. Senators have seen in their libraries, certainly in the Congressional Library, the large volumes known as the American Archives, of which there are portions of several series. When that series was commenced it was intended that it should embody all the papers, military and diplomatic, and also leading articles in newspapers, relating to the origin of our Revolution and the war of independence. The collection proceeded to the year 1776, under the editorship of Peter Force, of this city, a gentleman as competent, I suppose, as any person who could have been selected in the whole country, but it was subject to the final revision of the Secretary of State. Finally, when Mr. Force had prepared a volume for 1777, and all his papers were collected and laid before the Secretary of State, at that time Mr. Marcy, the latter gentleman refused to give his assent to the further publication of the volume, and you have that collection, originally ordered by a joint resolution of Congress, suspended at the year 1776, and primarily because Mr. Marcy did not feel willing as Secretary of State to give his final assent, as required by the resolution, to its publication. That is our experience with regard to one very important portion of our history, the war of independence; the documents are not yet published in one connected series; I do not know that they ever will be. And now, sir, it is proposed to publish another series, which will be perhaps more expensive even than that of the war of independence. The series of the war of independence, as you will observe, embraced newspaper articles in America and England illustrating the contest, and that of course gave to it a much larger size and development than the series now proposed.

But, as I have said, it is now proposed to begin another series. I would simply suggest that we may well consider whether it might not be advisable for us to complete the original series, and to illustrate the war of independence before we enter upon the work of illustrating this recent more terrible conflict. But, sir, suppose we do undertake the latter work, then I think all the suggestions that have been made, particularly by the Senator from Maine, suggesting caution, requiring care and editorship, of infinite importance. I agree with that Senator absolutely when he says the whole collection will be of very little value, it will be trivial, if it is not well edited, well arranged, and then well indexed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And the larger it is the worse it will be.

Mr. SUMNER. Of course, the larger it is the worse it will be. Then Senators say that we must find a competent man. Who is the competent man? I do not know him now. I dare say he would come to light, perhaps, if we went about with a candle after him; but the competent man to gather together all this mass of documents and to put them in order, and then to make a proper and analytical index, would be a very rare man. He must be a man without any of the turbulent ambition that belongs to politicians; he must be disposed to quiet, willing to live at home with his books and his papers, and give himself day and night to serious toil. That is the character of man that you would require. I do not know where he could be found.

Mr. JOHNSON. You might find him in Boston.

Mr. SUMNER. In Boston if anywhere, perhaps. [Laughter.] But then I do not know him there, I am free to say.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Resign, and take charge of it yourself. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNER. My friend says I should resign and accept it. I do not know but that that is the best thing I could do, [laughter,] but then I should despair of getting through with the work.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would agree to serve as your clerk.

Mr. SUMNER. Then the work would surely be done. [Laughter.] All this brings us to the conclusion that what we do should be well considered and laid out in advance. I think, therefore, it is important that the resolution should be recommitted, that we should have the benefit of all the information we can get from the Department on the subject, and, if possible, provide in advance the method and the arrangement and the way in which the collection should be indexed. As much should be done in advance as possible. Now, sir, we may get some instruction on this subject from what they are doing in other nations. At this moment the Emperor of France is engaged in the publication of all the writings of his uncle, the Emperor Napoleon. That work has already proceeded to fourteen or fifteen quarto volumes, very elaborately edited, the purpose being to bring into the collection every scrap, military, diplomatic, or personal, which can be found proceeding from the late Emperor of France, the first Napoleon. That is done under special editorship. Some of the very first men in France are engaged as a committee in superintending it. Now, if we shall undertake our work, I think we ought certainly to do as well by it as the Emperor of France does by the work of his uncle.

Mr. HENDERSON. Having looked at the legislation on this subject, I desire to ask a question. I find that after the passage of the joint resolution referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts an act was passed in June, 1864, the second section of which provided "that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint some competent person to edit the printing of the official reports of the operations of the armies of the United States." Now, I understand that this is further legislation on the same subject. I rose to ask whether the Secretary of War had gone to any expense in securing the services of any person to superintend this publication. I find, also, in the Army appropriation bill for 1864-65, passed June 15, 1864, an appropriation "for copying official reports of armies of the United States for publication, $5,000." I presume that was in furtherance, also, of this same resolution, passed in May, 1864.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has the Senator that resolution before him?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator be kind enough to read the second section?

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from Maryland asks me to read the second section of the resolution of May, 1864. It is in these words:

"Sec. 2. And be it further resolved, That the Superintendent of Public Printing shall cause to be printed and bound, in addition to the usual number, ten thousand copies of such correspondence, reports, and documents, in volumes of not exceeding (as near as may be) eight hundred octavo pages each, which shall be distributed by the Secretary of the Senate as follows, to wit, five hundred copies to the War Department, one complete copy to each State library of every State in the Union, and five complete copies to public libraries in each congressional district of the United States, to be designated by the Representative of the present Congress from such district; and of the remaining copies three thousand shall be for the use of members of the present Senate, and six thousand for the use of members of the present House of Representatives."

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to know if the yeas and nays were called upon that.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the best disposition, perhaps, that can be made of the resolution now pending is not to amend it, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa, but to make it a simple provision repealing what has hitherto been provided for.

Mr. GRIMES. It is proposed to recommit it with that view.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no objection to that course. I was about to remark that the mere orders of the department commanders at the city of St. Louis have been recently published by Mr. O'Fallon, who was an assistant adjutant general at St. Louis during the whole time. He has done it as a private matter of his own, and his work is a very valuable one. Those orders of the department commanders at St. Louis alone, leaving out the reports, make some four or five large volumes.

Mr. ANTHONY. It would take five hundred volumes for the publication, according to the original resolution.

Mr. HENDERSON. This book, as I say, makes four or five volumes, although it contains none of the reports of the commanders to the War Department, but simply the orders issued by the commanders. The whole work, under the resolution as it now stands, would certainly be not less than four or five hundred volumes. We ought not to proceed with such a work. As it now stands, it would include every telegraphic dispatch that came over the wires, and all correspondence, not only the reports of the commanders, but the report of every subordinate commander to his superior. Most of the members of Congress to whom it is provided that the book shall be delivered after it has been published will certainly be dead before the publication is completed.

Mr. WILSON. The work is to be a much larger work, of course, than was supposed at the time it was ordered. It was ordered two years ago, and it is much larger than was supposed at the time. The law to which the Senator has referred authorizes the Secretary of War to appoint a proper person, but no person has been appointed. It has been prepared in the office.

Mr. JOHNSON. Was not Dr. Lieber appointed?

Mr. WILSON. No; he was appointed to take care of the rebel archives and examine those.

Mr. GRIMES. Under what law?

Mr. JOHNSON. I thought under this law.

Mr. WILSON. I understand Dr. Lieber has care of the papers that were captured at Richmond and in the confederate States, and that there are a large amount of them. I do not know under what law it is, but he is appointed and is arranging those papers. The second section of this resolution is intended to modify the original act so that a great deal of the matter may be eliminated and left out. I think, however, the best disposition we can now make of the subject is to recommit it, according to the sense of the Senate, and have the matter acted on more fully.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make a motion to recommit?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 466) erecting the Territory of Montana into a surveying district, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (H. R. No. 616) for the relief of Lucinda Gates—to the Committee on Pensions.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled joint resolutions; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 116) respecting quarantine and health laws; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 74) providing for the acceptance of a collection of plants tendered to the United States by Frederick Pech.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. POMEROY. I move to take up Senate bill No. 233.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I hope not. The Senator from Kansas wants to call up a bill that I think ought to be disposed of.

Mr. RAMSEY. I insist upon my motion. The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 24, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PREVENTION OF CHOLERA.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report from the Committee on Commerce a joint resolution (H. R. No. 116) to prevent the introduction of the cholera into the ports of the United States, with the amendments of the Senate thereto; and I ask the concurrence of the House in the amendments.

No objection was made, and the report was received, and the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LYING-IN HOSPITAL.

Mr. WELKER, by unanimous consent, reported back, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, bill of the Senate No. 167, to incorporate the Women's Hospital Association of the District of Columbia, with several amendments.

The amendments were agreed to. The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WELKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The title of the bill was then amended so as to read, "An act to incorporate the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum."

LUCINDA GATES.

Mr. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill for the relief of Lucinda Gates; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Lucinda Gates, widow of the late Horace Gates, of Franklin, Vermont, on the pension-roll, at the same rate of pension during her widowhood, from the death of her husband, as was allowed her by special act approved July 4, 1864.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MONTANA A SURVEYING DISTRICT.

Mr. STROUSE, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Territories House bill No. 466, erecting the Territory of Montana into a surveying district, and for other purposes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. STROUSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIANA AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

On motion of Mr. BIDWELL, the Committee on Agriculture was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the trustees of Indiana Agricultural College, asking a modification of the laws of Congress donating lands for said college, and the same was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AGRICULTURAL BUREAU.

Mr. BIDWELL, by unanimous consent, made an adverse report upon a resolution in regard to the expediency of removing the Department of Agriculture to one of the western States; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

PLANTS DONATED BY FREDERICK PECH.

Mr. BIDWELL, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Agriculture Senate joint resolution No. 74, providing for the acceptance of the collection of plants tendered by Frederick Pech, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The joint resolution provides for the acceptance of the plants, and appropriates $300 to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to procure suitable cases for their protection.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BIDWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN MOORE, DECEASED.

Mr. MYERS asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers in the case of the representatives of John Moore, deceased.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. GARFIELD demanded the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER stated the morning hour had commenced, and the House resumed the consideration of House bill No. 618, to continue in force and amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees," and for other purposes.

The pending question was upon the motion of Mr. ELIOT to recommit the bill.

Mr. ELIOT. Mr. Speaker, I had substantially concluded yesterday the remarks which I proposed to make to the House in presenting this bill for their consideration. And unless some gentleman upon this or the other side of the House desires to say something in regard to it, I will call the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] to withdraw his call for the previous question that I may offer an amendment.

Mr. ELIOT. I will hear the amendment read.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to offer an amendment to the sixth section of this bill, which provides that upon the expulsion of these freedmen from the Sea Islands the Government shall purchase lands for them at a rate not to exceed twenty-five dollars an acre. Now, that is more than I think the Government can well afford to do down there, when we own the lands there, forfeited under the act of 1862. This land has already been taken possession of, and I deny that there is power in any officer of the Government to restore it to its former rebel owners. I therefore desire to amend this section by striking out all after the words "the Commissioner shall," and inserting the words "refuse to surrender the same to them, they being forfeited to the United States by the former belligerent owners, and duly allotted to the freedmen."

Mr. ELIOT. I cannot yield for that amendment, and I will state why. If it be correct in point of law, as my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] supposes, that the lands which have been assigned to these freedmen under General Sherman's order have been so forfeited that they now belong to the United States, then there will be power, without purchasing any lands under this section, to allot to the freedmen such of these lands as may be needed. If, on the other hand, there shall appear that the law is not as my friend supposes, unless this provision is made the result will be that when the restoration shall have been completed which has been commenced there will be no power to protect or provide for these freedmen in the State where they belong, although they now occupy allotments made to them by the Government of the United States, and have occupied them up to the present moment.

Mr. STEVENS. By the provisions of this bill there is to be no opportunity to test the question of the legality of the title to these lands. The section says, "that whenever the former owners of lands occupied under General Sherman's field order, dated at Savannah, January 16, 1865, shall apply for restoration of said lands, the Commissioner shall procure other lands by rent or purchase, not exceeding forty acres for each occupant," provided they can be bought for twenty-five dollars an acre. Therefore the moment these former owners apply the lands are to be restored, without ever testing the question of right, and drive off the six thousand freedmen who are on them, and we are to buy other lands for them at twenty-five dollars an acre.

Mr. ELIOT. No, sir; the gentleman has not carefully examined this section, or he would have found that it is not open to that criticism. If the lands, as the gentleman believes, belong to the United States and should be allotted to the men who are there upon those lands, these men would have a perfect right to test the title. No power can prevent them from contesting, if they desire to do so, the right of any claimant who should present himself in opposition to them. All that this section provides is that before the restoration shall be made the allotment of these lands shall be substituted.

Mr. STEVENS. Does the gentleman mean to say that if this bill shall become a law it will not require imperatively the surrender of those lands?

Mr. ELIOT. Why, sir, nothing can be done here that will come between the men who are upon those lands and their rights. The gentleman says that the bill contains no provision for testing the law. I say that no power of this Congress can prevent those men from testing the law.

The SPEAKER. The hour of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] has expired. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is recognized as entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. I want to suggest that those are lands belonging to the United States, and if the United States orders them to be surrendered, they must be surrendered, and there is no court that can prevent it. But if you allow the law to stand as it now is without any such provision as this bill proposes, and if that is land forfeited to the United States, as I contend, there is no individual, however high in power, who can divest the United States of that land, and restore it to the former rebel owners. But Congress, being sovereign, has the right to give away the lands of the United States; and as the freedmen hold those lands only by the permission of the United States, they hold subject to the provisions of United States law.

Mr. Speaker, I will now move the amendment to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. A motion to recommit is pending, and prevents any amendment from being offered, unless the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] withdraws it.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman had better give us an opportunity to test this question. I want to vote for this bill; but I never can vote for it with the sixth section in its present form.

Mr. ELIOT. I will withdraw the motion to recommit, and give the gentleman an opportunity to offer his amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "Commissioner" in the fifth line of the sixth section; and inserting in lieu thereof the words "shall refuse to surrender the land;" so that the section will read:

That whenever the former owners of lands occupied under General Sherman's field order, dated at Savannah, January 16, 1865, shall apply for restoration of said lands, the Commissioner shall refuse to surrender said land.

This will leave the question of law that may arise to be decided by the courts.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to delay the passage of this bill by any extended remarks. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks me to call the previous question, and I will do so in a few moments. I wish to say that by the act of 1862 this Congress ordered that the lands, not of rebels—for under the fourth section that applied only where they were convicted—but of belligerents, serving in the army of the belligerent government, should be seized and forfeited for the benefit of the United States, the title to be vested in the United States, and the proceeds of the land when sold to be paid into the Treasury. By our Freedmen's Bureau law, the abandoned lands were ordered to be seized and allotted among the freedmen. This has been done. The order of General Sherman, under the sanction of the Secretary of War, indeed by his orders, allotted the lands thus seized to six thousand freedmen, who have built homes upon them, of forty acres each, running to the water. They have built upon those lands comfortable dwellings, and they remain there at the present time. It is now sought to allow the rebels whose lands we thus seized to come back and expel the men to whom the Government allotted these freeholds, as it was bound to do in honesty and in law. Those freedmen are to be turned out. It does not do to say that the Government shall expend twenty-five dollars an acre for land for the purpose of placing these freedmen somewhere else, where they have no homes and no plantations to work. I say that would be cruel and unjust. As I promised my friend to call the previous question, I now do so.

Mr. DAVIS and others addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield? If so, to whom?

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot yield. I have no power to do so.

On seconding the call for the previous question, there were—ayes 24, noes 43; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers, and appointed Messrs. ELIOT and TAYLOR.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether the previous question be voted down the bill will be open to amendment.

The SPEAKER. An amendment to an amendment is pending. An amendment can be offered to that amendment; or when that amendment is disposed of, another can be offered.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 54.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. DAVIS. I demand the previous question on the pending amendment, in order that I may have an opportunity to move one myself.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question recurred on Mr. STEVENS'S amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 79, nays 46; not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Blaine, Brandegee, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Deftrees, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Briggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asabel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jencks, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Laffin, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Marston, McClurg, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Plants, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Thayer, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Whaley, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—79.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Bergen, Boyer, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Dodge, Eldridge, Eliot, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Edwin H. Hubbell, Hulburt, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, Meltzer, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Sitgreaves, Stillwell, Strouse, Taylor, Trimble, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Winfield—46.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Brogman, Chandler, Coffroth, Culver, Delano, Denison, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Latham, Lynch, McIndoe, McKee, Mercur, Miller, Morris, Moulton, Newell, Noell, Orth, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Raymond, Rollins, Shanklin, Smith, Starr, Taber, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, and Wright—58.

So the amendment was adopted.

During the vote,

Mr. CULLOM stated that his colleague, Mr. ORTH, was absent on account of illness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] yields to me. I ask this courtesy because it is in relation to a matter in which the House take a deep interest. The Committee on Military Affairs have carefully revised the bill to equalize bounties of soldiers and sailors, and have directed me to report it back to be printed as revised, and recommitted to the committee, in order that to-morrow, after the morning hour, I may again report it back and call for the action of the House.

It was ordered accordingly.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU—AGAIN.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I move the following amendment:

Add at the end of section two as follows: And the powers conferred and the duties enjoined by the act hereby amended shall be applicable to all persons named or referred to in this section, and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

And strike out the remaining sections of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that amendment with no design of embarrassing the condition of the freedmen in this country. I do it because I believe it will meet all the requirements necessary and at the same time prevent much trouble in the future. The chairman of the committee who introduced the bill told us the main reason why it was proposed was, that the freedmen, under the proclamation of the President and by military operations, were technically under the provision of existing law, but that because of the action of State legislation and the adoption of the constitutional amendment hundreds of thousands besides require some protection, which this measure is designed to promote. The gentleman also informed us that it was necessary to extend the time for the operation of this bill. Now, the amendment which I have sent to the desk, leaving the provision as to the extension of the time unchanged, brings under the operation of the present bill every person who is made free either by State action or by the adoption of the constitutional amendment, and the only inquiry, therefore, which remains is, whether, under the existing law, there is not an adequate protection furnished to all who are brought within the operation of the law.

Now, sir, the administration of this bureau from the time of the passage of the original act to the present has been under the supervision of the War Department. All the forces which have been required by the head of the bureau have been given by the Government of the United States; and I believe General Howard makes no complaint whatever that any aid has been withheld from him by this Government. Under that bill we had authority to give to every freedman possession for a term of years of a certain quantity of land. We have still that land belonging to the Government which can be allotted to the freedmen. There is no reason, therefore, why there should be any additional provisions on the subject, or any additional machinery. We have now all the means for the protection of the freedmen that are necessary, and if we add to the machinery which now exists we only incur additional expense to the Government, and impose upon the people increased and unnecessary burdens. At a time when the country is struggling under a weight of indebtedness, when its industry is depressed, when its finances are embarrassed, it seems to me we are proposing to do more than is essential or necessary in regard to that class of people in this country. We are inviting them to indolence rather than to labor. And while I believe we should protect them in every civil right, while we should give them equality before the law, I think the policy of the Government should be such as to induce every man to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow.

Sir, it is a fact well known, capable of being proved at any time, that this Government has issued thousands, and I might say millions, of rations to men who might have supported themselves if they had been willing to labor, and I am unwilling to see the charity of this Government thrown away upon the indolent and the undeserving. And while I say this I desire to speak in the most respectful terms of the gentleman who is at the head of the bureau. I believe there is no braver soldier, no purer Christian, no nobler philanthropist in the land than General Howard, and if he could be personally present over the wide area of his administration, I think we might intrust everything to his supervision and his care, and find no cause of complaint. But unfortunately the agents of this bureau are not all like him, and although there are many worthy and deserving men employed in it, there are cases where fraud has been committed and wrongs have been done, and I think we should be cautious about extending this system and making it a permanent institution of the country.

Another objection which I have to this bill is in reference to the sixth section, which opens the door to fraud on the part of those who are charged with the administration of this bureau. I do not know but the amendment proposed by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] may dispose of this objection, but I barely allude to it for the purpose of showing the haste with which we sometimes legislate. The sixth section provides that forty acres may be set apart for every occupant of lands occupied under General Sherman's field order, and that such lands can be procured at an average cost not exceeding twenty-five dollars per acre. Thus if the Commissioner should have to purchase a quantity of land he might go on and pay $150 per acre to any favorite party, to any person in his interest, or any subordinate might do it, and he might offset it by buying land that could be purchased for fifty cents an acre and which might be utterly worthless.

Now, sir, in the course of a few months, before any great injury can be visited upon the country by the failure of our legislation, we shall have an opportunity of determining what may or may not be necessary by way of amendment to this bill. You have already a committee of investigation and inquiry into the administration of the affairs of the Freedmen's Bureau, and in a few months we shall have a report from that committee. Then we shall know the facts of the history of the bureau, and whether any additional powers are necessary or whether there are any wrongs to be redressed. I therefore think it far wiser for us now to say that we will simply extend the operations of this law for a single year longer, bring all classes of freedmen within the purview of its operation, and then postpone the consideration of all else until the next session of Congress. Then, if it shall be necessary, a new bill can be introduced embracing the remaining features of this bill, and we can have such legislation as shall be founded upon our experience and proved to be necessary between this time and that. I trust, therefore, that the amendment which I have proposed will be adopted.

Mr. ELIOT. I now call the previous question on the amendment and on the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope the gentleman will not undertake to run this bill through so rapidly.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I hope the previous question will not be sustained.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope that gentlemen on the other side, in their magnanimity, will vote down the previous question.

Mr. ELIOT. I withdraw the call for the previous question.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 85) for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Messrs. KIRKWOOD, WILSON, and DAVIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU—AGAIN.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to amend the seventh section of the bill by striking out the following words—

And shall provide proper sites and buildings for purposes of education whenever such association shall, without cost to the Government, provide suitable teachers and means of instruction, and he shall furnish such protection as may be required for the safe conduct of such schools. And said property shall be and remain the property of the United States until sales thereof shall be authorized by law—

And inserting in lieu thereof the words "and afford them all proper protection." The amendment simply strikes out that portion of the section which authorizes the purchase of buildings for school-houses.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will now yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER,] who desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I move to amend the sixth section, as amended, by adding at the end thereof the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect the right of any person to recover in the proper court any title or right of possession which such person may have in any of the land held under such field order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. Speaker, I have not been convinced by anything that has been said in this debate or anything that I know of in the existing situation of affairs of either the necessity or the policy of passing this bill at this time. We have now a commission, a board of officers, sent down by the President of the United States to inspect the operation of the existing law; and this House, and I presume I anticipate not rashly when I say the other House, will concur in it. Congress have authorized a committee of the two Houses also to go into the southern States and inspect the operation of the existing law in reference to this subject. Now, it seems to me that we can act much more intelligently on this subject at the short session of this Congress, after hearing the reports respectively of the board of officers sent by the President and of the committee of the two Houses. We can then know precisely what the operation of the present bureau system is; what its hardships are, if any; what its benefits are, if any; and what modifications and alterations or improvements legislators acting here for the whole country ought to adopt.

Without reference, therefore, to the special merits of this measure, but with reference to policy and to the fact that we can act more intelligently upon the reports to which I have referred, I move to postpone the bill and the pending amendments until the second Monday of December next, and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to postpone.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 51, nays 81, not voting 51; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Brandegee, Buckland, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Farquhar, Gossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburt, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McRuer, Morris, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Sitgreaves, Smith, Stilwell, Strouse, Taylor, Trimble, Burt Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, Whaley, and Winfield—51.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Bromwell, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, McKee, Moorhead, Morrill, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Pike, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spaulding, Stevens, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Ward, William B. Washburn, Welker, Williams, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—81.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Baldwin, Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Boyer, Broomall, Bundy, Chanler, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Deftrees, Delano, Ferry, Finck, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Chester D. Hubbard, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, McIndoe, Mercur, Miller, Moulton, Newell, Noell, Orth, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Raymond, Rousseau, Shanklin, Starr, Taber, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburn, Wentworth, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wright—51.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

Mr. ANCONA. My colleague, Mr. BOYER, is paired with Mr. CONKLING. Mr. BOYER would have voted to postpone had he been present.

Mr. CHANLER. If I had been present when my name was called, I should have voted "ay."

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and this bill accordingly goes over till next Tuesday.

On motion of Mr. ELIOT, the bill, with the pending amendment, was ordered to be printed.

REAPPRAISEMENT OF LANDS IN OHIO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting papers in regard to the reappraisement of certain lands in Ohio, pursuant to the authority of the joint resolution approved May 5, 1866; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY P. BLANCHARD.

Mr. McRUER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Henry P. Blanchard; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

FOREIGN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. SMITH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to amend the act providing for carrying the mails from the United States to foreign ports, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

EVENING SESSION DISPENSED WITH.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the evening session for to-day be dispensed with.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 64, noes 44.

So the motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and sixty-three be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that hereafter no deed, instrument, document, writing, or paper required by law to be stamped, which has been signed or issued without being duly stamped, or with a deficient stamp, nor any copy thereof, shall be recorded, or admitted, or used as evidence in any court until a legal stamp or stamps, denoting the amount of duty, shall have been affixed thereto by the collector, as prescribed by law: Provided, That any power of attorney, conveyance, or document of any kind, made or purporting to be made in any foreign country to be used in the United States, shall pay the same duty as is required by law on similar instruments or documents when made or issued in the United States; and the party by whom the same is issued, or by whom it is to be used, shall, before using the same, affix thereon the stamp or stamps indicating the duty required.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and sixty-five be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that if any person, firm, company, or corporation shall make, prepare, and sell, or remove for consumption or sale, drugs, medicines, preparations, compositions, articles, or things, including perfumery, cosmetics, lucifer or friction matches, cigar lights, or wax tapers, photographs, ambrotypes, daguerreotypes, or other sun pictures of any description, and playing cards, and also including ground or prepared mustards, wet or dry, preserved meats, fish, shell-fish, fruits, vegetables, sauces, sirups, jams, and jellies, when packed or sealed in cans, bottles, or other single packages, and ground coffee and ground pepper, Cayenne pepper, pimento, cloves, clove stems, mace, cinnamon, cassia, ginger, and other spices, and all compounds of mustard, or coffee, or spices, ground or adulterated, or mixed with other materials, and all articles and mixtures ground or prepared for sale, intended for use in the adulteration of mustard, or coffee, or spices, or for use as a substitute for mustard, or coffee, or spices, whether of domestic manufacture or imported, upon which a duty is imposed by law, as enumerated and mentioned in schedule C, without affixing thereto an adhesive stamp or label denoting the duty before mentioned, he or they shall incur a penalty of fifty dollars for every omission to affix such stamp; and for each and every omission to affix thereto the name or trade-mark of the manufacturer, together with the name of the article, and the quantity therein contained, when such packages consist of ground coffee, or of ground mustard, wet or dry, or of ground pepper, Cayenne pepper, pimento, cloves, clove stems, mace, cinnamon, cassia, ginger, or other spices, or of compounds, or substitutes for coffee, or mustard, or spices, he or they shall incur a penalty of fifty dollars.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the sentence now reading, "and also including ground or prepared mustards, wet or dry," by striking out the words "ground or" and the words "wet or dry."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out the following:

And ground coffee and ground pepper, Cayenne pepper, pimento, cloves, clove stems, mace, cinnamon, cassia, ginger, and other spices, and all compounds of mustard, or coffee, or spices, ground or adulterated, or mixed with other materials, and all articles and mixtures ground and prepared for sale, intended for use in the adulteration of mustard, or coffee, or spices, or for use as a substitute for mustard, or coffee or spices.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the sentence "upon which a duty is imposed by law" by inserting the words "or tax" after the word "duty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the sentence "an adhesive stamp or label denoting the duty before mentioned" by striking out the word "duty" and inserting the word "tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the following at the end of the paragraph:

And for each and every omission to affix thereto the name or trade-mark of the manufacturer, together with the name of the article and the quantity therein contained, when such packages consist of ground coffee, or of ground mustard, wet or dry, or of ground pepper, Cayenne pepper, pimento, cloves, clove stems, mace, cinnamon, cassia, ginger, or other spices, or of compounds, or substitutes for coffee, or mustard, or spices, he or they shall incur a penalty of fifty dollars.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out the following words:

Photographs, ambrotypes, daguerreotypes, or other sun pictures of any description.

Mr. Chairman, I move this amendment now, in order that when we reach the section referring to stamps on photographs and other sun pictures I may move to strike that out and insert an amendment imposing on photographers a tax of five per cent. ad valorem on their sales—the same amendment which I withdrew at an earlier stage of the bill, rather than compel the Committee of the Whole to rise for want of a quorum. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means stated the other day that the objection which I made to the present mode of taxation had no force; but by subsequent inquiry and information I find my statement fully confirmed. I have received letters from the chief photographers of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, and Washington, stating, from statistics, that there is not one itinerant photographer to one hundred resident photographers, though it was stated here the other day that the itinerants were as fifty to one resident. But, Mr. Chairman, even if this were the fact, it would be of no consequence; for all or nearly all of the pictures taken by itinerant photographers are ferrotypes, which are taken upon tin, six at a time frequently, and which sell for less than ten cents apiece. They are sold in this city six for fifty cents. Hence most of the pictures taken by the traveling photographers are so small as by a subsequent section to be exempt from tax; so that the Government at any rate could lose but little tax upon their business, even if they should not make proper returns. They are as likely, however, to give a correct account of their sales, as to affix the stamps required by the present law, for in many instances the pictures are mounted on blank cards and the wrong-doer can never be known.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is among those engaged in the business of photographing a general demand that an ad valorem tax shall be substituted for the present system. Those who are dishonest evade the law now by willfully omitting to affix stamps on their pictures; while those who are honest frequently omit them unintentionally. I bought this morning hap-hazard five photographs; and I found that three of them had no stamps affixed. In other words, on these pictures, the Government lost six cents out of ten which it should have received. Of the pictures having no stamps affixed, one had no imprint of the photographer's name. With reference, then, to two of the pictures, the omission to affix the stamps was accidental; in one case it was omitted purposely. I think it apparent that the Government would be the gainer by the ad valorem system. Wherever there is a photographer carrying on business, the assessor can find from his books the amount of his sales as well as in any other business. If no books are kept by a traveling or other photographer, some return must be made, and the assessor will no doubt get at the facts. It is just to these photographers that they should no longer be required to pay upon their business a greater proportionate amount of tax than is levied upon other branches of business. They frequently sell six, seven, or eight pictures for one dollar, and are required to pay twelve, fourteen, and sixteen per cent. or more on their sales, a percentage which is much too large when we bear in mind the fact that nearly all the chemicals used in this branch of business have within the last few years advanced in price two hundred and fifty to three hundred per cent.

I will not repeat, Mr. Chairman, what I said the other day about the defacement of these pictures in consequence of the affixing of stamps. At any rate the stamps upon the pictures make them very unsightly. It is for the interest of the photographers and the Government and the public that this requirement in reference to affixing stamps should be no longer continued. I trust that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] has succeeded in repeating his speech much better than I can repeat mine. I do not perceive that he has presented any new argument. These photographs are a very fruitful source of revenue; and I trust that we shall not change the law in a way to cut off a large portion of the revenue we now receive.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose it is the understanding that we may go back to adopt an amendment imposing an ad valorem duty as proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and sixty-nine be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person who shall offer or expose for sale any of the articles named in schedule C, or in any amendments thereto, whether the articles so offered or exposed are imported or are of foreign or domestic manufacture, shall be deemed the manufacturer thereof, and subject to all the duties, liabilities, and penalties imposed by law in regard to the sale of domestic articles without the use of the proper stamp or stamps denoting the tax paid thereon, and all such articles imported, or of foreign manufacture, shall, in addition to the import duties imposed on the same, be subject to the stamp tax, respectively, prescribed in schedule C, as aforesaid.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

That schedule B, preceding section one hundred and seventy-one, be amended by striking out all the paragraphs relating to "gauger's returns" and "measurer's returns;" and by striking out all from "receipts for the payment of any sum of money," down to "weigher's returns, if for a weight not exceeding five thousand pounds, ten cents; exceeding five thousand pounds, twenty-five cents," inclusive, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "receipts for any sum of money, or for the payment of any debt, exceeding twenty dollars in amount, not being for the satisfaction of any mortgage or judgment or decree of any court, or by indorsement on any stamped obligation in acknowledgment of its fulfillment, for each receipt two cents: Provided, That when more than one signature is affixed to the same paper, one or more stamps may be affixed thereto representing the whole amount of the stamp required for such signatures."

Mr. HOLMES. I move to amend by inserting the following:

That schedule B, preceding section one hundred and seventy-one, be amended by inserting immediately preceding the proviso relating to stamps on mortgages the following:

Upon any assignment or transfer of a mortgage the same stamp duty upon the amount remaining thereon as is herein imposed upon a mortgage for the same amount.

Also, strike out the words "mortgage or" in said proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move to strike out the following:

Receipts for any sum of money, or for the payment of any debt exceeding twenty dollars in amount, not being for the satisfaction of any mortgage or judgment or decree of any court, or by indorsement on any stamped obligation in acknowledgment of its fulfillment, for each receipt two.

Mr. Chairman, the object is to relieve all receipts from stamps. I think the inconvenience to the public is greater than any benefit to the revenue. I think we might make that small amendment in this schedule. It is a great annoyance to business men and to farmers, and to the great mass of men who do not carry stamps with them. Sometimes they want to give receipts, and do not have stamps, and cannot procure them. The revenue is not so great as to require that the public should suffer this annoyance.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman does not accomplish his purpose. I am opposed to his object as well as to the method he has adopted of carrying it out. This strikes out the stamps upon receipts on property and leaves only those on receipts for money.

I will say to the committee, I see it is almost useless to resist the reduction of taxes in any direction. This is also a fruitful source of revenue. Last year it exceeded $300,000 a month, and we cannot afford to give it up, especially with the limitation here only to amounts exceeding twenty dollars.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I move to add the following at the end of line twenty-nine hundred and twenty:

Provided further, That all stamps upon checks, notes, receipts, bills of exchange, certificates and contracts of ten cents and less be dispensed with and abolished after the 1st day of October, 1866.

Mr. Chairman, the object of that is to get rid of the small stamps. Every gentleman here knows they are a source of great annoyance and perplexity, while they are not the source of much revenue. I do not propose to abolish stamps upon receipts or any kind of paper, but these small stamps. I want to get rid of these small stamps. It is not the amount the people pay, but the trouble of having to keep them constantly on hand. I have heard of but one opinion all over the country, and that is, we should get rid of the annoyance of these small stamps. I think the committee will be prepared to vote for the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall be much surprised if they are. The small stamps are the ones least complained of.

Mr. HALE. What proportion do the returns from small stamps bear to those from large ones?

Mr. MORRILL. They are the largest, ten times more than from large stamps. The inconvenience which existed when the law was first enacted no longer exists. Men are as much accustomed to have these stamps in their pockets as to have postage stamps. I have no idea we will surrender the system of stamps for many years. It is a tax we can much better afford than any other.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I move to insert on page 88, line nineteen hundred and seventy-eight, the following:

Photographs, ambrotypes, and daguerreotypes, and other pictures taken by action of light, not herein exempted from tax, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That schedule C be amended by striking out all after the words "playing cards" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

For and upon every pack, not exceeding fifty-two cards in number, irrespective of price or value, five cents; for and upon every can, bottle, or other single package, containing meats, fish, shell-fish, fruits, vegetables, sauces, sirups, prepared mustard, jams or jellies preserved therein and packed and sealed, made, prepared, and sold, or removed for consumption in the United States, where such can, bottle, or other single package with its contents shall not exceed at the retail price or value the sum of twenty-five cents, one cent. Where such can, bottle, or other single package, with its contents, shall exceed the retail price or value of twenty-five cents, and shall not exceed the retail price or value of fifty cents, two cents. Where such can, bottle, or other single package, with its contents, shall exceed the retail price or value of fifty cents, for each and every twenty-five cents, or fractional part thereof, over and above the fifty cents as above mentioned, an additional one cent. Ground coffee, or any compound or mixture ground or prepared for sale and intended for consumption as coffee, or as a substitute for or adulteration of coffee, whether of domestic manufacture or imported, in packages not exceeding in weight one half pound, one half cent. And for each half pound in excess of one half pound, one half cent: Provided, That any fraction of a half pound shall be considered as one half pound and be stamped accordingly. Ground mustard, pepper, and Cayenne pepper, and cloves, clove stems, mace, ginger, cinnamon, cassia, pimento, or any compound or mixture, ground or prepared, intended to represent either of the articles as aforesaid, and for sale or consumption as such, or as a substitute for or adulteration of any of the said articles, in packages not exceeding in weight one fourth of a pound, one half cent. And for each one fourth of a pound in excess of one fourth of a pound, one half cent: Provided, That any fraction of one fourth of a pound shall be considered as one fourth of a pound and be stamped accordingly: Provided further, That any dealer may sell to any other dealer or manufacturer, for the purpose of being repacked, coffee, spices, or mustard, or adulterations of or substitutes therefor, in bulk of not less than one hundred pounds without payment of tax, on condition that the said packages are marked with the names of the dealer selling, and of the dealer or manufacturer purchasing such commodity, and the quantity thereof; but when sold for use or consumption must bear the name or trade-mark of the manufacturer, the quantity, and the proper stamp.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out all of the paragraph after the word "sold," in line twenty-nine hundred and thirty, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Or offered for sale or removed for consumption in the United States on and after the 1st day of October, 1866, where such can, bottle, or other single package, with its contents, shall not exceed two pounds in weight, one cent; where such can, bottle, or other single package, with its contents, shall exceed two pounds in weight, for every additional pound or fractional part thereof, one cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert after the word "amended" in line twenty-nine hundred and twenty-one the following:

Strike out the paragraph relating to cigar lights and wax tapers, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On cigar lights, whether made in whole or in part of wood, glass, paper, or other material, in parcels or packages containing twenty-five lights in each parcel or package, one cent; when in parcels or packages containing more than twenty-five and not more than fifty lights, two cents; for every additional twenty-five lights or fractional part of that number, one cent additional, and.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I ask leave to go back to add the following in relation to railroad passes, at the end of the paragraph, on page 126, after line twenty-nine hundred and twenty:

On all free-trip passes over any and every railroad conveying passengers by steam there shall be affixed on each a ten-cent stamp.

On all six-month free passes over such railroads there shall be affixed on each stamps amounting to $2 50.

On all yearly free passes over such railroads there shall be affixed on each stamps amounting to five dollars.

All stamps so affixed to be effaced with initials of the holder of such free passes.

Mr. STEVENS. I object.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] will allow his colleague to offer this amendment. He gave notice and it was only by accident that it was not offered at the right time.

Mr. STEVENS. I like lucky accidents.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section one hundred and seventy-nine be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that where it is not otherwise provided for in this act, it shall be the duty of the collectors, in their respective districts, and they are hereby authorized to prosecute for the recovery of any sum or sums that may be forfeited by virtue of this act; and all fines, penalties, and forfeitures which may be imposed or incurred by virtue of this act shall and may be sued for and recovered, where not otherwise herein provided, in the name of the United States in any proper form of action, or by any appropriate form of proceeding, before any circuit or district court of the United States for the district within which said fine, penalty, or forfeiture may have been incurred, or before any court of competent jurisdiction; and where not otherwise herein provided for, such share, not exceeding one moiety, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall by general regulations provide, shall be to the use of the person who shall first inform of the cause, matter, or thing, whereby any such fine, penalty, or forfeiture shall have been incurred, and the remainder shall be to the use of the United States; and when any sum is paid without suit, or before judgment, in lieu of fine, penalty, or forfeiture, and a share of the same is claimed by any person as informer, the court or a commissioner of the circuit or district court of the United States, on application of the United States district attorney, shall determine whether any claimant is entitled to such share, and to whom the same shall be paid. And the several circuit and district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of all offenses against any of the provisions of this act committed within their several districts: Provided, That no informer or informers shall in any one case be entitled to or receive more than $5,000. And provided further, That no collector, deputy collector, assessor, assistant assessor, revenue agent, revenue inspector, or other officer or person connected with the Treasury Department, or any of the branches thereof, shall be entitled to or receive, or shall be interested in any share allowed to an informer under the internal revenue law; and if any person coming within either of these exceptions shall receive from any informer, or from any applicant for an informer's share, either directly or indirectly, any sum of money or other valuable consideration for or in consequence of his services in obtaining such informer's share, or in consideration of his interest in such informer's share, such person shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine not exceeding $10,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, with costs of prosecution. It is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of the present and of all previous provisions of internal revenue acts granting shares to informers, that no right accrues or is vested in an informer in any case until the fine, penalty, or forfeiture in such case is fixed by judgment or compromise, at which time the informer shall become entitled to his legal share of the amount so adjudged or agreed upon. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be and he is hereby empowered to compromise any case where the amount involved shall not exceed the sum of $500.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend by striking out the words "not exceeding one moiety" in line twenty-nine hundred and ninety-six, and to insert after the word "provide" in the next line the words "not exceeding one moiety nor more than $5,000 in any one case;" also to insert after the word "person" in line twenty-nine hundred and ninety eight, the words "to be ascertained by the court;" so that it will read:

And where not otherwise herein provided for such share as the Secretary of the Treasury shall by general regulations provide, not exceeding one moiety nor more than $5,000 in any one case, shall be to the use of the person, to be ascertained by the court, who shall first inform of the cause, matter, or thing, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out after the word "informer" in line three thousand and four, down to and including the words "district attorney" in line three thousand and six, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such general regulations as the said Secretary shall prescribe, upon application.

It will then read:

And when any sum is paid without suit or before judgment in lieu of fine, penalty, or forfeiture, and a share of the same is claimed by any person as informer, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such general regulations as the said Secretary shall prescribe, upon application shall determine, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move further to strike out the first proviso embraced in lines three thousand and eleven, three thousand and twelve, and three thousand and thirteen, and the words, "and" and "further" in the second proviso. That is embraced in the amendment just made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move now to strike out all after the word "provided" in line three thousand and fourteen down to the word "exceptions" in line three thousand and twenty, as follows:

That no collector, deputy collector, assessor, assistant assessor, revenue agent, revenue inspector, or other officer or person connected with the Treasury Department, or any of the branches thereof, shall be entitled to or receive or shall be interested in any share allowed to an informer under the internal revenue law; and if any person coming within either of these exceptions.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That no revenue officer or other person connected with or in the employ of the Treasury Department, or any branch thereof, shall be entitled to receive or shall be interested in any share allowed to an informer under the internal revenue law in any case with which such revenue officer or other person as aforesaid shall be hereafter in any manner officially connected unless such share shall be recovered by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, and if any such officer or person as aforesaid.

And also to insert after the word "share" in line three thousand and twenty-five the words "as hereinbefore provided."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the words, "and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be, and he is hereby, empowered to compromise any case where the amount involved shall not exceed the sum of $500," and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided further, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such regulations as the said Secretary shall prescribe, shall be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to compromise any case not pending in a court, or, if pending, with the approval of the court having jurisdiction of the case.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to insert after the word "paid" in line three thousand and eight the following:

And that in all cases of seizure or suit, under an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, or any supplement or supplements thereto, a sale shall be ordered by the proper authority, the United States marshal of the district in which such sale shall be ordered shall be authorized to employ an auctioneer, and to pay him out of the proceeds of such sale a commission not exceeding two and one half per cent. on the gross amount of such proceeds.

The object of this amendment is to remove a difficulty which occurs in some of the circuit and district courts. There is a difference of opinion between the judges of the circuit courts. In New York and Massachusetts and Maryland the judges invariably allow the marshal to have a commission on selling, or in other words, to employ an auctioneer who is skilled in selling, whereby the Government is benefited. In the courts of Pennsylvania the judges have generally thrown out these charges in the bills of the marshal.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me suggest to the gentleman that this amendment ought not to be inserted here. It would properly come in in section fourteen or section twenty or section twenty-eight. I presume there will be no objection to going back and considering this subject hereafter. Section fourteen has been reserved for future consideration, and the gentleman can offer his amendment to that section.

Mr. O'NEILL. I withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This section has been so modified by the amendments offered by the committee, that I am not certain whether the portion I propose to amend remains in it. I move, however, to strike out the following words:

It is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of the present and of all previous provisions of internal revenue acts granting shares to informers, that no right accrues to or is vested in an informer in any case until the fine, penalty, or forfeiture in such case is fixed by judgment or compromise, at which time the informer shall become entitled to his legal share of the amount so adjudged or agreed upon.

I find that this proviso is made retroactive, and I should like to know why that is done. I believe that there are some cases of claims of informers pending against the Bureau of Internal Revenue where very unfortunate compromises have been made by the Department. I believe there is one in which the informer, residing at Buffalo, New York, is interested, and in which he claims $100,000 as his share of the penalties. That case, I believe, was settled by the Department in such a way that it resulted in a loss to the Government of about one hundred thousand dollars, and the informer gets nothing at all, although he presented the case in such a manner that all the facts were developed and the fraud of the parties was established. Now, if this provision is for the purpose of covering up these unfortunate acts of the Department to the detriment of those who have ferreted out these frauds, then I think it should be stricken out, or at least so much of it as is retroactive.

Mr. ALLISON. So far as I understand this provision, it is not put here for the purpose of covering up any transactions of the Department; but it is for the purpose of making that a part of the law which is now a matter of construction in the Internal Revenue Bureau. They have been very much annoyed by informers, by collectors and assessors who assume to be informers, who come in and prevent adjustment in proper cases by saying that they have an interest in the question of compromise and adjustment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will ask my colleague [Mr. Allison] whether the informer in the case to which I have referred has prevented the adjustment or settlement of that case.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not familiar enough with the case to know whether or not the informer did prevent the adjustment of that particular case.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Has not that case been adjusted?

Mr. ALLISON. I know it has been adjusted, but I do not know whether or not the informer in that case objected or assented to the settlement. But I know he now claims as his moiety the sum of $150,000, when it was settled by the Government receiving, I believe, only $200,000. Now, the object of this paragraph is to leave this question of settlement and compromise to the courts and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the Secretary of the Treasury, where it properly belongs, and whatever rights may hereafter accrue, or have heretofore accrued, shall be adjusted and settled without any collector or informer interfering with the question of adjustment, settlement, or suit, after the question is adjudicated either by the court or the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. I believe it is a just and proper provision, and should be retained in the bill for the reason I have stated.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. After the explanation of my colleague, [Mr. Allison,] which I think is entirely satisfactory to the committee, and I have no doubt will be to the Department, I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend this paragraph by adding to it the following:

And provided further, That no person shall be convicted on the testimony of an informer, unless the material part of his testimony shall be corroborated by other testimony.

I am opposed to this system of hiring informers; it is bad policy, it is a bad practice, and I think it will have a bad tendency. I am very much surprised that the committee should propose to inaugurate a system of that kind, and have paid informers, interested in large amounts, to testify against individuals for the purpose of procuring their conviction. The true theory is that the witness should stand impartial in giving his testimony before a jury; that is the old doctrine, the one adhered to in the old maxims of law. But by this provision we are ignoring this old fundamental principle, and making it the interest of an individual to perjure himself in order to convict some person that he may pocket the amount given as a bribe for the perjury. I can never give my assent to any system of that kind. I do not think these persons should be convicted unless they can be convicted as other persons are—by fair and impartial testimony, without hiring men to swear against them, and making it their interest to perjure themselves in order to convict somebody.

Mr. ALLISON. This provision is just what it is in the present law. And the jury will be able to judge of the testimony of the informer, just as they do of the testimony of other persons.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I wish to call the attention of the Committee of Ways and Means to the fact that the modification which has been adopted on the suggestion of the committee with reference to the power given to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to compromise renders some action necessary in regard to another section of the old law. The forty-fourth section of the act of 1865 gives the Commissioner a general power to compromise in all cases.

Mr. ALLISON. We have already amended section forty-four and stricken out everything with reference to the power of the Commissioner to compromise. Everything upon that subject is now embodied in the provision just adopted.

Mr. THAYER. Then it is all right.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend by adding at the end of the paragraph the following:

Provided, That whenever in any action for a penalty the informer may be a witness for the prosecution, the party against whom such penalty is claimed may be, and shall be, admitted as a witness on his own behalf.

This amendment will bring our law into conformity to the statutes already adopted by several States in reference to civil actions. I think the proposition will commend itself to the favorable consideration of every member of this committee. It seems to me palpably unjust that an informer who is directly interested in the recovery of the penalty should be a witness to enforce that penalty, while the party against whom it is claimed is precluded from being a witness. I have no desire to shut out the informer, provided the party against whom the penalty is claimed can be admitted. The amendment refers simply to civil actions for the recovery of a penalty.

Mr. ALLISON. If it applies only to civil suits, I see no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. The language is, "in any action for a penalty."

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I move to amend the amendment by inserting before the word "action" the word "civil."

Mr. COOK. I would like to inquire whether this is not the law now; whether we have not already enacted that all parties may testify in civil suits in the United States courts.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the law now, I think, in such States as permit parties to testify; but where the State law prohibits parties, from testifying I believe they are not permitted to testify in the United States courts.

Mr. COOK. I think there is no such restriction. I am sure that in my own State everybody testifies in the Federal courts, while in the State courts no interested party is permitted to testify.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. I move to amend by striking out the words "at any time," in line three thousand and thirty-four, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "and when paid or collected;" so that the clause will read:

And when paid or collected the informer shall become entitled to his legal share of the amount so adjudged or agreed upon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. If the committee will give its consent to revert to a paragraph already passed, I move to amend by inserting after line twenty-nine hundred and twenty the words "that schedule C be amended by striking out the paragraph in relation to photographs."

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAINE. I move to amend by adding at the end of the paragraph the following:

Every person who shall receive any money or other valuable thing under a threat of informing or as a consideration for not informing against any violation of this act, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, with costs of prosecution.

I have observed, Mr. Chairman, that in the operation of the law now in force, there has grown up among a very disreputable class of men a practice of hunting out little infractions of the law or little delinquencies; and not content with hunting out offenses actually committed, they often bring about the perpetration of offenses by their own acts. Then having accumulated evidence against persons who have either deliberately or unintentionally violated the law, they make a speculation for themselves by a compromise, in virtue of which they agree for a consideration to withhold the information which they might give. This practice is a source of great vexation to citizens of the State in which I live, and has brought our internal revenue law into great disfavor among the people. This, I believe, might be obviated by some such provision as that which I propose.

Mr. MORRILL. The fine is too large.

Mr. PAINE. Then I modify it so as to make it $2,000.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That sections two, five, eight, nine, and twelve of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864," approved March 3, 1865, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert in line two, after the word "nine," the word "ten." The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act the articles and products hereinafter enumerated shall be exempt from internal tax or duty: animal charcoal, or carbon, bees-wax, crude or unrefined, barrels and casks, other than those used for the reception of fluids, and packing boxes made of wood.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert "match-boxes made of wood or paper."

Mr. THAYER. Are these considered as separate paragraphs, and open to amendment as such?

The CHAIRMAN. They are.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert after the word "wood" the words "boxes of wood or paper for friction matches, cigar lights, and wax tapers."

Mr. MORRILL. I accept that as a modification of my amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bristles.

Mr. DARLING. I move to insert "and bone buttons." If there is any propriety in exempting bristles we should also exempt bone buttons.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not like to say that I do not care a button about this amendment, but if we exempt bone buttons the next member will get up and move to exempt ivory buttons and pearl buttons. I do not see why we should begin to exempt one without exempting all the others.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Candle wicking, coffins, and burial cases.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to insert "corks made of corkwood or bark." I will mention until lately these were made by hand. Recently the ingenious people of Connecticut have invented machines for the purpose. The corkwood and bark which are already heavily taxed come from Spain. The tax is injurious to the business.

Mr. MORRILL. These articles are not of such recent introduction. Machinery has been long used in making them. They have been made in this country since the tariff of 1861, when the duty on cork was raised.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Crucibles of all kinds; crates, and grain or farm baskets made of splints; crutches and artificial limbs, eyes, and teeth; deer-skins, dressed or smoked; feather beds, mattresses, palliasses, bolsters, and pillows; fertilizers of all kinds; flasks and patterns used by foundries.

Mr. BERGEN. I move to insert "retorts made wholly or in part of clay." Mr. Chairman, clay retorts are used in the manufacture of gas. Formerly they were imported, but lately they have commenced the manufacture of them in this country. They are the same articles as crucibles, and if they are not exempted they will not be able to compete with the foreign manufacture.

Mr. DEMING. I move to amend by adding "retort courteous." [Laughter.]

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The amendment was then rejected.

Mr. PRICE. I move to strike out line nineteen, which is "flavoring extracts, solely for cooking purposes." I cannot see why flavoring extracts for cooking purposes should be exempt from taxation. I hope these words will be stricken out.

Mr. HALE. I would inquire if this paragraph affects the interest alluded to by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HUBBARD,] yesterday. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HUBBARD] is present, and is of age, and he can answer for himself. I should suppose he did not.

Mr. Chairman, these articles are used in almost every kitchen in the country, and they were put on the free list merely because they are necessary articles in the rural districts. They may not be necessary in the cities where pine-apples, lemons, and oranges can be obtained; but in the country districts flavoring extracts are almost indispensable. They are used very extensively in the great Northwest.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I move to strike out line twenty, which is "gold leaf and gold foil." If we cannot tax gold leaf and gold foil, then I do not know what we can tax. I am at a loss to know why these articles should be exempt from taxation. That is all I have to say. I do not think any extended remarks are needed on this subject.

Mr. MORRILL. If there is any article upon the free list that ought to be exempted it is gold leaf. The work of manufacturing it is as hard as that of the common blacksmith; and yet, by the tax law as it now exists, if a man by the sweat of his brow hammers out what makes up a book of it, he has not only to pay a tax on the value of the labor, but also a tax on the value of the gold used in addition. Now, these men who manufacture it are employed at so much per book; the gold is weighed out to them, and with hammer and anvil and gold-beater's skin they do the work, for very small wages, and then are required to return the exact amount of the gold received without diminution.

Mr. PRICE. I would inquire of the gentleman whether the laborer pays the tax or whether it is not paid by the proprietor, by the dealer.

Mr. MORRILL. I will state that the amount collected last year from this source throughout the United States was, I believe, less than $100.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman does not answer my question. It is not the laborer that pays the tax.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I move now to strike out line twenty-one, which is "keys, actions, and strings for musical instruments." All the machinery of pianos and other musical instruments is not presumed to be used by the poor or the middle classes, but by the rich.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is interfering with the harmony of the tax bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know that it is necessary for me to make any explanation of this paragraph. It is designed merely to prevent the duplication of taxes. These parts of an instrument are made by one party and sold to the persons who manufacture organs used in churches and the musical instruments used in drawing-rooms, and especially the instruments used by those who have our special regard—those taken care of by the Freedmen's Bureau. I trust that we shall let the tax stand as it is.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out lines twenty-two and twenty-three, which are "lamps and lanterns, the glass and metals of which have paid the tax assessed thereon." I offer that amendment for the reason that it would be almost impracticable to collect this tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to insert in line twenty-four, after the word "kinds," the words "and mead;" so that it will read "medicinal and mineral waters of all kinds, and mead, sold in bottles or from fountains."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DONNELLY. In line twenty-six I move to insert, after the word "coal," the words "and peat;" so that the clause will read: "mineral coal and peat of all kinds."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Oakum; paintings and statues, and groups of statuary produced by artists as works of art.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the provision in regard to paintings, &c., and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Original paintings, statues, and groups of statuary; and casts made thereof by the artist from the original design.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Photographs, or any other sun picture, being copies of engravings or works of art, when the same are sold by the producer at wholesale at a price not exceeding ten cents each, or are used for the illustration of books, and on photographs so small in size that stamps cannot be affixed.

Mr. MORRILL. In line thirty-two I move to strike out the word "ten" and insert "fifteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the words "and on photographs so small in size that stamps cannot be affixed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Paper of all descriptions, books, maps, charts, and all printed matter, and book-binding.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend that paragraph by inserting after the word "descriptions" the words "except such as is manufactured and used exclusively for wearing apparel."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Productions of stereotypers, electrotypers, lithographers, and engravers; repairs of articles of all kinds; starch; soap, valued at not above three cents per pound; umbrellas and parasols, and umbrella sticks.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the last paragraph by striking out the word "umbrella" where it occurs before the word "sticks" and inserting the words "frames for the same."

Mr. THAYER. I wish to make a suggestion to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and that is, that he add the words "and umbrella and parasol furniture." There is included in that designation the small parts of the umbrella called "notches," and also "handles" and "ferrules." They are parts of the umbrella and parasol, and they are not parts of any other article which is taxed. If the gentleman wishes to extend this degree of favor to the manufacturers of umbrellas and parasols, it is perfectly proper that he should include all the parts of those articles.

Mr. DARLING. Why not say all parts of the umbrella?

Mr. THAYER. The articles I speak of are known to manufacturers as umbrella and parasol furniture. They constitute the small parts or fixings of the umbrella. Now, the gentleman from Vermont has put into this paragraph the "sticks" and the steel frames, which it was perfectly proper that he should do, because there is a discrimination against these articles under the present adjustment of the tariff of at least forty per cent. I hope the gentleman will agree to the amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask my colleague to accept this amendment:

And the ivory, bone, and wood-work used in making umbrellas, parasols, and canes.

Mr. THAYER. Do not put in canes; they are luxuries.

Mr. O'NEILL. Well, strike out canes.

Mr. MORRILL. The makers of umbrellas and parasols were quite content with the provisions in relation to umbrellas and parasols as it was originally arranged. Since that time they have informed us that it would be a great favor if we would also exempt frames and handles. That exemption embraces the chief parts of the article; and, as we are not to get any revenue from the article when finished, this seemed to the Committee of Ways and Means to be a fair provision, and one that gentlemen representing the interest should accept. I hope that we shall not introduce any such word as "furniture" into this clause, which may be liable to all sorts of misinterpretation.

Mr. THAYER. I am sorry to hear from the gentleman from Vermont that this amendment cannot be made with the present adjustment of the internal revenue law and the tariff. That is a poor answer to make to a great industrial interest, or even to a humble industrial interest. Now, I wish the House to understand exactly how it is in regard to this matter. By the existing tariff silks pay a duty of sixty per cent., alpaca pays a duty of fifty per cent., and fine gingham pay a duty of about fifty per cent. And those are the materials which, as we all know, are used for the covering of umbrellas and parasols. The duty paid upon the manufactured article complete, as it is imported into this country, is thirty-five per cent. Now, let gentlemen compare that duty with the duty which the manufacturer has to pay upon the raw material which he makes up into umbrellas and parasols, and they will see how injuriously this interest is affected by the total want of any proper adjustment between the tariff and the internal revenue laws. I suppose it was in consequence of this glaring injustice that the Committee of Ways and Means proposed to put this article upon the free list. But while they have put some of the parts of the article upon the free list they decline to put all the parts on. Now, I ask the Committee of Ways and Means to tell the House what consistency there is in any such position as that. How are they consistent when they say they will put umbrella sticks upon the free list, and will not put upon it the little steel notch which is put into the stick, by which the umbrella is held open or kept closed? How are they consistent when they put on the free list the parasol stick, and leave out of the list the little iron ferrule that is put by the manufacturer upon the end of the stick?

I hope there will be some degree of consistency at least in legislation of this character. If the committee propose to give this article protection against the present ruinous discrimination, let them do it in good faith, and not offer a mere crumb when they profess to give a loaf.

Mr. MORRILL. I move pro forma to strike out "umbrella sticks." I find that members here are more eager for these exemptions than are the men who are engaged in the business. Those men have many of them been here and before the Committee of Ways and Means, and they generally say that they will be content with any reasonable proposition, and they have professed to be satisfied with most of the provisions of this bill. But when we get before the Committee of the Whole, those members who particularly represent those manufacturers ask for a great deal more than the manufacturers themselves ever thought of. Give an inch and they ask a yard. There is not a single article among all those which have been subject to taxation which has been treated with more favor than umbrellas and parasols. And I trust this committee will not insert this miscellaneous language—"furniture"—which may mean one thing or another. If members are going to insist upon inserting every little article—like tips, nuts, slides, springs, thread—used in the manufacture of an umbrella, I shall be in favor of striking this all out.

Mr. PAINE. I move to strike out this line, "umbrellas and parasols, and umbrella sticks." I may be wrong in making this motion. But while what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] has said satisfies me that some provision should be made for this branch of manufacture in the tariff on imports from foreign countries, in my judgment nothing he has said has amounted to an argument in favor of placing this on the free list, in an act relating exclusively to internal revenue. There may be some good reason why this branch of manufacture should be provided for in the tariff law; but why it should also be provided for in this free list I can conceive no good reason, and I have made this motion in the hope that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] will give us some good reason why in this internal revenue bill we should make a discrimination in favor of this particular branch of manufacture.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope this line will not be stricken out.

Mr. ROSS. I hope it will be stricken out. Umbrellas and parasols are luxuries and should be taxed. [Laughter.]

The amendment of Mr. PAINE was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. THAYER.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move a substitute for the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. THAYER,] which I think will not meet the views of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, to add to this line, "and ivory, bone, and wood-work used in the making of umbrellas and parasols."

The amendment of Mr. O'NEILL was not agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I modify my amendment so as to add to this line the words "and umbrella and parasol handles, ferrules and notches." When I proposed the words "umbrella and parasol furniture" I did so in perfect good faith, and I do not now conceive that the objection made by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to the use of those words is a tenable objection, that possibly something might creep in which the words themselves do not import. But, sir, in order to obviate any possibility of misconception, I now propose the adoption of the words I have suggested, which are the designation of the small parts belonging to the umbrella and parasol. I hope that in this shape the proposition will meet the approbation of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire the unanimous consent of the committee to go back to line twenty-four and add—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Value of bullion used in the manufacture of wares, watches, and watch-cases, and bullion prepared for the use of platers and watch-makers.

Vinegar.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend by inserting after the word "vinegar" the words "and mead, and beers made of fruit."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. I move to amend by adding after the paragraph just read the words "ashes, pot and pearl."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Steel, in ingots, bars, sheet, plate, coil, or wire, hoop-skirt wire covered or uncovered, and steel springs and axles made and used exclusively for vehicles, cars, or locomotives.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I move to amend by adding, at the end of the paragraph "clock springs and trimmings." This motion is not made in the interest of the clock manufacturer. He often does and he always can, if he chooses, make his own springs and trimmings. When he does so he pays no tax at all upon those articles. He pays his tax upon the clock when it is perfected and sold. But there have sprung up in the country some two or three or four establishments which are devoted alone to the business of manufacturing clock springs and trimmings. Most of the clock-manufacturers make these trimmings for themselves, and thus escape the payment of any tax upon them. But, sir, if the tax upon these articles be continued, these small manufactories of which I have spoken will all be broken down, because the clock-maker will not consent to be taxed upon his clocks and also upon the small articles which enter into their construction. Hence, rather than purchase these articles at a price enhanced by the imposition of the tax, the clock-manufacturers will make the articles for themselves, as most of them now do. Hence the Government will not realize a single dollar of revenue from this source, while these few small manufacturers who have undertaken to carry on this business by way of encouraging the division of labor will be driven out of the market and broken down. The main spring is the life and soul of the clock. The trimmings named in the amendment are the little ornaments intended to adorn a small time-keeper, so as to make it more pleasing and more acceptable to the ladies of Lancaster and other towns in the district represented by our distinguished and not ungallant friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] [Laughter.] I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman will substitute some other language for the term "trimmings" in his amendment, so as to make it more definite, I will not object to it. I suggest to him to make the amendment read "springs, faces, and hands for clocks."

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I modify my amendment in that way.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out "and steel springs and axles made and used exclusively for vehicles, cars, or locomotives," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

And car-wheels, thimble-skins, and pipe-boxes, and springs, tire, and axles made of steel, used exclusively for vehicles, cars, or locomotives.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I desire to suggest to the Committee of Ways and Means whether it is not proper to add after the amendment just adopted the following:

Forgings of iron and steel, intended as part of machinery on which a tax is to be assessed and paid.

Mr. MORRILL. I must object to that amendment. I do not think it is what the gentleman really desires.

Mr. GRISWOLD. If it be not acceptable to the committee I will not press it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wire made from wire less than number twenty wire gauge, upon which a tax has been assessed and paid as wire.

Mr. DODGE. I move to amend by adding at the end of the line "or wire rods." All wire rods pay duty, and it is from these rods that the wire is manufactured. There has been a great depression in this business, and when we compel them to pay tax upon the wire I do not see why we should compel them to pay an extra tax on the iron rods from which the wire is made. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to, as it would embrace too much altogether. It would exempt not only what we have placed a tax of two dollars per ton upon, but all other rods of whatever metal, price or description.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Metallic nickel, quicksilver, magnesium, aluminum, manganese, and cobalt; spelter; copper, lead, and tin, in ingots, pigs, or bars; metallic zinc, in ingots or sheets.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the word "metallic" in lines fifty-four and fifty-eight.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move after the word "magnesium" to insert the word "sodium." The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert the words "German silver in bars or sheets." The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to strike out "quicksilver." I understand we produce quicksilver in this country in very large quantities; that we have not only enough for our own use, but for the purpose of exportation. I am informed we export to foreign countries very large quantities, and I think it ought not to be exempted from the payment of tax.

Mr. MORRILL. I will state the motive which induced the committee to put quicksilver into the bill among articles on the free list. This is a metal which can only be used in something else or in the production of something which is subsequently taxed; and the quantity of revenue derived from this source has been exceedingly small. Its chief value is in its use by miners to extract the gold and silver from the ore. The committee therefore thought it belonged to that class which ought not to be taxed.

Mr. BIDWELL. I am opposed to striking "quicksilver" out of the free list, and I hope that the amendment will be rejected.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to strike out the words "rolled sheet copper, sheathing copper, and yellow sheathing metal," and in lieu thereof to insert "copper and yellow sheathing metal not more advanced than bands or sheets."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Brass not more advanced than rods or sheets; hulls of ships and other vessels; masts, spars, and ship and vessel blocks.

Mr. DARLING. I move after the word "blocks" to insert "and tree-nails, wedges, and deck plugs."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sails, tents, shades, awnings, and bags made by sewing or pasting; building stone of all kinds, including slate, marble, freestone, and soapstone.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out "shades."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the words "or pasting," and in lieu thereof to insert "from fabrics or other articles upon which a duty or tax has been paid."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert "bags made of paper."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I move to insert "cordage and rigging." You have made the hulls, masts, spars, and everything necessary in the construction of vessels, free of tax, and I suppose that cordage and rigging were accidentally omitted by the committee. Rope-makers have more to contend with than the manufacturers of these other articles. The introduction of manilla rope comes into competition with them and has produced a depression in the business.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 36.

Mr. MYERS demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MYERS and PLANTS were appointed.

The committee was again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 45.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move to insert "silx used in the manufacture of glass." The Committee of Ways and Means have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. I move to add "and rock, ground, and calcined gypsum." I have the consent of the chairman of the committee to insert this amendment. Gypsum is used for building purposes, known as plaster of Paris; when ground as a fertilizer and as plaster; also for finished work or stucco. I have introduced in the amendment the general term gypsum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Burrstones, millstones, and grindstones, rough or wrought; monuments of stone of all kinds, not exceeding in value the sum of $100.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to add the following proviso:

Provided, however, That monuments exceeding the value aforesaid, erected by public or private contributions to commemorate the services of Union soldiers who have fallen in battle shall be exempt from taxation.

I need hardly say to the House, because everybody knows, that in almost every community throughout this nation people are erecting very costly monuments to the memory of the gallant men who have fallen in the service of their country, and that a tax upon private generosity exhibited in this way would be revolting to our sense of propriety. I think there will be no objection to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to strike out all of the paragraph in relation to monuments except the first three words, namely, "monuments of stone." I do not know upon what principle it is that we should tax a monument erected either to the memory of the dead or in commemoration of any public event, or of anything worthy of commemoration. I do not know why we should be prevented from erecting in our cemeteries those monuments of art with which they are adorned. I can see no reason why we should foster foreign art rather than to invite the introduction of our own American stone, wrought by our own artists. There are many cases where we have already adorned and beautified these cemeteries by the introduction of our own American marble and other stone, and it seems to me it ought to be encouraged.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust this amendment will not be adopted unless the committee should suppose that they are at liberty to strike out an amount beyond what was first proposed by the committee in consequence of their action on the income tax.

I will state that my estimate of the amount of deficiency of the revenue was on the actual receipts of last year. No one expects the receipts from the income tax for the year to come will be more than one half what they were the past year. The amount to be received from the ten per cent. tax on incomes above $5,000 will not be one third as much as was received last year. If we get $5,000,000 from that source it will be all that any reasonable man can expect. The days of large income have passed away. We shall not see them again for years to come.

I object to this particular amendment for the reason that many gentlemen—not dead but alive, and I hope likely to live many years—are lavish in the expenditure of this money for family monuments. There is nothing in which they are more generous than in the erection of these monuments—monuments to the dead as well as to their own good taste. As the bill stands we propose to exempt all monuments below $100. Those who erect and pay for monuments above that price are amply able to pay the taxes also. And now, by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] which was a very appropriate one, we have exempted monuments in commemoration of our gallant soldiers. I trust these exemptions will be considered sufficient.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Roofing slate, slabs, and tiles; Roman and water cements, and lime; brick, fire-brick, draining tiles, earthen and stone water-pipes.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after "draining tiles," "cement, drain, and sewer pipes." Also to add "window-glass of all kinds."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Plows, cultivators, harrows, straw and hay cutters, planters, seed-drills, horse-rakes, and winnowing mills.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to insert before the word "plows," "reapers, mowers, threshing-machines." This is in accordance with the amendment made by the committee a day or two since on page 89, line two thousand and one, where the words "reapers, mowers, threshing-machines" were stricken out. I gave notice at the same time I would move to insert them in this place in the free list. I have nothing to add to what I said then.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Allow me to suggest the addition of "mills and apparatus for producing molasses or sugar from sorghum, beets, or corn."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would rather take the question on the amendment as it stands.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I hope the gentleman will add "separators," an attachment to the threshing-machine for the purpose of separating the wheat from the chaff.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest that we had better allow this amendment to be offered in an independent shape. A yea and nay vote will probably be called in the House on the question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will add the word "separators;" so that my amendment will be, "reapers, mowers, threshing-machines, and separators."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLANTS. I move to insert "sorgho mills, evaporators, and drainers."

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I suggest the addition of "mills and machinery for the manufacture of sugar, sirup, and molasses, from sorghum, imphee, beets, or corn."

Mr. PLANTS. I accept that. I think the machinery should be exempt from tax. The manufacture of sirup has been of vast advantage to the country in the last few years. It has been generally carried on upon the farm. Almost every farmer in the country manufactures it for domestic use or home consumption. The machinery for producing it costs from three to five hundred dollars, and the tax on the machine will be from fifteen to twenty-five dollars, which is quite a serious tax, and I think in accordance with the policy adopted in other matters this ought to be exempt.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no end to the amount that will be withdrawn from the revenue if all these additions are made to the free list. It will be much more than gentlemen are aware of. If any articles are to be exempted, it should be those articles used by the laboring men, and not the mowers, threshing-machines, and cultivators, which are made by parties who have the entire monopoly of the trade and can get any price they may ask, and which are purchased by men who are able to pay the highest price for them, and who will have to at any rate. The manufacturers of the hand-rake, and of other articles of common use, such as shovels, hoes, axes, scythes, spades, and manure-forks, certainly, it seems to me, ought to be looked after first, rather than the manufacturers of reapers and mowers. It is now proposed to exempt machines for the manufacture of sugar and molasses from sorghum. We do not tax at all the article that is made, and can we not afford to pay some tax on the machinery by which it is made?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move pro forma to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Vermont seems to forget that we treated him very kindly yesterday by putting about fifteen million dollars into this bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Not over $5,000,000.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am guided only in my statement by what the gentleman said the other day at the opening of the debate. I read from his speech, as follows:

"In a republican form of government the true theory is to make no distinctions as to persons in the rates of taxation. Recognizing no class for special favors, we ought not to create a class for special burdens. Pursuing this principle a majority of the Committee of Ways and Means have agreed to that portion of the bill which makes the income tax after this year a uniform one of five per cent. upon the annual gains. The loss to the revenue will be large—about seventeen million dollars—and it will be for the House to say whether the bill shall stand as reported or whether relief in any other direction is more urgently demanded."

It may be that it is no more than $5,000,000, but he misled us, when he opened this debate, into supposing that it was $17,000,000, and so we very kindly put this amount in the bill yesterday. Therefore these amendments are entirely proper to-day.

Mr. MORRILL. It was very good reading so far as the gentleman went, but he did not read the whole of it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I took the whole paragraph.

Mr. MORRILL. He should have read this further explanation:

"It will be seen that I estimate a reduction in the revenue received from manufactures, on account of a depreciation of values, of about twenty-five per cent., and a reduction upon incomes and dividends of rather more than that amount."

If the gentleman will take pains to examine my estimate in detail he will very soon find out that I anticipated, for the year 1866-67, no such amount from income as was obtained last year. The deductions were computed, as a matter of course, upon the receipts of last year, and then, in addition, such as appeared probable on account of lower prices and less profits.

Mr. PAINE. I am in favor of including these articles in the free list, not only for the reason given, but for additional reasons. I am not opposed to an increase of revenue in this bill. When we made the tax on incomes above $5,000 ten per cent. we manifested a desire to aid in that way the gentleman from Vermont in securing a revenue. And I think when I urged a tax upon umbrellas and parasols, and when I urged an increase of the tax upon cigars, I manifested a disposition not to diminish, but rather to increase the revenue; and that I avow to be my purpose now.

I believe that these sorghum machines deserve our especial consideration and favor. This sorghum is an interest which, if we can, we ought to foster and encourage in this country, for it is unlike all other agricultural interests, and if we can possibly so arrange our internal revenue laws as to foster and encourage the production of sugar from a plant that can be grown in almost every State of the Union, if we can do this without any serious diminution of the revenue, I think we should do it. And I believe the result of this amendment will be not to diminish the revenue of the Government, but by fostering this branch of industry and encouraging this production, tend to increase the revenue. And aside from that consideration I believe it to be our duty to look to this interest for the purpose of fostering and promoting the production of sugar from plants which can be grown all over the United States, so that the price of that very necessary article may be in the end diminished. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. PLANTS.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PLANTS and Mr. MORRILL were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes fifty-one, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend by inserting after the words "threshing-machines" the words "horse-powers." I wish to say a word upon that amendment. If I can obtain the attention of gentlemen, so that this amendment shall be understood, I think there will be no objection to it. I propose to put horse-powers upon the free list. The object of the amendment is simply to render the bill as it stands more clear and certain. I have no doubt but the bill as already amended, by putting threshing-machines on the free list, will also include the horse-powers connected with them. They ought to be included, at all events, for they are necessary parts of threshing-machines. Therefore, for the purpose of making the bill more clear and explicit, and also for the purpose of relieving from taxation these articles so indispensable for many of the purposes of agriculture, I hope the committee will adopt the amendment I have offered.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move to amend the amendment by adding to it the words, "and corn-shellers."

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I accept that. Mr. STEVENS. "Corn-crackers" should be included. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] by striking out the words "horse-powers," and inserting the words "all engines and machines driven by steam or horse power." That, I think, will cover all.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Oh, no!

Mr. GARFIELD. I am opposed to the amendment and to the amendment to the amendment. If we go much further in the work of exempting these machines from taxation we may as well adopt the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] at once as to stop short of it. In my judgment, there is not a sufficient reason why a machine should be exempted from taxation that is applied to a particular use, and that the article produced by it is free from taxation. I can see no end to this mode of exemption; and I fear we are forgetting the purpose of this bill. We are trying to raise revenue to supply the wants of the Government. But one by one the chief sources of revenue are being stricken out, because each member is trying to exempt the particular interest of his district, and thus we are in danger of losing the bulk of our revenue.

The amendment just adopted, exempting from taxation threshing-machines, reapers, and mowers, especially the latter, would interest my constituents as much as the constituents of any member upon this floor. But I have voted against their exemption, and many others of a similar nature, because I did not believe the interests of the whole country would warrant us making them wholly free from tax. I am not anxious to go on the record as having moved an amendment merely because it would benefit my constituents. I hold it to be my duty to look to the interests of the Treasury of the country and the financial interests of the Government, as well as the interests of particular localities. It would be gratifying to me if we could relieve all industry of the heavy burden of taxation; but I hope gentlemen will not forget that we have only a given margin for reduction, and that is fully reached in the bill as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means. If we take off the tax here it must be added in some other place.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes nineteen, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I move to amend pro forma by striking out the last word. I do this for the purpose of making a statement in reply to some suggestions which have been made by my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] in regard to the drift and tendency of these amendments exempting implements of agriculture.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that in these amendments, by which some leading agricultural implements have been put into the free list, there is no departure from the current principle of taxation, nor from the principles of this bill. The able chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, if I recollect aright, set out in this discussion by an allusion to what is a universally recognized principle of taxation—that we should avoid the taxing of those things which are peculiarly the sources of production and of the national wealth. It is just because this is a correct principle of taxation that we ought, it seems to me, to exempt from taxation that class of farming implements which are essential to agricultural production throughout our entire country, wherever there is an agricultural interest, and that is everywhere. These productions constitute the primary sources of the wealth of the country. It does seem to me, therefore, that the remarks made by the gentleman, that we violate correct principles and equality of assessments, are not well founded, so far as they relate to these exemptions, and that we should adhere persistently to the exemption from taxation of those articles which tend to increase these universal and primary sources of wealth—the agricultural productions of the country. The fact that they are primary, that they are essential, and that they are universal, has resulted in reducing all agricultural implements and all agricultural staples to minimum prices; in other words, they never attain extravagant rates of compensation. For this reason no speculations, no excitements enter into or affect their values. Hence it seems to me we should refrain from taxing these articles, because there are no margins which will enable them to pay the tax and still produce these implements to an extent equal to the demands of agriculture. The increased cost of their production caused by taxation cannot be added to any great extent to their prices. They will not admit of it. So far as they are burdened with taxation they are thrown out of use; and to that extent you strike down the very elements and sources of national wealth. It does seem to me that in pursuing the policy of promoting this cardinal, leading, universal interest of the country, we are adhering to and not departing from the correct principle of taxation. I do hope that the committee will adhere constantly to the line of policy which has already been adopted, and that we will set free all that directly and essentially promotes the development of our great national agriculture.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the general sentiment of my colleague [Mr. SHELLABARGER] in regard to making the burden of taxation fall as lightly as possible upon all the sources of wealth. But we are not following that principle in this tax bill; nor do the gentlemen who advocate that principle apply it consistently. For instance, no one has proposed that we shall exempt from taxation all agricultural implements, including axes, spades, hoes, shovels, and every such implement of daily use by the farmer.

Mr. PAINE. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I desire to remind him that the bill contains a proposition to exempt everything that pertains to a ship. Consequently everything used by the shipping interest of this country is to be exempted from taxation.

Mr. GARFIELD. I dissent from the propriety of those exemptions as much as the gentleman can. Therefore his suggestion does not impair the force of the argument I am presenting. I say that no man here has proposed, so far as I know, to exempt from taxation all the implements of husbandry. As the bill has now been amended, we allow the burden to rest on the hoe and the shovel and the spade, and all the other simpler implements that the laboring man uses, while we exempt from taxation all the more complicated and costly machines, which the wealthier farmer uses, the machines which are protected by patents and from which both the manufacturer and the purchaser can make money to a far greater extent than it can be made by the man who uses the common implements of husbandry. Nobody here proposes that we shall lift the burden from all agricultural implements, while there is to be an exemption from taxation as regards implements made by corporations and used by the wealthier farmers all over the land.

If we shall adopt the principle announced by my colleague, we should exempt from taxation all these humbler implements, particularly those used in hand labor. If the gentleman would be consistent, let him push his argument to its legitimate results. But let us not under the pretense of relieving industry lift the tax entirely from those of the agricultural class who can bear it best. I believe that we have not pursued the true policy in reference to these machines. I have in my desk a letter from one of the leading firms of Ohio engaged in the manufacture of mowers and reapers, and they only ask that we shall reduce the tax to two or three per cent. Instead of that the tax has been removed entirely by the Committee of the Whole. We have given what they did not ask, and if this course is persisted in we must compensate for it by taxing some other interest to make up the deficiency.

Mr. SHELLABARGER, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move to insert "corn-shellers." I desire to take the vote on that separately. If threshing-machines are to be put in the free list corn-shellers ought certainly to be put there. It is a less expensive article. It costs less to manufacture the machine, and is more universally used in a corn country than the threshing-machine. Every farmer who raises any considerable quantity of corn has a corn-sheller, and it strikes me if any article should go into the free list it is that article.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out "corn-shellers" and insert "hand-rakes;" and as our southern brethren are not present to take care of their own interest, I will move also to insert "cotton-gins." I hope that the committee will be willing to stop there.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend by inserting "grain-cradles."

Mr. STEVENS. I think the gentleman ought to strike out the word "grain." [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa as a modification of my own.

Mr. MORRILL's amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out these words:

Hubs, spokes, and felloes; wooden handles for agricultural, household, and mechanical tools and implements.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Hubs, spokes, felloes, poles, shafts, and arms for carriages or wagons; wooden handles for plows, and for other agricultural, household, and mechanical tools and implements.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert, "pail and tub ears and handles."

Mr. MORRILL. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out "ears."

Mr. MORRILL. I am sorry the gentleman from Pennsylvania has joined with the Philistines to make havoc with the bill. This is a large item. They are manufactured by machinery. If we begin here we must exempt dog-churns, mop-handles, wash-boards, and all sorts of wooden-ware. There will be no stopping-place if we once begin on a field so extensive.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Under the present tax law pail and tub ears and handles have been loaded down with taxation. The manufacturer of pail-ears pays a tax of five per cent. The manufacturer of pail-handles pays a tax of five per cent. The manufacturer of tub-ears and handles pays a tax of five per cent. The manufacturer also pays a tax upon the hoop-iron placed around them. He pays a tax upon the wire. He pays a tax of twenty cents a gallon upon the benzine which is used. He pays a tax upon the paint which is used. He pays a tax of from five to ten per cent. upon some ten or a dozen different articles which go to make up these pails and tubs. The consequence is that these articles which go into every family in the country cost to-day more than double what they did three years ago.

I wish to call to the attention of my friends from the West, who have exempted the manufacture of threshing and mowing machines, which is also carried on in my district, that it pays a larger per cent. than the manufacture of these articles. More than one half of the manufacturers of wooden-ware have failed during the past few years because they could not endure the tax. You have to pay now three dollars when you could before buy as many as you wanted for one dollar and a half. Now, what I am going to say is this, that in voting upon this bill as we have passed over it, our friends have said we will place a tax of five per cent. on the manufacture of leather, and then when the leather is manufactured into boots and shoes, we will levy an additional tax of two per cent. Now, here is an article which is needed by every man and woman in the land, no matter how poor they may be. It is one of the necessities of life, and yet my western friends join in placing a tax of seven per cent. on this necessary article which every individual has to use. But when you come to reapers and mowers and threshing-machines, which the rich only can use, you vote against imposing a tax.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was taken on Mr. STEVENS's amendment to the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. MORRILL's amendment as amended.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the last word of what is proposed to be inserted.

I rise mainly for the purpose of leading the House to a correct impression in relation to this tax on pails and tubs. They were inserted in the bill as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means with the tax reduced from six per cent. to three per cent. We reduced the tax upon the benzine, which is used in their manufacture instead of turpentine, from twenty to ten cents per gallon. The tax upon all paints and oils it is also proposed to entirely remove. Now, if gentlemen propose to go on to the end of the chapter exempting articles and reducing the tax, I do not know when we shall get through the bill, or what will be left to be taxed.

I will now withdraw my whole amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is beyond the gentleman's power to withdraw it.

The amendment as amended was read, as follows:

Hubs, spokes, felloes, poles, shafts, arms for carriages or wagons, pail and tub handles, wooden handles for plows and other agricultural, household, and mechanical tools and implements.

Mr. MORRILL. I would like it to be understood that there was a motion made to insert "tub and pail ears and handles." That was a distinct and separate motion, and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania moved to strike out "ears."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Vermont originally proposed an amendment without the words "pail and tub ears and handles," and then accepted an amendment suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to insert "pail and tub ears and handles." The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] then moved to amend his amendment, as thus modified, by striking out the word "ears," and that amendment has been adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I hope we shall vote down the whole amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. MORRILL's amendment, as amended, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I now offer the following amendment:

Spokes, hubs, felloes, poles, shafts, the arms for carriages or wagons, wooden handles for plows, and other agricultural, household, and mechanical tools and implements, and pail and tub ears and handles.

Mr. STEVENS. Is that in order? We have have just voted down the same amendment. I think it is hardly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont proposes the amendment in a different form.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I move to strike out the words "pail and tub ears" and to insert in lieu thereof "pails and tubs." I have nothing to say except that I hope the gentleman from Vermont will be a little more persevering. [Laughter.] I do not like to see a man give up so easily. It does not look well. [Laughter.] The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means ought not to submit to what the House does. I call for tellers on my amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STEVENS and MORRILL were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 38, noes 55.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRILL's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAVES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state, as it may have some bearing on the business of the House, that no gentleman desires to speak on Saturday next.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say that I shall insist upon going on with the tax bill until it is finished.

And then, on motion of Mr. GARFIELD, (at twenty minutes before five o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. BLOW: Petitions and protests of citizens of Canton, Louisiana, La Grange, and Keokuk and St. Louis, against the Senate bill providing for the erection of draw-bridges on the Mississippi river.

By Mr. HARDING, of Illinois: The petition of Amos Sanford, of Prairie City, Illinois, for pay for a horse.

By Mr. JULIAN: The petition of Thomas Nugen, praying Congress to grant him relief for damages done his property by the Union Army during the late war.

By Mr. MORRILL: The petition of C. F. Sturtevant and 48 others, citizens of Hartland, Vermont, praying for an increase of the tariff so as to protect American labor.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 25, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of the American Atlantic Cable Telegraph Company, praying for such legislation as will enable them to lay a cable from some convenient location on the Atlantic coast of the United States to the island of Bermuda, and from thence to the Azores, and Lisbon, in Portugal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL presented petitions of municipal officers and citizens of Lyman, Kennebunk, and Biddeford, in the State of Maine, in aid of the petition of Samuel Batchelder, and others, for the repair of the United States piers and other property on the Saco river; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HENDERSON presented a memorial of five hundred citizens of Marion county, Missouri, praying that no bridges with pivots and draws be authorized to be constructed over the Mississippi river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GUTHRIE presented the petition of C. S. Pennbaker, agent of the State of Kentucky, praying that a pension may be granted to Lieutenant W. B. Kelley, late of the first Kentucky cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DOOLITTLE, from the select committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 282) to reorganize the clerical force of the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments; and he presented accompanying letters and papers from the Secretary of the Interior, which were ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONNESS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 98) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and China," approved February 17, 1865; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENDRICKS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 340) amendatory and explanatory of an act entitled "An act to regulate prize proceedings and the distribution of prize money, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have been requested to present this bill; I do not know that I am in favor of it; but I move its reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

COLONIZATION OF AFRICANS.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate the transactions of the executive government under the several acts of Congress of April 10, 1862, May 12, 1862, and July 17, 1862, for the transportation, colonization, and settlement of such persons of the African race as are mentioned in those acts respectively, and especially what colonization measures have been adopted, if any, the number of persons colonized, with expenses incurred.

WOMEN'S HOSPITAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 167) to incorporate the Women's Hospital Association of the District of Columbia.

The first amendment of the House of Representatives was in section one, line three, after the first word "that" to insert the following among the names of the incorporators: "Abram D. Gillette, Byron Sunderland, William B. Matchett, Henry D. Cooke, William W. Corcoran, Charles Knap, J. H. Thompson, Moses Kelly, Ansel St. John."

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate concur in that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Secretary read the second amendment of the House of Representatives, which was in the first section, line three, after the name "Adelaide J. Brown" to strike out all the names to and including that of "Mary K. Lewis" in line seven, except that of "Mary W. Kelly," and to insert "Elmira W. Knap, Mary C. Havermer, Mary Ellen Norment, Jane Thompson, Maria L. Harkness, Isabella Margaret Washington, and Mary F. Smith."

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to have the names proposed to be stricken out read.

The SECRETARY. The names proposed to be stricken out are "Mrs. Jane L. Smith, Mrs. Harriet B. Blanchard, Mrs. Maria M. Carter, Mrs. Jane Farnham, Mrs. Ann J. Gillette, Mrs. Kathleen Carlisle, Mrs. Sarah C. Jones, Mrs. Mary K. Lewis."

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know anything about the circumstances, and I move that the bill and amendments lie on the table for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

PORTS OF DELIVERY.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate take up for consideration the bill (S. No. 196) to extend the port of entry of the collection district of the State of Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause in the following words—

That the port of entry of the collection district of the State of Oregon be extended so as to embrace the city of Portland, and that vessels and ships be allowed to load and unload at said city, and that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to build or rent the necessary bonded warehouses at said city—

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, shall be, and is hereby, constituted a port of delivery, and shall be subject to the same regulations and restrictions as other ports of delivery in the United States; and there shall be appointed a surveyor of customs to reside at said port, who shall, in addition to his own duties, perform the duties and receive the salary and emoluments of surveyor prescribed by the act of Congress approved on the 2d of March, 1831, providing for the payment of duties on imported goods at certain ports therein mentioned, entitled "An act allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into Pittsburgh, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Nashville, and Natchez, to be secured and paid at those places;" and the said town of Council Bluffs and the said port of delivery be, and is hereby, annexed to and made a part of the collection district of New Orleans, and all the facilities and privileges afforded by the said act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1831, be, and are hereby, extended to the said port of Council Bluffs.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That Portland, in the State of Oregon, shall be, and is hereby, constituted a port of delivery, and shall be subject to the same regulations and restrictions as other ports of delivery in the United States, and there shall be appointed a surveyor of customs to reside at said port, who shall, in addition to his own duties, perform the duties and receive the salary and emoluments of surveyor prescribed by the act of Congress approved on the 2d of March, 1831, providing for the payment of duties on imported goods at certain ports therein mentioned, entitled "An act allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into Pittsburgh, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Nashville, and Natchez, to be secured and paid at those places;" and the said city of Portland and the said port of delivery be, and is hereby, annexed to and made a part of the collection district of the State of Oregon, and all the facilities and privileges afforded by the said act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1831, be, and are hereby, extended to the said port of Portland.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If I heard the bill correctly, it is a bill to establish a port of delivery for foreign goods away up near the source of the Missouri river. I do not know that there is a probability of there being any importations from Europe at that point. I should like to hear some explanation of the bill from the Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL,] who I believe reported it, to know why it is necessary to establish a port of delivery at that point. It may be all right, but I did not suppose that foreign goods were landed there.

Mr. HENDERSON. That does not follow because it is a port of delivery.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I can assure the Senator that it is necessary so far as the city of Portland is concerned. This bill is reported from the Committee on Commerce as an amendment to a bill that I introduced. I have no interest in making the city of Council Bluffs a port of delivery, but I am interested, and it is not difficult to show, that the city of Portland, in Oregon, ought to be a port of delivery, as large quantities of foreign goods are brought there and delivered in that city.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That may be true in regard to the city of Portland, but I should like to know of the Senator from Oregon if he thinks that is true in regard to Council Bluffs.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know nothing about Council Bluffs. I introduced a bill to make Portland, in Oregon, a port of delivery. That bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and they reported back the bill, with an amendment striking out what I introduced, and inserting this proposition, which includes Council Bluffs as a port of delivery.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope we shall have some explanation of the necessity of a port of delivery at Council Bluffs.

Mr. MORRILL. In reply to the Senator from Illinois, as he appealed to me, I will say that I had no special charge of this bill, and did not report it. I have only a general recollection that this amendment was drawn at the Treasury Department and said to be necessary to prevent smuggling in that region of the country. That is all I can say of it now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know how any smuggling is to be carried on at that point. Perhaps my friend from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] can tell us.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The honorable Senator from Illinois is somewhat misinformed in locating Council Bluffs so far up on the Missouri river.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is pretty far up.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It is much nearer the mouth of that river than the sources of it. It is almost due west from the residence of my colleague, on the Mississippi, Burlington, at which place there is a port of entry or delivery; I do not know which. It is not nearly as far north as Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, at which place there is, I think, a port of entry and a custom-house. Dubuque is on the Mississippi river. Council Bluffs is immediately opposite the eastern terminus of one branch of the Pacific railroad, at Omaha, in Nebraska Territory. I am not familiar enough with the country to say whether a port of delivery be needed there or not; but I can say this, that if one be needed at Galena, in the State of Illinois, at Burlington, in the State of Iowa, and if a port of entry and a custom-house be needed at Dubuque, I can very well conceive how and why a port of delivery may be needed at Council Bluffs. That is all I can say on the subject. We have a custom-house at Dubuque and a port of entry there, and I am satisfied that there is as much necessity for one and the other at Council Bluffs as there is at Dubuque.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We have had various ports of entry or delivery in the West, and I believe that some of them have merely given places for officers. I know I looked into this matter some years ago and ascertained that there were throughout the United States—I had at that time the tables before me—various points where we had ports of delivery where the salary amounted to more than all the duties which the officer collected. I do not know that that would be the case at Council Bluffs. I was inquiring rather for information. I think there are one or two in my own State that have been discontinued recently. We had them all along the Mississippi, and at one time there was a disposition to build custom-houses all over the country. The fact that a port of delivery has been established improperly at some place where it was not needed, is not a sufficient reason for establishing another. However, as I am not informed about this matter and the Senator from Maine thinks there was some reason for it at the Treasury Department, I suggest that the bill had better go over until we are better informed.

Mr. MORRILL. I was going to make that suggestion. I do not wish it to pass on my account.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If there is a reason for it, I have no objection; but I do not see why it should be.

Mr. GRIMES. I simply desire to say that I concur in what my colleague has said, that the same necessity exists, I think, for the establishment of a custom-house at Council Bluffs that existed for the establishment of one at Keokuk, or at Burlington, where I reside, or at Dubuque. I am not aware that there is any reason additional to those that exist as to the office in this place. The truth is, Mr. President, that the offices in that State of this description, as well as offices everywhere else of this character, ought to be abolished, and I am ready to vote to abolish them, and am not prepared to vote to establish any others. I was not aware that there was any such proposition as this here until I heard it read in the bill at the Secretary's desk. Burlington, where I reside, has been a port of delivery a great many years, long before I was a member of this body, and I think that there was one delivery of foreign goods there; I think there was once some railroad iron brought there which was delivered in bond. That is the only business of that description, so far as I know or have been informed, ever done there. During the war this office of surveyor of the port became of some value to the Government.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Will my colleague allow me one moment? May it not be that this is asked for on account of the delivery of the iron at Council Bluffs or Omaha for the Pacific railroad?

Mr. GRIMES. I was going to state that. During the war these officers became of a good deal of value. To them was intrusted the business of looking after contraband articles that were being run over the railroads and taken down into Missouri and there furnished to guerrillas; and I have no doubt that all the expense the Government was put to in establishing and maintaining them was amply compensated. The Senator from Maine states that this proposition, as I understand, came from the Treasury Department.

Mr. MORRILL. I so understood, though I was not sure.

Mr. GRIMES. It may be possible, and quite probable, indeed, if that be so, that there is some substantial reason why the recommendation was made; and therefore I hope that the bill will be permitted to lie over until tomorrow, when we can ascertain something further about it. It may be, as has been suggested by my colleague, that in consequence of the prosecution of the Pacific railroad, which ends on the other side of the river from Council Bluffs, it may be desirable that such an office should be established.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very confident, if this bill was prepared in the Treasury Department, that it is necessary to make Council Bluffs a port of delivery, because I know that I have addressed that Department on these subjects, and I find that they are very reluctant to extend any privileges involving expense unless there is an absolute necessity for it. So far as the city of Portland is concerned, there are immense quantities of foreign goods brought to that city. The trade of eastern Oregon, of a portion of Washington Territory, and of Idaho Territory, with British Columbia, is through the city of Portland, and there is a great necessity for making that place a port of delivery. It would be a great advantage to the persons concerned in that trade. I do not wish to have that proposition which I introduced loaded down with and defeated by a proposition of this kind, about which gentlemen seem to have question, when there can be no sort of question as to the correctness of the proposition which I submitted. But if it is deemed desirable the bill can lie over until to-morrow. I am sure that on inquiry it will be found, in the judgment of the Treasury Department, that this measure is necessary.

Mr. WILSON. Is this measure to go over? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No motion to postpone it has been made.

Mr. POMEROY. I move to postpone the present and all prior orders and take up the bill (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river. This is a bill which was called up by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] the other day, but it then went over. I think we have time to consider it this morning during the morning hour.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am opposed to considering that bill at this time. There is only half an hour left of the morning hour, and it will be discussed as a matter of course. What I desire to say on the bill I should like to say at the time we dispose of it. To make an examination of the bill this morning, and then let it go over to another morning, and then to discuss it and have it postponed again, is no way to have the discussion fully understood. I do not want very much of the time of the Senate when I speak upon it, but I want what remarks I make to be made at the time the vote is taken by the Senate; it is impossible to do so this morning.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the Senator from Kansas will withdraw his motion and let us finish the West Point bill we had up yesterday morning. I think we can get through with it in a few minutes.

Mr. POMEROY. Several efforts have been made to get up the bill to which I call the attention of the Senate. It is entirely with the Senate to say whether they will consider it now or at some other time. I know that all the bills from the Committee on Public Lands which have yet to pass the House of Representatives will have a very poor show there unless we pass them here before the Committee on Public Lands of that House is called for reports. It has not yet been called; and that is the only point there is in reference to this matter.

Mr. WILSON. I shall be much obliged to the Senator if he will not call up that bill this morning, but will allow me to have the West Point bill taken up and disposed of.

Mr. POMEROY. I would rather have a vote upon the question. If the pleasure of the Senate is to postpone the bill, I shall be entirely satisfied.

Mr. WILSON. I move, then, to take up—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is already a motion pending to postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 285. The question is on that motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was not agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to postpone all other matters and take up House joint resolution No. 134, relative to appointments to the Military Academy of the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. NESMITH to add the following as a new section:

And be it further resolved, That hereafter the Superintendent of the Military Academy may be selected from any corps of the Army.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Davis, Doolittle, Guthrie, Hendricks, Howard, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Nesmith, Norton, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Yates—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Fossenden, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howe, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Pomero, Sumner, Van Winkle, Willey, and Wilson—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Creswell, Dixon, Edmunds, McDougall, Nye, Poland, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Wright—12.

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendment heretofore made was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time. The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. DOOLITTLE, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

CAIRO AND FULTON RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. POMEROY. I move to take up Senate bill No. 223.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 223) to revive and extend the provisions of an act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri, to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point upon the Mississippi, opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi river; approved February 9, 1853, and for other purposes.

It proposes to revive and extend the act mentioned in its title, with all the provisions therein made, for the term of ten years, and all the lands therein granted, which reverted to the United States under the provisions of that act, are restored to the same custody, control, and condition, and made subject to the uses and trusts in all respects as they were before and at the time such reversion took effect.

There is also hereby granted, added to, and made part of the former donation of lands, and to be held and disposed of in the same manner as if included in the original grant, all the alternate sections and parts of sections, designated by odd numbers, lying along the outer line of lands heretofore selected, and within ten miles on each side thereof, excepting lands reserved or otherwise appropriated by law, or to which the right of preemption has attached; but this additional quantity of lands when added to the lands heretofore granted is not to exceed, in the aggregate, sufficient to amount to ten sections for each mile of railroad.

All the lands mentioned in this act, and granted by it, are to be reserved from entry, preemption, or appropriation to any other purpose than that contemplated, for the term of ten years from the passage of the act; but no person who has held any office or appointment under the government of the so-called confederate States, or who has borne arms against the United States, is to be a director in any railroad company receiving the benefit of this grant.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with amendments. The first amendment was in section two, line ten, after the word "preemption" to insert "or homestead settlement;" so that the clause will read:

Excepting lands reserved or otherwise appropriated by law, or to which the right of preemption or homestead settlement is attached.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of section two the following proviso:

And provided further, That said additional quantity of lands shall be disposed of only as follows: whenever proof shall be furnished, satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, that twenty consecutive miles of said railroad have been constructed, in a good, substantial, and workmanlike manner, then all of said additional lands lying along and opposite to said completed portion may be sold, and so on until the work is completed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section three, line four, to strike out the word "from" and to insert the word "for;" and also to strike out the following proviso at the end of the section:

Provided, That no person who has held any office or appointment under the government of these so-called "confederate States," or who has borne arms against the United States, shall be a director in any railroad company receiving the benefit of this grant.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] has an amendment that I should like to have reported to this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I should like to have an opportunity of examining this bill and three others affecting the same section of country, which are pending before the Senate, and I will ask the chairman of the committee to let this bill lie over for the present, and I will agree with him at an early day to take them all up.

Mr. POMEROY. My colleague may not be aware that this is simply a revival of an old grant. In 1853 a grant of land was made to the State of Arkansas for a railroad. That grant lapsed in 1863, during the war. They built a little portion of the road, and abandoned it during the war. The State of Arkansas never had but one grant. I thought, and the committee thought, that that grant ought to be revived, so that the State may ultimately have an opportunity, within the next ten years, of building this road. This bill simply revives and enlarges the grant to ten sections per mile—the original grant was only six sections—and extends the time within which to complete the road for ten years.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee reporting this bill if any portion of the route is through the Indian country, or through lands belonging to the Indians.

Mr. POMEROY. Not any portion of it, as I understand.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I should like to call his attention to the third section of the bill, which provides—

That all the lands mentioned in this act, and hereby granted, are reserved from entry, preemption, or appropriation to any other purpose than herein contemplated, for the said term of ten years from the passage of this act.

I submit to the Senate whether it is proper to tie up the public lands in that way. I am a member of the Indian Committee at the present session of Congress, and although not very familiar with Indian affairs, I find that in the making of treaties with the Indian tribes we are very much embarrassed by these grants of lands for railroad purposes. It is insisted that these grants take the lands, notwithstanding they have been reserved for the Indians, and that the United States, by passing a law of this character granting the public lands on each side of a railroad, obligates itself to remove the Indians so that the grant may take effect through their country. We shall have to appropriate several hundred thousand and probably millions of dollars at this session of Congress in consequence of railroad grants through Indian country.

Mr. POMEROY. There is no Indian country here.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understand there is not in this bill; but we are notified by the other Senator from Kansas, [Mr. LANE,] that this is one of four bills, and a good many of the Kansas roads run through Indian country. I looked cursorily into the statutes and the treaties, and I was rather of the opinion that these grants of land through the Indian country which had been reserved to the Indians by treaty were nugatory; that they did not carry anything with the grant; that it was inconsistent with the treaty obligation of the Government. But it is replied to that that good faith requires the Government of the United States to make these grants good, that they have held out to capitalists that they shall have every alternate section of land for ten miles on each side of the road, and that they are bound to get the Indians out of the way.

I make these remarks not in reference to this special bill, which I trust will go over and be looked into, for it seems to me that this third section is objectionable. I do not believe in tying up the public lands of the country for ten years from settlement in this way.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator from Illinois by reading the section carefully will see that it is only the alternate odd sections that are reserved for ten years. It is not the public lands.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I would not reserve them for ten years.

Mr. POMEROY. No railroad bill ever passed Congress that did not reserve for a limited period the odd-numbered sections, and the company were to get them as fast as they built the road. That is the provision in every bill. We do not reserve all the country from settlement. The even sections can be entered at any time all along the line of this road. This section simply reserves from settlement and preemption the odd-numbered sections for a distance of ten miles on each side of the road.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if it has ever been the policy of the Government to reserve for such a lengthy period the lands from settlement?

Mr. POMEROY. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I think we had better change that policy and allow the country to be settled.

Mr. POMEROY. These very lands, acre for acre, were reserved for ten years, from 1853 to 1863.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And now you propose to reserve them for twenty years.

Mr. POMEROY. Yes, sir; to give another ten years with which to build this road.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They have built no road, and yet you propose to keep this land out of market for twenty years.

Mr. POMEROY. They have built a part of the road.

Mr. CONNESS obtained the floor.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator from California will allow me, I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois one question. I feel the force of what he says, but I want to know of him how Congress can make a grant to a State to enable that State to build a railroad without taking the lands out of market. The grant is to the State of certain described lands. How is that grant to be made without taking the lands out of market? Will he make a grant to a State for a particular purpose, and yet allow from day to day the lands thus granted to be sold?

Mr. TRUMBULL. My objection was to the length of time they were reserved. These lands have been reserved for ten years already, and no road is built, and now you propose to reserve them ten years more.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am not very particular about the number of years. This is a grant that was made more than ten years ago to aid in the construction of a road in Missouri and Arkansas. The Senator's own constituency have large interests in this very road; more, a great deal, as I understand, than the people of Arkansas. I think the president of the company is a citizen of Illinois, Mr. Bray-man. It is upon his application that the time is now extended. The Senator knows that the financial trouble of 1857, and then the war coming on, prevented the construction of many railroads. This was one of the roads not constructed within the time limited by the act of Congress; but bonds have been issued and stock subscribed, and the committee thought it was but fair to allow a reasonable time for the completion of this road, as we have done in almost every other State where the companies have been unable to finish the road within the time fixed. The grants are made upon the condition that the roads shall be constructed within ten years. That has been the character of all the grants since the first grant made to the State of Illinois for the great Central road. The condition is that the road must be finished within ten years, else the lands granted shall revert to the Government. Now, the Senator knows that in 1857 a very severe financial crisis came upon the country and stopped almost all work upon railroads. It affected enterprises in Iowa, Wisconsin, and in other States; and during the last and the present session of Congress we have extended in some cases for five years, and in some cases, I believe, for eight years, the time within which the roads might be completed, giving a reasonable time for the completion of the roads. Now, if the Senator thinks that ten years is too long, let him propose an amendment; but certainly he will not defeat the investment of money already made, mainly by men from the northern States, in this particular road, upon the technical proposition that the time limited has expired.

Mr. CONNESS. This provision had attracted my own attention, and I was about to speak of it when the Senator from Illinois rose. I find it, at least in its objectionable form to my mind, in the first section, in the revival and extension "for the term of ten years from the passage of this act." I wish to say that I am in favor of continuing rights to this company or to any company who will build a road through the new territory; but I do not think that this is the right form of condition, nor that it is the usual form of condition; but if it be, I join the Senator from Illinois in saying that it is time to change it. The fair terms upon which a grant of the public lands may be given to a company should be distinctly stated. This may be considered as a new grant; but in reviving it, it should be continued to the same parties, in my opinion. But it has lapsed, and they have no rights in it; and it is, to all intents and purposes, a new grant to be made to them. Then I think the conditions that should accompany it should require that they begin the road within a given time, say two years, as provided in all the bills I have introduced asking for grants to railroad companies, and then require that they shall construct a certain number of miles each year thereafter, and that they shall construct the whole extent of the road within a given time, and that they shall be entitled to land continuous with the road as fast as they construct it. These are conditions which leave the title of the land in the United States in case the road shall not be built, and conditions also of the strongest kind, as I think, to induce the building of the road; but this seems to be a very loose and general provision, "that the above recited act," referring to an act that is not before us, "with all the provisions therein made, be and the same is hereby revived and extended for the term of ten years from the passage of this act." I am in favor of the bill; but I suggest that it ought to have another form. I think this is a very objectionable form. Grant lands, I say, for the construction of those great improvements which bring settlement and civilization into the far West, but require the parties to commence within a given time not distant, and to go steadily forward with the improvements, and then let their title accrue as they carry on the work. I think that these bills ought to have that shape and form.

Mr. TRUMBULL. In reply to the Senator from Indiana, I wish to say that he did not answer at all the suggestion which I made. I was not objecting to a land grant, nor to reserving from sale a portion of the public lands in aid of such a grant. I did not object to the bill upon that ground, and propose to require that the Government should go on and sell the lands from day to day; but it seemed to me that the length of time here proposed, ten years, was an unreasonable time to tie up these lands. I quite agree with what the Senator from California has said, that where parties had rights which were interrupted by the rebellion, it is no more than proper that they should be continued; but the fact that people in the State of Illinois are interested in it, or that a gentleman from that State is president of the road, does not alter the propriety of making the grant, nor would it alter my course in reference to the bill. It seems to me that this third section ties up the land quite too long.

The other suggestions which I made in regard to these land grants generally were not applicable to this particular bill, because I understand this road does not go through the Indian country. I made those suggestions because I understood that there were other bills, as was stated by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. LANE,] for roads which might probably go through the Indian country; and I had found in my action upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, that we were very much embarrassed in providing for the Indians, and the Government was put to expense in consequence of these land grants; and I think that when we make the grants they ought to be made in a way not to complicate our difficulties with the Indian tribes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I offer this amendment to come in as a proviso at the end of the third section of the bill:

Provided, That all lands heretofore given to the State of Missouri for the construction of the Cairo and Fulton railroad, or for the use of said road, lying in the State of Missouri, and all lands proposed to be granted by this act for the use or in aid of the said road herein named, and lying in the State of Missouri, shall be granted and patented to the said State whenever the road shall be completed through said State, which lands may be held by the State of Missouri and used for paying the State for the amount of bonds heretofore issued by it to aid said company, and all interest accruing or to accrue thereon.

In 1853 a grant of land was made by Congress to the State of Missouri for the use and benefit of this road, or to aid in its construction; and the State granted the lands to the company. There was a company organized called the Cairo and Fulton Railroad Company. There was a magnificent grant of lands, as I understand, given also to the State of Arkansas for the same purpose. A company was organized about the year 1854, 1855, or 1856, who obtained, in addition to the lands that were granted by Congress, a grant of some $700,000 in bonds from our State; and they used those bonds, built some twenty-five or thirty miles of road with the proceeds of the bonds they sold, and the State of Missouri has been compelled ever since that time to pay the interest on the bonds. The company has never paid a dollar of interest since the issue of the bonds, I believe. I really do not know the condition of the lands, because I am not now so familiar as I was in 1856, 1857, or 1858 with the history and condition of this company; nor am I so well acquainted with the condition of these lands as respects the right of my State to them. Whatever lands of this grant are unsold now in the State of Missouri—and I do not know what quantity of lands there are unsold by the company—of course will be regranted under this bill. I desire that the State of Missouri shall hold a lien upon those lands and that Congress shall not revive this grant so as to pass the title out of the State of Missouri, but I desire that the State shall hold a lien on these lands or any lands that may be granted in this bill within the borders of that State in order to pay back to the State of Missouri the amount that she has already issued in aid of this road.

The company have not built road enough, as I understand, to have properly and legitimately consumed the amount of bonds issued by the State of Missouri. In other words, I mean to say that with a most magnificent grant of lands they have never built any more road than they could build out of the State grant. We gave them the lands, and in addition to that gave them $700,000 of bonds; and they have not used any money according to my impression, not, perhaps, one cent of money, except what the State of Missouri gave to them; and having used those bonds they have failed to pay back one dollar of interest; they have not reimbursed the State for the grant.

I make no opposition to the passage of the bill. It may be passed; I desire to see these railroad improvements put forward as rapidly as it can be done. I have no objection to it whatever. I do not look upon these railroad grants as damaging to the public, for the reason that we charge double price for the reserved sections of land, and I believe that the double price is more readily paid than the single price without the construction of the roads. I make no objection to it; but I do desire that my State shall be reimbursed now while I have an opportunity of doing it. I hope no objection whatever will be made to the amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. I think there is no objection to the amendment. The facts of which the Senator speaks were not before the committee; if they had been no doubt the committee would have reported such an amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from Missouri himself confesses that he is not familiar with the facts in this case, and has not been since 1856, 1857, or 1858.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let me correct the Senator from Iowa. What I stated was that I am not now as familiar as I once was with the exact condition of the lands lying in my State. This road only runs thirty-seven or thirty-eight miles in my State. I do not now remember whether the State granted the lands to the company in fee and permitted the company to sell them. I do not know what amount of lands remain unappropriated or unsold under the old grant of 1853. I do not wish the Senator to understand that I am at all ignorant of the fact that the company have $700,000 of the bonds of the State of Missouri, and that the State of Missouri originally owned these lands. Now, as I understand, the object of this bill is to revive the land grant which is now dead. I want this revival to inure to the benefit of the State of Missouri, so that we can hold a lien upon these lands. We did once hold a lien, and if the act is revived I want the benefit of that lien still. What I meant to say was that I am not exactly familiar with the title to the land; that is all. I do not like to state that I am fully acquainted with a fact when I am not.

Mr. GRIMES. It is quite evident that there is a conflict of interest between the State represented by the Senator from Missouri and some railroad company.

Mr. HENDERSON. I want them to pay us back.

Mr. GRIMES. And this is the method which the Senator proposes to adopt to collect the money from the railroad company. I understand that to be his purpose, to make them pay. Now, I suggest whether we had not better let that railroad company be heard before our Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. POMEROY. I will state to the Senator that the president of this road was before the committee. These facts were not presented at the time, but he has since written to me, and virtually drew this amendment himself. The Senator from Missouri has changed the phraseology, but the president of the road said that what the Senator from Missouri desired was just and right.

Mr. GRIMES. But it is not known what interest we are going to conflict with by this sort of legislation. I do not know anything about it. In fact I do not comprehend fully the statement that has been made by the Senator from Missouri. I should like to have some report or some further explanation on the subject.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I think I understand the question pending. A grant of lands was made originally to the State of Missouri and conceded by the State to this company, and the bonds of the State were issued upon the company promising to pay the interest upon the bonds. It is a fact, I think, understood by persons who have been conversant at all with the subject, that the company has paid no interest. The concession to the company was based on its obligation to pay interest. In making the grant it is undoubtedly just that the State of Missouri should be protected, the concession having been to her in the first instance, and from her to the company, with the understanding that the interest would be assumed and paid by the company. That is understood, I believe, by every person who knows anything about railroading in the State of Missouri and the West. It is a simple statement of what we have done heretofore, and it is due to the State of Missouri that she should be protected.

Mr. GRIMES. I have examined this amendment since I addressed the Chair, and I think there does not seem to be the objection to it which I apprehended at the time I spoke.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Has not the State of Missouri entered upon and sold this railroad?

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand not. I believe it is advertised to be sold some time in June, but it has not yet been sold.

Mr. POMEROY. They could not sell public lands. This is a question of reviving a public land grant.

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly. The State of Missouri holds a lien on the road and lands, too; and I do not want this act to operate to take that lien away from the State of Missouri. That is all I am aiming at. I do not want the effect of this act to be to deprive the State of its present lien on the lands. The State not only has a lien on the lands legitimately and properly, but a lien on the railroad itself; that is, on the bed of the road. Now, I believe that the State is proceeding to sell the road. I suppose, however, that if this grant is revived the company will get credit enough to go on with the road. I apprehend they will, and perhaps will pay off the State the amount of the bonds; but I do not want to put it in the power of the company to neglect to pay. I want a lien on the lands, and in all probability, then, Governor Fletcher will stop proceedings under the advertisement to sell. We hold that we have a lien, a legal lien, for the payment of our bonds upon the road. He perhaps will suffer them to proceed, having, perhaps, credit enough to put their own lands in the market, and raise the money to pay off the State bonds. If they do, of course we are satisfied, and the lands will then go to the company under my amendment, because the State only holds a lien upon them to satisfy this debt.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. To meet the suggestion, which was a very good one, of the Senator from California, I move to amend the bill by striking out, in the third line of the first section, the words, "the above recited act," and to insert the whole title of the original act.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I hope the bill will be passed by for the present.

Mr. POMEROY. If the special order is now to be taken up, I have no objection to that.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I desire time to examine the bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I should like to have this amendment adopted, first.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for a moment, to enable me to make a motion in reference to the committee provided for yesterday.

Mr. HENDERSON. I withdraw the motion.

DEPOSITS IN NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the select committee ordered yesterday to inquire into the condition of the national banks with respect to deposits of Government funds, consist of five members, and that the committee be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN GORDON.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 294) for the relief of John Gordon.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It will be an authorization to the Postmaster General to pay to John Gordon, messenger in that Department, for extra services performed out of office hours during the administration of Postmaster General Campbell, any sum that he may, in his opinion, believe him to be entitled to, at the rate of $250 per annum.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has this bill received the sanction of a committee?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Yes, sir; and there is a written report.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I now renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I hope the Senator will allow me to call up another little bill, a pension bill, which was accidentally omitted the other day when pension bills were being considered.

Mr. HENDERSON. I cannot withdraw my motion.

The motion was agreed to, there being, on a division—ayes 19, noes 7; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 25, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks leave of absence for the gentleman from Rhode Island, Mr. JENCKES, until Tuesday next.

No objection being made, leave was granted.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. KETCHAM, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Major D. C. Ruggles, late a paymaster in the United States Army, copies being left.

On motion of Mr. BIDWELL, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of the town of Santa Barbara.

CULTIVATION OF FOREST TREES.

Mr. DONNELLY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to encourage the growth of forest trees upon the western plains; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to repeal the fourth section of the act approved March 5, 1864, and the act approved January 20, 1865, to provide for carrying the mails; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PENSIONS.

Mr. PERHAM, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back bill of the House No. 363, supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions, with the amendments of the Senate thereto, and moved that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and that a conference be asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

LAND GRANT TO MICHIGAN.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back from the Committee on Public Lands bill of the Senate No. 219, granting certain lands to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a ship-canal to connect the waters of Lake Superior with the lake known as Lac La Belle in that State.

Mr. SPALDING. I object, and call for the regular order of business.

MEMORIAL REFERRED.

Mr. DEFREES, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of the trustees of the Indiana Agricultural College; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

CORRECTION.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to state that I voted in the affirmative on the passage of the bankrupt bill, and that my vote is not recorded.

CANAL AND SEWERAGE COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has commenced, and the House will resume the consideration of Senate bill No. 190, to incorporate the District of Columbia Canal and Sewerage Company, reported from the Committee for the District of Columbia on Friday last, and on which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] is entitled to the floor.

The pending question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time now.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to amend the first section by changing the name of "Whitman Bestor" to "George L. Bestor," and to add the names of "Kingman F. Page, Charles H. Sherrill, and Amos C. Babcock."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to add the following, "except in the mode and manner hereinbefore provided for," to section seven-teen of the bill, which now reads:

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall be held or deemed, in any manner or way, to injure or impair any public or private rights or interests, or in any manner to affect the same beyond the mere transfer of the rights of the United States to said District of Columbia Canal and Sewerage Company.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Mr. Speaker, as I desire a vote on this bill to-day, I have concluded to occupy but ten minutes' time in explaining the bill. Then I shall yield ten minutes to be used entirely by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. F. THOMAS], or to be divided between him and my colleague on the committee, [Mr. McCULLOUGH], as they may see proper; and then I shall take ten minutes to close the argument, and shall then ask a vote on the bill.

Mr. F. THOMAS. Lest it should be inferred from my silence that such an arrangement would be agreeable to me, I have simply to say that it would be utterly impossible for me in ten minutes to explain the position I occupy in relation to this measure. I shall hope, therefore, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] will allow the usual latitude of discussion, or, if he does not, that the House will grant it. It is a matter of vast importance to my congressional district, as I will explain to the House if the opportunity be offered.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I am as anxious to accommodate the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] as any one can be; but I am anxious to dispose of this bill, in order that we may report other bills from the committee which are of importance to this District, and I do not propose to devote any more time to the consideration of this bill than is necessary for a full and fair understanding of its provisions.

Mr. McCULLOUGH. I have an amendment which I wish to offer to this bill. I wish to ask if I can offer it now.

The SPEAKER. It will be in order if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] will yield for that purpose.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I cannot yield for that purpose now.

Mr. McCULLOUGH. I offered this amendment in the committee, and I understood the chairman of the committee [Mr. INGERSOLL] to promise me that I should have an opportunity to offer it in the House.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Well, I will give the gentleman an opportunity to offer his amendment.

Mr. McCULLOUGH. That is all I want.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Will the gentleman state his amendment now?

Mr. McCULLOUGH. I desire to have the bill amended in the second section by striking out the words, "so as the manner of making the connection shall not injure or impair the bank of said canal and sewer where the connection shall be made."

Mr. INGERSOLL. Well, I believe I would prefer to have that amendment considered and disposed of now rather than at any other time.

Mr. McCULLOUGH. I offer the amendment, and if it is in order I would like to say a few words in explanation of it.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I will yield two minutes for that purpose.

Mr. McCULLOUGH. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as it passed the Senate and is reported to this House, gives to this corporation a power and control over the sewerage system of the city of Washington which every member of this House should be opposed to, in my opinion, who is desirous of seeing the health and prosperity of this city promoted. It will not be denied, I presume, that the free and untrammelled use of this canal is absolutely necessary to a proper sewerage of the city. In fact, without this it will be impossible to preserve the health and cleanliness of the city. Now, sir, if the provision which I ask to have stricken out remains this corporation has such control over this important matter as will greatly, if not entirely, prevent the authorities of Washington from using this canal as a deposit for the filth of the city. The provision which I ask to be taken out says that "the manner of making the connection shall not injure or impair the bank of said canal and sewer where the connection shall be made." This provision, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, gives to this corporation the power to stop the city authorities from making such connection, when in the opinion of said corporation it will "injure or impair the bank of said canal and sewer." It certainly will give them the power to object and say that such connection will injure the canal, and will lead to a conflict of rights. In a great city such as this should be, such an important matter as its health and cleanliness should not be under the control of a private corporation; and for these and other reasons which will suggest themselves to members I move to strike out this provision.

Mr. INGERSOLL. In order to fully understand the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCULLOUGH] I will read a portion of the section:

That the said company is hereby authorized and empowered to survey, locate, and lay out and construct a canal and sewer between the Anacostia river, commonly known as the Eastern branch, from a point thereon near its junction with the Potomac river, to a point on the old canal near Virginia avenue, which passes through the city of Washington; thence in, by, along, and through said old canal, to the western corporate limits of said city of Washington; and thence to the Chesapeake and Ohio canal at its terminus at Georgetown, in the District of Columbia. The said canal and sewer, when constructed, shall constitute and remain a depository and duct for the sewerage from the city of Washington, and from the property of the United States therein; and the proper corporate authorities of the city of Washington shall always have unrestricted and full power to determine where the sewers of said city shall connect with the said canal and sewer, and the manner in which said connections shall be made, so as the manner of making the connection shall not injure or impair the bank of said canal and sewer where the connection shall be made.

Now, the words proposed to be stricken out simply throw some protection around this canal and sewer by providing that—

The manner of making the connection shall not injure or impair the bank of said canal and sewer where the connection shall be made.

Now, it seems to me that it is but just to the corporation that the city of Washington shall not be allowed to make the connection of its lateral sewers with this main sewer in such a manner as to destroy the banks of the canal, because the connection can be made in such a way as not to interfere with the canal in the least. The bill, as it stands, simply provides that the city shall have the unrestricted use of the canal for sewer purposes, making connections when and where it pleases, but in such a manner as not to injure or destroy the banks of the canal. This restriction upon the manner of making the connection the gentleman from Maryland desires to strike out. I object to such an amendment, and I hope it will not be adopted. I ask the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

On agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 26, noes 28; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. INGERSOLL and McCULLOUGH.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Mr. Speaker, I am, of course, aware that this bill does not command any general interest, because it is local in its application, and members who are not upon the Committee for the District of Columbia may, perhaps, take no interest in it; but I trust gentlemen will give sufficient attention to the explanation I desire to make as will enable them to give an intelligent vote upon the question.

This bill proposes to incorporate into a body-politic certain gentlemen named in the first section, with power to construct a canal along the line of this old ditch which has been a disgrace to the city for over sixty years. It is proposed to dig the canal ten feet below low tide, so that there shall be ten feet of living, pure water in the canal at all times. It is proposed that it shall be a commercial canal, and connect with the Chesapeake and Ohio canal at Rock creek, in Georgetown; thence proceeding by the line of this old canal, upon it as near as can be, to deep water on the Anacostia creek, or Eastern branch, as it is sometimes called. The bill proposes to convey to this corporation whatever interest the United States has, if it has any, in this old canal. It is yet to be settled whether the United States has any interest in this old canal or not. The corporate authorities of Washington claim that they have an interest in it. The committee think that the United States has an interest of some kind, but an interest of no particular value, and of no value at all in the present condition of the canal. We propose that, if the United States has any interest in this canal, we shall get rid of it, and give it to this corporation that proposes to construct a good commercial canal. It proposes that this old canal, now exhaling malaria and disseminating disease, shall be flooded with water within thirty days after the passage of this bill, so that the canal may conduce to the health of the city.

This bill originated in the Senate. It received a thorough examination at the hands of the Senate committee, and was reported by the chairman of that committee. After some discussion it was passed in the Senate without a dissenting voice, if my recollection is correct, though I may be mistaken about that. The Committee for the District of Columbia of the House have investigated this matter, and have concluded that this bill presents the only feasible plan for making this old "ditch" a useful structure for the benefit of the city of Washington.

In the year 1802 Congress chartered the first company for the construction of this canal, with a capital of $80,000, on the condition that unless it should be completed within a certain period of time all rights and grants by virtue of the charter should cease and become void. That company became extinct. Another organization was incorporated in 1809 with similar restrictions and conditions. Thus the matter continued from 1809 till 1833, no canal being completed by either of these organizations.

In 1833, this city corporation made some kind of purchase—for what consideration I know not; neither does the committee, nor do the corporators of the old canal. Those corporators had a capital stock of $150,000, but what price they sold out for to the corporation of the city of Washington I do not know. But in 1832 or 1833 the city of Washington presented a bill to Congress declaring that they had made a bargain and purchase from this canal corporation, and asking Congress to vest in them whatever rights the United States had in this canal, because they believed, by reason of the neglect of that corporation to perform the duties imposed upon them by the charter, they had forfeited all rights to the canal to the Government of the United States in the canal. So an act was passed in 1833 giving to the city of Washington whatever rights the United States had in the canal, and the canal became the property of the city of Washington; but on the condition, mark you, that it should go on and complete the canal within one year from and after the passage of the act. Years rolled around and the city of Washington did next to nothing. They never made it a commercial canal. They never did anything, except to get money from the United States. They received $20,000 on two different occasions to clean out the canal or to make some repairs. On another occasion, the city of Washington obtained $150,000 out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of liquidating the debt they had contracted on the purchase of the canal from the original corporators. The Government of the United States has never received any consideration from the city in return for this expenditure, but the city has from that time up to the present collected wharfage and rent to the amount of several thousand dollars per year. The canal has been used for no other purpose than to spend money on or to get money out of the Treasury.

These men who seek to be incorporated claim that the city of Washington has never paid a dollar for the canal; if there was any money paid to the original corporators it was paid by the Government under act of Congress. The city of Washington has never paid a dollar. Instead of performing the conditions of the charter or the agreement with the Government it has violated them. Yet, sir, notwithstanding the fact, the city has had undisputed control of this "old ditch" or canal for nearly thirty-five years. They have done nothing with it except on three different times to receive from the Treasury of the United States $190,000 in the aggregate. They may have spent some of it in cleaning the canal, but little for the purpose of constructing a canal which would be of any benefit to commerce.

The committee believe to leave this canal as it is it will never benefit any one—it will never benefit the city of Washington. The committee believe the city of Washington has forfeited whatever rights it had in it. It never had any real right. It made a contract with the original corporators, but subsequently Congress appropriated $150,000 to pay that claim of the original corporators on the sale of the canal to the city. I suppose it paid the money to the original corporators, or put it into their own pockets or into the city treasury. There has been no money paid by the citizens of Washington or the city of Washington in its corporate capacity for this purchase of the canal. So the city of Washington loses nothing by the bill, but gains immeasurably if these parties construct a commercial canal in accordance with the provisions of the bill. It will be a source of revenue, and of great benefit to the city. It will cheapen the price of coal and building material of all kinds.

And so that we shall not trespass upon the rights of any person or body politic, it is provided that whatever rights, public, private, or corporate, in or to this canal shall be protected.

The corporation sought to be created by this act has no authority to take one cent's worth of property which belongs to the city of Washington or to any individual except by paying the full value of the property, to be ascertained in the usual mode when private property is taken for public uses.

The committee have proposed by this bill to authorize the construction of this canal by this corporation and to give it whatever rights or interest the United States Government has in this old canal. If the Government of the United States has any interest in it the committee have failed to see that it is of any advantage or of any value to the United States. If the corporate authorities of the city of Washington own the canal and it is of any value to them the bill provides that this corporation shall pay every dollar that it is worth before they appropriate it.

It is objected, as I have heard, that this bill authorizes this corporation to take all the land that may be made or reclaimed out of the waste land lying along the line of the canal for its own use. There is not one word of truth in it. The bill simply provides that this corporation shall have eighty feet in width for the canal and six feet additional on each side for a tow path, and nothing more. Any land beyond that that now belongs to the city of Washington or to the Government of the United States is reserved to the city of Washington or to the Government, so that this corporation does not get one single rod of ground additional.

It is objected, as I understand, by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] that this bill proposes to seize several hundred thousand dollars' worth of the property of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company. Now, I cannot for my life see wherein or by what provision of this bill such a statement is warranted. It does provide that this corporation shall have power to construct a canal from Seventeenth street west to Rock creek. I will admit that some forty years ago or more, when the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company was chartered, the charter authorized that company to build their canal to Seventeenth street west, and that it did extend it to that point and used it for a time. But there is a provision in that charter, also, that if the company shall fail to use any portion of the canal or keep it in repair for commercial purposes it shall forfeit its charter to that extent, at least that is my view of the law. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company has the terminus of their canal at Rock creek, in Georgetown, one mile and a quarter west of Seventeenth street.

Twenty years have elapsed since the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company have used this part of their canal. It is now filled with sand, mud, and rubbish of one kind and another to such an extent that there has not a canal-boat passed through it for that length of time, as I am informed. There is at Seventeenth street an old lock with a gate, but it is filled up with earth to such an extent that it has not been opened for nine years. But yet the gate-keeper stays there, and he told me the other day that the gate had not been opened for nine years. And yet the company keep him there and pay him a salary. No wonder they pay no dividends if they conduct business in that manner.

If, however, the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company have any vested right in this old canal, which they have not used for twenty years, whatever right it has is still reserved. The bill does not propose to take anybody's property in any other manner than is usually done when you incorporate a company and give it authority to take and pay for such property as it may require to carry out the purposes of the incorporation. This company must have some right to take property, but it must be so guarded as to protect the rights of individuals and be compelled to pay for all the property taken before it is applied to the use of the corporation.

Such are the provisions of the bill under consideration. If there are any vested rights in the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company to this portion of the old canal it will not be deprived of them. It simply authorizes the construction of a canal and the condemnation of property with payment therefor. If this old canal is in such a condition that it cannot be used, and if the right of the city in it is one of those rights that cannot be invaded by a corporation of this kind, all they have got to do is to apply to a court for injunction and stop this work at once. And precisely the same thing may be done by the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company. This bill confers no extra privilege and no extra rights upon this corporation. None whatever. It simply authorizes the construction of a canal just as if no "ditch" had ever been built through the city, and provides for the payment of all property, whether of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, the city of Washington, or of private persons. They are all protected.

The object of the bill is to give this city a commercial canal that will connect the coal regions of Maryland with this city. It is proposed, as a part of the contemplated improvement, to construct a canal from the Anacostia or Eastern branch to Annapolis, and from there there is a water communication by the Chesapeake bay from Annapolis to Baltimore, and so on to Philadelphia, and by canal already open to New York, which will shorten the distance to New York by water two hundred and fifty miles. It saves a sea voyage of five hundred and seventy miles from Georgetown to New York if these twenty miles of canal between the Anacostia and Annapolis shall be completed.

These are some of the objects sought to be attained by this bill, and in my opinion the work will be done. So far as the committee can judge, the men who propose to do the work are men of energy and ability. The committee have no idea that the city of Washington or the Government of the United States will ever build the work. This company propose to build it without a dollar's tax on the city of Washington or taxing the United States Treasury one farthing.

Mr. Speaker, as I wish to pass this bill this morning, I will yield in two minutes to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. F. THOMAS.]

Mr. F. THOMAS. Oh, no, sir; I could not accept the time. The gentleman intends it as a very polite proposition, and I have no doubt it is made in a very kind spirit.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I said that in two minutes from this time I would yield to the gentleman.

Mr. F. THOMAS. Oh! I beg your pardon.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I only want two minutes more myself. I would consider it highly improper to offer the gentleman but two minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this franchise is now said to be of considerable value to the city of Washington, and that there would be some great wrong done in allowing this company to build the work.

When the Committee for the District of Columbia was organized at the commencement of this session we were importuned by the authorities of the city of Washington to take this canal off the hands of the city; they besought the committee to take the old canal, which had been a disgrace and a nuisance, and fill it up, or dig it out, or do something with it in order to relieve the city from it. A proposition was made to build a sewer within the canal and then cover it all over with earth, and destroy it forever for any commercial purposes. All sorts of propositions were made to the committee; and when this bill was introduced into the Senate two months ago we heard no objection to it. It was carefully examined and considered, and it passed the Senate by an almost unanimous vote. After it had been considered by the committee of this House the city of Washington said, all at once, that some right of immense value was being disposed of to their injury.

Now, so far as Congress is concerned, I do not suppose it cares who makes the canal—whether it is done by the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, by the corporation of the city of Washington, or by any other corporation. If a private corporation will construct this canal free of expense to this city and to the Government, then I am in favor of that corporation; and I believe that is what this bill will accomplish.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I find in the fourteenth section of this bill the following provision:

That the said company shall, within thirty days after the passage of this act, cause a constant stream of fresh water to be turned into and upon the said old canal, and to flow through the same from the western corporate limits of the city of Washington to the Anacostia river, and to continue so to flow until the 20th day of October next, in default whereof the said corporators of said company shall forfeit and be jointly and severally liable to pay to the United States the sum of $2,000 recoverable on motion made by the mayor of the city of Washington or any other person, after ten days' notice thereof, duly served, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, or any other court having competent jurisdiction:

I would ask my colleague [Mr. INGERSOLL] if this corporation will be liable to this forfeiture before they shall signify their acceptance of the terms of this act. I do not find any provision in this bill prescribing that this corporation shall signify their acceptance of this grant. Does my colleague suppose that this company can be made liable before they have done anything to signify that they are a party to this act?

Mr. INGERSOLL. No, sir; I do not think they could.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Should there not be a provision in this bill providing that this company shall signify their acceptance of this grant within a certain time after the passage of this act?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I am willing to agree to any amendment of that kind the gentleman may offer. I will now yield the remainder of the morning hour, but one minute, to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. F. THOMAS.]

Mr. F. THOMAS. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] proposes that I shall in the short space of ten minutes answer the argument which he has submitted to the House on a measure of vital importance to my constituency, and at the same time weave into the discussion all those elements which it has suited the peculiar views of the gentleman to leave out of his remarks. Now, it is for the House to determine whether such a proposition is reasonable in itself.

Now, when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] shall have concluded his remarks I will ask the indulgence of the House to endeavor to explain fully and clearly the whole bearing of this proposition, which, as I have already stated, is of vast importance to the interests I represent; for this is by no means a local measure. I know I have the opportunity of consuming the next seven or eight minutes, and then this bill will go over, as a matter of course. But I will deal more courteously with the House, and ask them to postpone the further consideration of this bill until next Friday morning.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I am willing, if the House will consent, that this bill shall be discussed for two days, and then the gentleman can have all the time he desires, if the House will consent to give it to him. And I will join with the gentleman from Maryland in asking the House to give him all the time he wishes, or for two or three hours in addition to what he would have now, if we can have it, say to-morrow, instead of using up next Friday morning, which is private-bill day. I know there are several other committees that desire to introduce private bills, and the longer this bill is considered on private-bill days the longer the other committees will be crowded out. Now, if the House will give us to-morrow, or another hour to-day, or a night session, I will be willing that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] shall take all the time he wants.

The SPEAKER. If this bill is debated until the close of the morning hour it will go over until next Friday morning; or if the House shall meet to-morrow this bill would come up to-morrow morning, Saturday being private-bill day as well as Friday.

Mr. F. THOMAS. Before I utter another word I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if I am to understand that I have the floor as of right or as a concession from him. If I have it as a right I know how to act; if I hold it as a concession from him I also know how to act.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I want the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] to understand that it would be as gratifying to me as it would be to himself to have him occupy the floor as a right. But if the House will not allow us any more time than the morning hour of to-day and the morning hour of next Friday, I must ask a vote in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] that this bill must be disposed of before any other committee can be called for private bills.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Will the gentleman from Maryland state how much time he wants?

Mr. F. THOMAS. I cannot tell that.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I will ask the Speaker how long before the morning hour will expire.

The SPEAKER. It will expire in four minutes.

Mr. SPALDING. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me to submit a motion to determine the question whether we are to have a session of the House to-morrow or not? I desire to move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I cannot yield for that purpose now. Now, I want to deal in all fairness with the gentleman from Maryland and to accord to him not only his rights but even more. I want to be as courteous and indulgent as it is possible for me to be. But I am aware that if he now takes the floor without restriction, then within one or two minutes the morning hour will expire, and he will have all the next morning hour, and then the bill will go over another week. And in that way this bill may be postponed four or five weeks. Now, if we are to derive any sanitary advantages from this bill, the sooner it is passed, if it is to be passed, the better. If the gentleman will say that he will yield after having occupied thirty minutes, I will yield to him with pleasure.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I hope the gentleman will excuse me if I say that to me one of the most unpleasant scenes that ever occurs on the floor of the House is the position that some gentlemen claim, to have the right to occupy the floor and say to other members who shall speak, how long they shall speak, and when.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I have this much to say in reply to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. F. THOMAS,] that it does seem to me that he is determined that I shall not be even courteous, though I am willing to yield to him all the time of the next morning hour that I can. But I cannot consent to give him more than thirty minutes. I want to know if the House desires to discuss this bill for three or four weeks, thereby preventing the reporting of any other private measure for that time. I will call the previous question unless the gentleman will consent to occupy but half an hour during the next morning hour.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I cannot promise anything like that.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I then call the previous question.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 25, noes 75.

So the previous question was not seconded.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and this bill goes over until the morning hour of the next private-bill day.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed Senate joint resolution No. 87, to provide for the payment of bounty to certain Indian regiments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 74) providing for the acceptance of a collection of plants tendered to the United States by Frederick Peck; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 116) respecting quarantine and health laws.

HUBERT H. BOOLEY.

Mr. HOLMES asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files the petition and papers of Hubert H. Booley.

SECURITY OF GOVERNMENT FUNDS.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I ask consent to report from the Committee on Banking and Currency a bill to secure and regulate the safe-keeping of public money intrusted to disbursing officers of the United States, that the same may be printed and recommitted, with leave to the committee to report at any time.

Mr. LE BLOND. I will have no objection to this bill being reported, ordered to be printed, and recommitted. But I must object to its being reported back at any time.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] will look at the bill, and see what it is, I think he will see that it is important that it should be passed at once. It is for the better security of public moneys intrusted to the disbursing officers of the Government.

Mr. LE BLOND. So far as that is concerned the Government has already the power to secure that. They should never have permitted these public funds to be intrusted to certain banks.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I would ask that this bill be considered now. It is a most important bill; and I call for its reading so that the House may see how important it is.

The bill was read through.

Mr. LE BLOND. I withdraw my objection, if the gentleman from Massachusetts wants to put the bill upon its passage.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I hope the House will pass the bill; but I do not feel at liberty to take up the time of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SCHENCK. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. McRUER. I object.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move, then, that the bill be ordered to be printed and recommitted; and that the committee have leave to report at any time.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back House bill No. 602, to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines, who served in the late war for the Union. The bill, as it now stands, is a substitute for the original bill reported by the committee. It has been printed, and in possession of the House since yesterday. I report back the substitute with a single amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I am anxious to get through with the internal revenue bill this week, and we will be able to do so if we can have to-day and to-morrow. I ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he expects to take up much time.

Mr. SCHENCK. It is what I was going to explain, but in this House gentlemen anticipate and ask for explanation when it is about to be made. I was going on to say we report back the substitute with a single amendment, and propose to ask the action of the House on the substitute as slightly amended, and finally upon the bill as amended.

This is an act eminently of generous justice to the soldiers. I know there are a great many gentlemen in this House on both sides, but particularly on the other side, to which the soldier has always looked for justice and favor, who desire to be heard at length in favor of the bill; but as I and all the committee reporting the bill are willing to forego any discussion of the subject, and desire to make no speeches whatever, but to put the bill on its passage, I trust there will be general consent on both sides to that treatment. If gentlemen have prepared speeches on this subject, I suggest those speeches be yet made on some Saturday afternoon, as they will, I have no doubt, have influence on the minds of Senators when the bill goes to that body.

The substitute was read, as follows:

That instead of any grant of land or other bounty, there shall be allowed and paid to each and every soldier, sailor, and marine who faithfully served as such in the Army, Navy, or Marine corps of the United States, and who has been, or who may hereafter be, honorably discharged from such service, the sum of eight and one third dollars per month, or at the rate of $100 per year, as hereinafter provided, for all the time during which such soldier, sailor, or marine actually so served, between the 12th day of April, 1861, and the 19th day of April, 1865. And in the case of any such soldier, sailor, or marine, discharged from the service on account of wounds received in battle, or while engaged in the line of his duty, the said allowance of bounty shall be computed and paid up to the end of the term of service for which his enlistment was made. And in case of the death of any such soldier, sailor, or marine, while in the service, or in case of his death after discharge and before the end of his term of enlistment, if discharged on account of being wounded, as before provided, the allowance and payment shall be made to his widow, if she has not been remarried, or if there be no widow, then to the minor child or children of the deceased who may be under sixteen years of age.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in computing and ascertaining the bounty to be paid to any soldier, sailor, or marine, or his proper representatives, under the provisions of this act, there shall be deducted therefrom any and all bounties already paid, or payable under existing laws, by the United States, or by any State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, so that in no case shall the aggregate amount of bounty allowed and paid from all sources exceed eight and one third dollars for each month of actual faithful service, or at the rate of $100 per year. And in the case of any sailor or marine to whom prize money has been paid, or is payable, the amount of such prize money shall also be deducted, and only such amount of bounty paid as shall, together with such prize money and any other bounty paid or payable by the United States, or by any State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, amount in the aggregate to the sum allowed by this act.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That no bounty, under the provisions of this act, shall be paid to or on account of any soldier, sailor, or marine who served as a substitute in either the Army or Navy, or who was a captured prisoner of war at the time of his enlistment, nor to any one who was discharged on his own application or request, unless such discharge was obtained with a view to reenlistment, or to accept promotion in the military or naval service of the United States, or to be transferred from one branch of the military service to another, and who did actually enlist or accept promotion or was so transferred. And no bounty shall be paid to any soldier, sailor, or marine, discharged on the application or at the request of parents, guardians, or other persons, or on the ground of minority.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That every petition or application for bounty made under the provisions of this act shall disclose and state specifically under oath, and under the pains and penalties of perjury, what amount of bounty, either from the United States or from any other source, and what amount of prize money, if any, has been paid or is payable to the soldier, sailor, or marine, by whom or by whose representatives the claim is made.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That whenever application shall be made by any claimant, through any attorney or agent, the post office address of the claimant shall be furnished, giving the name of the county and State in which it is situated, and the amount of commission or fee which the attorney or agent is to receive for his service in the settlement of the claim, which charges in no case shall exceed the sum of five dollars; and every such application shall be accompanied by the written affidavit of the attorney or agent, that he has not charged, nor agreed for, and will not accept, more than such sum of five dollars for his services in the case. The Paymaster General, or proper accounting officer of the Treasury, upon ascertaining the amount due, shall cause to be transmitted to such claimant the full amount thereof, less the fee to be paid to the attorney or agent, which fee shall be paid to the attorney or agent in person, or transmitted to such address as the attorney may direct.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That any attorney or agent who shall receive from any claimant a sum greater than five dollars for the prosecution of any claim under the provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine not to exceed the sum of $1,000, or imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or both, as the court or jury may adjudge, and shall be forever thereafter excluded from prosecuting claims of any nature whatever against the Government of the United States.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That in case the payments shall be made in the form of a check, order, or draft upon any paymaster, national bank, or Government depository in or near the district wherein the claimant may reside, it shall be necessary for the claimant to establish by the affidavits of two credible witnesses that he is the identical person named therein; but in no case shall such checks, orders, or drafts be made negotiable until after such identification.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any soldier, sailor, or marine to transfer, assign, barter, or sell his discharge, final statement, descriptive list, or other papers, for the purpose of transferring, assigning, bartering, or selling any interest in any bounty under the provisions of this act; and all such transfers, assignments, barters, or sales heretofore made are hereby declared null and void as to any rights intended so to be conveyed by any such soldier, sailor, or marine.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That no adjustment or payment of any claim of any soldier, sailor, or marine, or of his proper representatives, under the provisions of this act, shall be made unless the application be filed within two years from the passage of the act; and the settlement of accounts of deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines shall be made in the same manner as now provided by law.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move the following amendment: page 3, line six, after the word "request," insert "prior to the 9th day of April, 1865." If members will look at the printed substitute they will find we exclude from bounty those who were discharged on their own application or request. The committee, on reconsideration, thought it ought to apply only to those who did not wait until the war was over. It will relieve from exclusion those who did not make the request to be discharged from the Army until after Lee's surrender.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I would like to offer the following amendment: strike out from the sixth line of section two all after the word "States" down to the word "association" in the seventh line. In the ninth line strike out the word "all" and insert "such."

Mr. WARD. I ask the gentleman to let me move an amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. In the first place amendment is not in order under the rules, as there is an amendment pending to an amendment; and in the second place the Committee on Military Affairs, with great unanimity and cordiality, agreed to report and have it acted on as it now stands. I demand the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 24.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. WARD. Is there to be no means of discussing a bill which involves an expenditure of $200,000,000?

The SPEAKER. Not when the previous question is seconded.

The amendment of the committee to the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. JULIAN. If the substitute be voted down, then the vote will come up on the original bill.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, the original bill was read in extenso.

The question recurred on agreeing to the substitute for the original bill.

Mr. WARD. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to permit me to have an amendment reported which I desire to offer.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have no power over this subject; it is with the House; but I am perfectly willing the gentleman shall have his amendment read, if that is the point he desires.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, is this offering of amendments going to be allowed generally?

The SPEAKER. It is not. It can only be amended, after the third reading, by a motion to recommit with instructions.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I would inquire whether the previous question is still operating.

The SPEAKER. It is; and no debate is in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object to debate, unless it can be made general.

Mr. BLAINE. I object also.

Mr. JULIAN. I demand the yeas and nays on agreeing to the substitute.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 93, noes 36.

Mr. ROGERS. I demand the yeas and nays. The SPEAKER. They have already been refused.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I demand tellers. Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Messrs. WILSON, of Iowa, and SCHENCK. The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 84, noes 33.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed; and being engrossed, it was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. SCHENCK. I believe the previous question has exhausted itself on the third reading. I now demand it on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WARD. Is it in order now to move to recommit with instructions?

The SPEAKER. It will be if the previous question is not seconded.

Mr. BANKS. I hope the chairman of the committee will state the operation of this bill as compared with the original bill.

Mr. THAYER. I object to discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, who reported the bill, has a right to occupy one hour.

Mr. SCHENCK. If the House will second the previous question I will go on and explain it. First, let us have the previous question seconded.

The previous question was seconded—ayes 75, noes 34—and the main question ordered.

Mr. ANCONA. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. I propose very briefly, as many gentlemen request it, to state the differences between the substitute and the original bill. First, as to the original bill I shall say nothing, because it has been printed and on the tables of gentlemen for some time past.

The first change made in the bill is in the first section, at the close, where in limiting the direction to be given to this bounty to minor children, there is added the further clause that it shall be given only to those who are under sixteen years of age. The idea of the committee was that in this country when children arrive at the age of sixteen they are able to obtain some kind of employment sufficient at least to sustain themselves. It is in conformity with the pension law, limiting the extension of the bounty to those minors only who are under sixteen years of age. It saves many millions of dollars, though that was not the exclusive object.

In the second section the committee concluded, in their revision, to insert a provision that there should be taken into the computation, in order to determine whether a man had a sufficient bounty, whatever he had received from local authorities or from local voluntary associations got up by subscription for the purpose of relieving from the draft by putting men in the Army. This some gentlemen have seriously objected to. The reasons which prevailed with the committee were these: in the first place, there is a fairness about it. A man comes forward and asks to be put, as far as possible, upon the same footing as others—that is, to get under the provisions of this bill $300 at least for his services in the Army, in addition to his pay and other allowances. The Government which he approaches in this way says to him, through its officials, "How much have you received from various sources?" If he has already received over $300, which is what we propose to give, it is not a case of peculiar hardship. In dispensing this bounty we should not add anything to the sum already paid where a man has received $300. All we promise is to make up the bounty to $300.

Now, that will fall not hardly on those who entered the Army late in the war and got all the local bounties, for it so happens that those who got the local bounties got also the bounty from the Government and are outside of the provisions of this bill. The truth is that the bill only applies to and affords help to those who enlisted in 1861 or in the early part of 1862 throughout the whole Union. Those who went into the Army in 1861 or early in 1862 got little or no bounty of any kind, and got from the General Government only either $100 or nothing at all. Now, to those who received nothing this bill gives $300, and to those who received $100 enough to make up the amount to $300. Later on in the war large local bounties were paid, while at the same time the Government of the United States was paying bounties. Such men are cut off from the operation of this bill.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir; I cannot. With all due deference to the gentleman from New York, I detest these interruptions. At the end of my remarks I will answer any questions that gentlemen desire.

There is another effect of this amendment. If, by the legislation of Congress, you equalize bounties to the extent of taking care that every man shall at least have $300 out of the United States Treasury, if he has not obtained it from any other source, and then turn these soldiers over to their States you will find them in every State going to their Legislatures and saying, "See here what the Congress of the United States has done; now we want you to equalize the bounties at home; and as some men have been paid $1,000 and $1,500 and others only $300 or $400, we want you to follow the example of the Government of the United States and equalize the bounties in the State as Congress has done throughout the United States;" and it will be very hard to resist that appeal when made under such a precedent; so that by taking the whole thing into account, we relieve the States from calls that may be made hereafter to equalize bounties in the States as Congress has equalized them throughout the United States.

Leaving the reference to that change, I come to the next alteration made. We cut off from the benefits of the bill substitutes. We have taken the ground that where a man was hired at some enormous cost to go into the Army for another, he went into the Army taking all the chances and has no proper claim on the Government for equalization of bounty with other soldiers who were either compelled to go or went voluntarily.

There have been such cases as this before the Committee on Military Affairs: a man being drafted, a relative, without hope of reward, volunteered to go in his place; in another instance, a returned volunteer, seeing the tears of the family of a poor man who was drafted and was unable to pay for a substitute, volunteered his services and took that man's place. But these are exceptional cases. We can only legislate for classes, and leave such men to the reward of an approving conscience and the kindness of their neighbors, who, instead of petitioning Congress, had better subscribe the $300 for these men.

We have made another alteration. It was provided in the original bill that if a man had been discharged on his own application or request he should be cut out from the advantages of the bounty. In the revision we have inserted the words, "prior to the 9th day of April, 1865," which was the date of Lee's surrender, so as not to cut off from the bounty those men who thought the fighting was all over, and finding it very easy on application to the War Department at that time to get out of the Army, naturally did so. We save the bounty to every man who was discharged even at his own request and upon his own application, provided he did not make that application before the fighting was done.

We have inserted another provision, to which I suppose no gentleman will object, requiring that the attorney or agent, where one is engaged in the case, shall, in filing the papers of the applicant, file along with them his own statement verified by oath, under the pains and penalties of perjury, that he has not charged and will not accept any more than the fees which the law allows. This is to prevent collusion between the attorney and the claimant, when the claimant finds the attorney unwilling to act under the law without such secret understanding.

I believe that I have stated now all the material differences between the substitute and the original bill; and I am now ready to answer the question of my friend from New York, [Mr. HOTCHKISS.]

Mr. HOTCHKISS. The inquiry which I desire to make is this: in many cases in my own district, in 1861, the State paid to the soldier seventy-five dollars bounty, and the local authorities $225 bounty. In such cases, what is the soldier going to get under this bill? If the soldier in such a case gets nothing, are we to be subjected to taxation to pay bounties to soldiers raised in communities that gave no bounty?

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I think I have anticipated an answer to that inquiry. I have said that the bill declares plainly—

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Let me ask further—

Mr. SCHENCK. I trust the gentleman will wait a moment till I have answered the question he has already put.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I am charged and primed, and I cannot stop till I have discharged the whole load. [Laughter.] I want to know whether, where we in our State have paid more than three hundred dollars bounty, the soldiers of the State of New York will be obliged to pay back anything.

Mr. SCHENCK. I suppose the gentleman is now through, unless he is a revolver. [Laughter.]

Now, as to the first branch of the inquiry—the first barrel of the gentleman's gun—the bill itself answers it. The bill is framed entirely with this view: that every man who presents himself asking for this bounty of $300 shall be interrogated as to how much he has received from various sources as bounty for serving his country in addition to his regular pay. If he has received $300 or more, he is not to receive anything under this bill. While we do not propose to give any one more than $300, nor to pay any one less than that amount, our object is that every man who has not received $300 shall be raised up to that standard.

These remarks will serve to answer to a great extent the second branch of the inquiry; and my echo to the report of that second barrel of the gun, showing that it is only a blank cartridge, will be this—

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Perhaps I owed the gentleman an apology; but there is nothing in his Army bill against the use of revolvers. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman asks whether those who have received more than $300 bounty will be compelled to disgorge. The reply to that is found also in the bill. There is nothing in the bill about paying back. There is nothing in the bill that can be construed to require that those who have received the bounties either of the General Government or of a State government or of any volunteer association or municipal organization of any kind shall pay back any part of that which they have received. I think the gentleman is now fully answered.

Mr. WARD. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether this bill does not provide for giving bounty to colored soldiers.

Mr. SCHENCK. Unquestionably it does. We hold that a soldier, a sailor, or a marine is one who belongs to the organized forces of the United States, wearing its uniform. We have therefore said nothing about color, because the bill covers them all.

Mr. WARD. So I understand. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman another question. I ask him whether there is not now in force a law by virtue of which the loyal owner of a colored man who volunteered in the United States service is entitled to recover $300 for such colored man; and such being the law, the master being entitled to $300, and the colored man being entitled, under this bill, to a bounty, whether the colored soldier and his master together will not receive more than the white soldier. And I ask him whether he will not accept an amendment providing for the repeal of the law which provides for a commission to take proof of the fact of the slaves of loyal masters having entered the service, so that compensation may be made. I apprehend that before we give any additional bounty that law should be repealed.

Mr. SCHENCK. Well, that certainly is a revolver! [Laughter.] I do not know whether I can recollect the whole of the question. But to begin at the close of the gentleman's inquiries, I will say that I cannot accept any amendment, because the bill at its present stage cannot be amended, as I understand the rules, without a ~~re~~commitment for that purpose, unless by unanimous consent.

In the next place, I will say that the bill does not provide for paying anything to the former owner of a man who was a slave and was enlisted as a soldier of the United States. The bill is specific in its terms, and provides only for payment to the soldier, sailor, or marine himself.

Mr. WARD. That I understand.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman asks, further, whether if the loyal owner has already received his bounty of $100—

Mr. WARD. Of $300.

Mr. SCHENCK. Or of $300, whether he will not get something under this bill. I answer, no; he cannot possibly do so. There might possibly be a construction put upon the law by which the owner having got $300 the negro could get $300 more, on the ground that the negro, who had rendered the service, had received nothing. That is a question of construction. But being a question of construction for the courts, under the law as it now stands no subsequent legislation upon this subject can affect the contract, though we might so amend the bill, which I am unwilling to do, as to provide that where the master has received bounty, that bounty shall be deducted and paid to the negro. I do not suppose that the gentleman would desire that.

Mr. WARD. No, sir.

Mr. SCHENCK. But the gentleman says he would like to have passed an act repealing the law with reference to compensation of loyal owners of slaves enlisted, so that there shall be no further action under it.

Mr. WARD. Exactly.

Mr. SCHENCK. So would I; and I am perfectly willing to unite with the gentleman in securing the passage of a bill of that kind as a separate enactment; for I think there would be no difficulty in passing it; or I believe it very probable that members of the other branch of Congress, upon suggestion being made to them, would be willing to procure the insertion of such a provision in this bill. But, at the present time, the amendment of this bill cannot be effected without the delay of recommitment, with the necessity of going over this whole subject again. I prefer, therefore, that this bill shall now be passed, trusting that some repealing act may hereafter be adopted as a separate measure, or that a provision for the purpose may be incorporated in this bill as an amendment when the bill shall be considered by the Senate.

Mr. WARD. Will the gentleman allow me a moment to state the amendments which I intended to offer to this bill?

Mr. SCHENCK. I have no objection to permitting the gentleman to have his amendments read—or, at least, he might hand them to the reporters, and let them be incorporated in his remarks, so that he may be enabled to show what was the object he had in view, in which, so far as concerns the last point, I entirely concur.

Mr. WARD. The first amendment which I desired to offer was an amendment giving to the widowed mother who was entirely dependent upon a soldier now deceased the bounty to which he would have been entitled. I desired a further amendment striking out that portion of the bill which charges the soldier with the local bounties. In addition to that, I desired to offer the further amendment which I have indicated. That is all that I wished to say.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] now yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BANKS. I understand from the statement of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, from which this bill is reported, that as the bill now stands, the House having adopted a substitute, any State that has paid bounties up to the amount of $300 will get nothing, under this bill, while it will be compelled to insist in paying the bounties to the soldiers of those States that have not granted any bounties. I ask the gentleman whether I am correct in my understanding of the effect of this bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. I apprehend that there are very few States in which bounties have not been given at all, either by the State or by the counties or other municipal organizations or by voluntary associations, and where the aggregate local bounty has not exceeded $300. Where that is the case, of course no benefit will be obtained under this bill.

Mr. BANKS. I understand it to be this: that the State which has paid bounties to the amount of $300 gets nothing, and is compelled at the same time to pay, or assist in paying, the bounties of States which have not paid them.

Mr. SCHENCK. Those States have the satisfaction of having treated their soldiers well.

Mr. BANKS. It is a surprise to the House that we should be called upon to vote for or against appropriations of this kind.

Mr. SCHENCK. I call for the vote.

Mr. ANCONA demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. BANKS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The House was divided; and there were—aye 68, noes 42.

Mr. BANKS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 77, nays 62, not voting 44; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baxter, Blaine, Boyer, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Darling, Dawson, Deffrees, Delano, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Garfield, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McKee, McRuer, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, Newell, Niblack, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Price, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Stilwell, Strouse, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Wright—62.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Broomall, Coffroth, Culver, Dodge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Hulburt, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Latham, McIndoe, Mercur, Miller, Moulton, Noell, Orth, Pomeroy, Raymond, Shanklin, Smith, Starr, Taber, Taylor, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Windom, and Winfield—44.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

During the vote,

Mr. CULLOM stated that Mr. ORTH, was confined to his room by illness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question then recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ANCONA demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 139, nays 2, not voting 42; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Bidwell, Blaine, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deffrees, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Grider, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McCulloch, McKee, McRuer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Newell, Niblack, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Price, Radford, Samuel J. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Rousseau, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Stilwell, Strouse, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Wright—139.

NAYS—Messrs. Nicholson and Trimble—2.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Coffroth, Culver, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grinnell, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Hulburt, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Latham, McIndoe, Mercur, Miller, Moulton, Noell, Orth, Pomeroy, Raymond, Shanklin, Smith, Starr, Taber, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Windom, and Winfield—42.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. CULLOM said: The gentleman from Indiana, Mr. ORTH, is ill. If he was here he would vote for the bill.

Mr. RADFORD. My colleague, Mr. WINFIELD, is confined to his room by sickness. If here he would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. STILWELL. My colleague, Mr. HILL, is confined to his house by sickness. If here he would vote for the bill.

Mr. LE BLOND. My colleague, Mr. FINCK, is absent. If here he would vote in favor of this bill.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. My colleague, Mr. COFFROTH, is absent. If here he would vote for the bill.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. The gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. WINDOM, is absent. If present he would vote "ay."

Mr. ANCONA. My colleague, Mr. JOHNSON, is still detained by sickness. If here he would vote for the bill.

Mr. COBB. My colleague, Mr. MCINDOE, is absent by leave of the House. If here he would vote "ay."

Mr. CULLOM. My colleague, Mr. MOUTON, is absent. If he was here he would vote for the bill.

The vote having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ANCONA asked and obtained leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. DENISON, for two weeks from to-day.

APPRAISEMENT OF LAND IN OHIO.

On motion of Mr. LE BLOND, the report of the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to the appraisal of certain land in Ohio belonging to William Sawyer and others, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER announced that Mr. GLOSSBRENNER was excused from service on the conference committee on House bill No. 85, in relation to the donation of lands in the southern States for homesteads, and Mr. ANCONA was appointed in his place.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire the House should be long enough in session to finish the tax bill this week.

The motion was not agreed to.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending paragraph was as follows:

Tin cans used for preserved meats, fish, shell-fish, fruits, vegetables, jams, and jellies.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to strike out all after the word "for" and insert the words "for packing purposes only;" so that it will read, "tin cans used for packing purposes only." We have already included "packing-boxes made of wood." Now, packing-boxes are used for a variety of articles, and the amendment simply proposes to embrace all tin vessels made for packing purposes only. It may be said that crackers and other articles are sent out in tin cans. That is very true. There is no reason why they should not be, nor any reason why the box containing them, if made of tin, should be taxed while a wooden box in which they might be sent is exempt from tax.

Mr. MORRILL. These tin cans for preserved meats, fish, fruits, &c., are exempted because we have placed a stamp duty on those articles. The gentleman proposes to exclude from taxation by his amendment a great variety of articles—not only boxes and cans for crackers, but for such articles as blacking, soda powders, ground mustard, sardines, pill-boxes, and other articles too numerous to mention.

Mr. KELLEY. I suggest a modification.

Mr. MORRILL. My modification is to reject the amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the word "and" and to insert "spices and medicines."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to add the following as a new paragraph:

Sugar, molasses, or sirup made from beets, sugar-maple, or from sorghum or imphee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. With the leave of the committee I will here offer such amendments as have been agreed upon by the Committee of Ways and Means, so that members may understand what are to be offered by the committee and what not, and where they are to come in.

Mr. THAYER. I have no objection if it is understood that we have not passed this paragraph.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after line eighty-five "muriatic, nitric, and acetic acid."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In line eighty-six, after the word "alum," insert "aluminous cake, patent alum, and sulphate of aluminum."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. After line ninety-two insert "nitrate of lead."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after line eighty-nine "borax and boracic acid."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. After line ninety-four insert "sulphur."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move also to insert "litharge and orange mineral."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after line one hundred and two "wine made of rhubarb, currants, and berries."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In line one hundred and one, after "white lead," insert "red lead."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In line ninety-six, after "soda," insert "sal-soda;" also, after the word "pot" insert "pearl ashes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent to make a verbal amendment to an amendment on page 76, offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. THAYER,] which is as follows:

In any port of entry within which is embraced more than two collection districts the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to place all the bonded warehouses in said port under the charge of one collector of internal revenue to be by him designated; and the collector so designated shall have entire charge and control of all matters connected with said bonded warehouses and the property stored therein.

I move to insert after the word "shall" the words "under the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. THAYER. I accept that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to insert after line ninety "calcined magnesia, carbonate of magnesia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. In line ninety-five I move to add "alumino-silicate of soda."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. In line one hundred and nine, after the word "distillation," I move to insert "lubricating oil made of crude petroleum not exceeding in specific gravity thirty-six degrees Baume's hydrometer."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that the clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means may make up this free list, when it is completed, in alphabetical order. It was reported in rather a confused state, and it will be still more so when we get through the bill.

No objection being made it was so ordered.

Mr. VAN AERNAM. I move to amend by inserting before the line commencing "hemp and jute," &c., the words "machines driven by horse power and used exclusively for cutting fire-wood, stave and shingle bolts." That is a small machine, running a cross-cut saw, and usually driven by one horse. I hope the chairman of the committee will raise no objection to my amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN AERNAM] will include "hand-saws" in his amendment. There are a great many wood-sawyers who go about with hand-saws, and they are now taxed as well as others.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late for the gentleman from New York to accept anything, as his amendment has already been adopted.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I move to insert "hand-saws."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I move to insert after "white lead" the words "sulphuric, muriatic, nitric, acetic, and other acids, when used in the chemical factory producing them for the production of other chemicals or salts."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I raise the point of order that this whole list is not open to miscellaneous amendment; only so much of it as has been read for amendment by the Clerk. Unanimous consent was given to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] to offer certain amendments to this free list which had been agreed upon by that committee; then we were to go back to where the Clerk had left off reading.

Mr. THAYER. I withdraw my amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Hemp and jute prepared for textile or felting purposes; yarn and warp for weaving, braiding, or manufacturing purposes exclusively.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting after what has just been read, "wooden-ware and brooms made from corn-brush or palm-leaf." In regard to this amendment I wish to say that a part of it was adopted yesterday and afterwards reconsidered through a misunderstanding of the vote by many around me. Now, all I wish to say is this: that I hope the Committee of Ways and Means will allow my amendment to be adopted, and when this bill and amendments get into the House, if the other amendments which have been adopted shall be voted down, then the vote can be taken on this amendment. These very machines which yesterday we voted to exempt are patented machines, the prices of which the manufacturers control and upon which the manufacturers make a great profit. But the articles which I move to exempt are articles which any person with $300 can manufacture, but upon which the profits are very small. Take the article of brooms, for instance, manufactured from broom-corn. Under the present law there is no revenue derived from these articles, and therefore nothing will be lost by placing them upon the free list. By the present law the products of every manufacturer to the extent of $1,000 are exempted. Take the State of Illinois, for instance, where probably more broom-corn is raised than in any other State. The custom adopted there is for the manufacturer to have his brooms manufactured in different towns. But if you impose a tax each farmer will employ a man to tie up his brooms, and then sell them to the manufacturer, up to the amount of $1,000.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] said the other day that he would make light so cheap that the poorest dwelling should not be destitute of it. Now, it seems to me that if there are any articles, particularly in these cholera times, that ought to be free from taxation, they are these articles of brooms and wooden-ware, so that there should be no excuse for not keeping dwellings clean and neat. I hope, therefore, the Committee of Ways and Means will not object to this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I certainly am not able to appreciate the argument that because we have already exempted something that should not have been exempted therefore we should go on still further in the same direction. I am ready to concede that these articles are as much entitled to exemption as some that have already been exempted by the action of the Committee of the Whole. But they are not more entitled to exemption than many other articles which might be mentioned, and upon which a tax is to be laid, such as mop-handles, washing-machines, wringing-machines, &c. Now, if we cannot halt somewhere in this work of exemption, as I have had occasion often to remark before, we shall soon not have any articles left upon which to lay any tax.

Now, sir, I propose a sort of compromise with my friend from Massachusetts, and that is this: I will move to strike out the words "wooden-ware," allowing brooms to remain in. I conceive that there is more merit in his suggestion as to brooms than with reference to the wooden-ware. If the gentleman will compromise on this I shall be satisfied. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "wooden-ware."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Vermont says that we might with the same propriety exempt washing-machines. Now, sir, the difference is simply this: a washing-machine or a wringing-machine is covered by a patent, and it is an article which every family is not obliged to have; but wooden-ware includes articles which every family must use.

Mr. MORRILL. Then there is a greater necessity for the reduction on those machines, because they are articles everybody cannot afford to use, and in their absence a greater amount of the sweat of the brow must be expended.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Well, Mr. Chairman, if the principle which the gentleman advocates is that we are to reduce the price of an article where it is controlled by a monopoly and where it will make no difference if a tax be imposed, that is a different principle from what I understood him to have adopted. I understand him now to maintain that while tin cans which are used to preserve meats and fruits are exempted, articles of wooden-ware, which every family must use, should not be exempted.

On agreeing to the amendment to the amendment, there were—ayes 28, noes 35; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rule, ordered tellers, and appointed Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, and Mr. MORRILL.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes thirty-seven, noes not counted.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alum; aniline and anilino colors; bleaching powders; bichromate of potash; blue vitriol; copperas.

Mr. THAYER. I move to amend by adding the following:

Sulphuric, muriatic, nitric, acetic, and other acids when used in the chemical factory producing them for the production of other chemicals or salts.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Muriatic, nitric, and acetic acid have already been included.

Mr. MORRILL. All of those articles that ought to be in are already inserted.

Mr. THAYER. I withdraw the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Oxide of zinc; nitrate of lead; paints; painters' and paper stainers' colors; putty; sulphur; salaratus; sal soda; soda ash; caustic soda; litharge, and orange mineral; crude soda; aluminate of soda; bicarbonate of soda; and silicate of soda; yeast powders.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend by adding "mead sold in bottles or from fountains, and beer made from fruit." I have understood, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee of Ways and Means had intended to insert mead in the free list.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe that the proposition was considered, but the whole committee voted against it.

Mr. O'NEILL. Then I think the committee must have voted under a misapprehension. The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sulphate of barytes, salts of tin, verdigris, white lead, red lead, whitening; wine made of rhubarb, currants, and berries, not otherwise provided for; vegetable, animal, and fish oils of all descriptions, not otherwise provided for, including red oil or oleic acid; and admixtures of the same with paraffine oil, not exceeding in specific gravity thirty-six degrees Baume's hydrometer; paraffine, paraffine oil, not exceeding in specific gravity thirty-six degrees Baume's hydrometer, the product of a residuum of distillation; lubricating oil made from crude petroleum, coal, or schale, not exceeding in specific gravity thirty-six degrees Baume's hydrometer; crude petroleum, and crude oil the product of the first and single distillation of coal, shale, asphaltum, peat, or other bituminous substances; tar and crude turpentine.

Mr. DARLING. I move to amend by striking out in the last line of this paragraph the words "tar and." My reason for offering the amendment is simply this: feathers are taxed; tar should also be taxed, as the two articles have heretofore been extensively used in connection with each other; and they should not now be separated in the matter of taxation.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that amendment. He does not know, perhaps, that if he should induce this Congress to impose a tax on tar he might involve us in another civil war. I find that those excellent friends of our sagacious Secretary of the Treasury who raise tar, the people of North Carolina, hold that all the laws made by the present Congress and all that have been made since 1861, are unjust, unconstitutional, and invalid, and that it is the duty of all raisers of tar to resist them at the point of the bayonet. In proof of this I ask the Clerk to read a short extract from the North Carolinian, of Wilson county, North Carolina, of the date of May 11. It is the editorial comment upon the notice that the North Carolinians are bound to pay taxes to this Government.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE UNITED STATES DIRECT TAX COMMISSIONERS
FOR THE STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,
WILSON, N. C., April 28, 1866.

Notice is hereby given to the owners of real estate in the county of Wilson that the direct tax laid upon all lands in the United States by an act of Congress of August 5, 1861, is now being collected in the State of North Carolina, in pursuance of an act approved June 7, 1862, and of an amendment of said act approved February 6, 1863, and of a further amendment of said act approved March 3, 1865; and notice is further given that for the reception of said tax upon the real estate of Wilson county, our office in Wilson, in said county, will be open on the 28th day of April, instant, and for sixty days following at Wilson Hotel.

As the laws of the United States exempt from taxation homesteads to the value of $500, when the owners actually resided thereon at the date of the fixing of the tax, such owners and occupants are notified to appear at our office, in Wilson, during said sixty days, and show such fact.

JOHN R. FRENCH,
HIRAM POTTER, Jr.,
E. H. SEARS,

United States Direct Tax Commissioners for North Carolina.

"The above is simply the coolest piece of impudence we have ever seen. There can exist no longer a doubt in the minds of the southern people that they are expected to submit to taxation without representation.

"We are pledged to a support of the Constitution of the United States, and Heaven forbid that we should ever countenance or counsel disobedience to properly constituted authority, but a sense of duty compels us to declare that the southern people should never submit to this direct tax but at the point of the bayonet.

"The tax collector may or may not have the proper credentials, but in no case would we pay this tax until we had ascertained that it was right and proper to do so.

"The Government of the United States forced us into a war from which we emerged crippled in resources and prostrated financially. Men wearing the garb of United States soldiers outraged and murdered our defenseless women and children, stole our property, destroyed our very means of subsistence, under pretense of prosecuting war for the restoration of the Union and the supremacy of the Constitution, and now that Government, 'the best the world ever saw,' calls on us at the South to pay a direct tax on real estate, by an act of Congress of August 5, 1861, and in pursuance of an act approved June 7, 1862, and of an amendment of said act approved February 6, 1863, and of a further amendment of said act approved March 3, 1865.

"The southern States have been unrepresented in the Congress of the United States since March 1861, and this tax is therefore illegally, unjustly, and unconstitutionally levied."

Pending the reading,

Mr. HALE said: I rise to a question of order. It is that the article now being read by the Clerk has no pertinency to the subject under consideration by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, for the reason that it is read as a part of the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. STEVENS. Do I understand my colleague to say that this is a part of the speech of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. KELLEY. It is from the pen of one of the friends of the Secretary of the Treasury; those friends who agree with him that the laws are unconstitutional which are passed without the consent of southern members.

The reading of the paper was then concluded.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word; and for the purpose of vindicating the propriety of my motion I send up an article which I request the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"The New York Mercantile Journal is published weekly by the New York Mercantile Journal Company, No. 2 Franklin square; entrance 350 Pearl street, opposite Frankfort street.

Terms: One copy one year, $3; a club of five, $15. Including an extra copy free to the person get-

Mr. SLOAN. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is out of order in his remarks, because they are not relevant.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LE BLOND. I rise for the purpose of opposing the amendment to the amendment. I wish to inquire of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, as we have the benefit of the views of the Secretary of the Treasury in an indirect way, whether he will inform the House what position the Secretary of War takes on this or any other proposition.

Mr. KELLEY. I spoke of the Secretary of the Treasury; and he let the people know that he is less partial to tinkers than to cosiers.

Mr. MORRILL. I make the point that all this discussion is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HALE's amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The amendment was then rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Illuminating gas manufactured by educational institutions for their own use exclusively; pig-iron; blooms, slabs, and loops; railroad iron, and railroad iron rolled; anvils; iron castings for bridges.

Mr. MORRILL. I move in line one hundred and fifteen, after "pig-iron," to insert "muck bar."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEAMAN. I move to strike out "castings for," so that it will read, "iron bridges." I understand that the chairman of the committee agrees to that amendment.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move an amendment to the amendment, so as to make it read, "iron bridges and castings for iron bridges."

Mr. BEAMAN. I have no objection to that, and will accept it as a modification of my own amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEAMAN. I move to insert "iron roofs for depots."

Mr. MORRILL. I think we have indulged the gentleman from Michigan as far as we ought to on the subject of iron. Some parts of these roofs are composed of wrought iron, some of sheet iron, and some of cast iron. We cannot afford now to go so far as the gentleman desires.

Mr. HOGAN. I move to strike out "depots," so that we may have the iron roofs of all houses exempted from tax.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was also rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Malleable iron castings, unfinished; spindles and castings of all descriptions made for locks and machinery upon which duties are to be assessed and paid.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out lines one hundred and twenty-one and one hundred and twenty-two, as follows:

Spindles and castings of all description, made for locks and machinery, upon which duties are to be assessed and paid.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Spindles and castings of all descriptions made specially for locks, or for machinery, and not sold or used for any other purpose, and upon which a tax is assessed and paid upon the articles of which the casting is a part.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In lines one hundred and twenty-four and one hundred and twenty-five after the words, "horseshoe nails" I move to insert the words "iron axles;" so that the clause will read, "railroad chairs; railroad, boat, and ship spikes; ax polls; shoes for horses, mules, and oxen; rivets, horseshoe nails, iron-axes, nuts, washers, and bolts; vises, iron chains, and anchors; when such articles are made of wrought iron."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. In line one hundred and twenty-six I move to strike out the word "wrought," so that the clause will read, "vises, iron chains, and anchors; when such articles are made of iron which has previously paid the tax or duty assessed thereon."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BEAMAN. I move to amend, in line one hundred and twenty-three, by inserting after the word "chairs" the words "and fish-plates;" so that it will read, "railroad chairs and fish-plates," &c.

Mr. GARFIELD. What are fish-plates?

Mr. BEAMAN. They are merely substitutes for railroad chairs.

Mr. DARLING. Oh! no. Fish-plates are not substitutes for chairs at all.

Mr. PRICE. A fish-plate is a bar made to hold the ends of the rails together, instead of the chair.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the words "railroad chairs," and I do it for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means whether or not this last sentence of the paragraph, "when such articles are made of wrought iron, which has previously paid the tax or duty assessed thereon," does not exempt only those articles made of wrought iron? Railroad chairs are made both of cast and wrought iron; and yet this clause would only exempt those chairs made of wrought iron.

Mr. MORRILL. The clause exempts all that was intended to be exempted. Chairs made of pig iron are not taxed, while chairs made of wrought iron are taxed in the form of iron.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I offer the following as an additional amendment:

Pickles, when sold in gallons, and not contained in glass packages.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Stoves, composed in part of cast iron and in part of sheet iron or of soapstone or freestone, with or without cast iron or sheet iron: Provided, That the cast and sheet iron shall have paid the tax or duty previously assessed thereon: Provided further, That the exemptions aforesaid shall, in all cases, be confined exclusively to said articles in the state and condition specified in the foregoing enumeration, and shall not extend to articles in any other form, nor to manufactures from said articles.

Mr. HALE. In lines one hundred and thirty and one hundred and thirty-one I move to strike out the words "or of soapstone or freestone, with or without cast iron or sheet iron." I would ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means why these articles should be put upon the free list, and whether the reason is that the only place in the country where they are made is in his district. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. I believe that most of them are made at a point directly south of the gentleman's own district, in Troy, New York. They are made of castings that have paid a tax, or of sheet iron that has paid a tax. This is one of the cases of the duplication of taxes. In relation to soapstone and freestone, I will say that I have had no applications from my district, so far as I remember, either before or since this bill was reported, in relation to that subject. All the applications have been from other parts of the country.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I renew it for the purpose merely of asking a question. This paragraph is drawn with some adroitness. When it was first read I supposed that it exempted all stoves; but I find now that it reads "stoves composed in part of cast iron and in part of sheet iron, or of soapstone or freestone, with or without cast iron or sheet iron." Now, if a stove is composed entirely of iron it is not embraced in this paragraph.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will see that upon page 91 "stoves, and hollow-ware in all conditions, whether rough, tinned, or enameled, and castings of iron not otherwise provided for," are taxed three dollars per ton. Now, the iron that helps to make up these soapstone and freestone stoves has already been taxed. This, therefore, would be a duplication of taxes. That is the reason for the exemption.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But soapstone and freestone pay no tax at all. Freestone is free, and also soapstone. It seems to me, therefore, that stoves made of soap-stone or freestone should not be exempt, unless you also exempt stoves made of iron.

The gentleman says this is a very small matter. I do not so understand it. I understand that these stone stoves are entering very largely into use in certain sections of the country, and that the manufacturers of them are engaged in extending the business, by the means of agents and advertising, all over the country, and that they are enabled now to supply the demand for them. And yet those who use iron stoves are to be required to pay a tax of three per cent. ad valorem, while those who use freestone or soapstone stoves are not required to pay any tax. It does seem to me that if the one is exempted the other should be also. This is a provision in favor of an interest that is growing rapidly, and in favor of that section of country where, at present, these stoves are made exclusively.

Mr. GARFIELD. It would be perfectly proper for the gentleman to propose to put these articles under the three per cent. tax. The only reason why they were exempted was that the articles were so cheap as to make the amount of revenue to be derived from them trifling.

Mr. MORRILL. Let me say to the gentleman from Iowa that he is mistaken in supposing that this is a very large interest. In the first place, it is very difficult to find stone that will stand fire. I know that very little stone can be found in the whole country that will stand fire without cracking and crumbling. The tax upon stoves of any sort amounts to a very small sum. The tax of three dollars per ton is fifteen cents per hundred pounds, and a common cooking stove weighs about two hundred and fifty pounds, and sells for perhaps twenty-five to thirty dollars.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to insert the following as an additional paragraph:

Articles manufactured in institutions for the blind, and institutions for the deaf and dumb, which are sold to aid in their support or the support of the pupils.

I presume there will be no objection to that amendment. It simply exempts the few articles made in institutions for the blind and the deaf and dumb, and sold for the benefit of those institutions.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to that. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I move to add at the end of line one hundred and thirty-seven the following proviso:

And provided further, That every person, firm, or corporation who shall have made any contract of purchase prior to the passage of this act without provision for the deduction of duties reduced or abolished by law enacted subsequent thereto, upon articles to be delivered under such contract, is hereby authorized and empowered to deduct from the price thereof so much money as will be equivalent to the duty from which said articles have been so subsequently exempted.

I think a provision of this kind comes in appropriately after the list of exemptions. It is analogous to a section in the original act declaring that the vendor might add to the amount of his contract the amount of the tax subsequently imposed by act of Congress. This amendment gives the vendee the right to deduct the amount from the contract made with him at the time when it was supposed the articles were not exempt. If the original section was proper, this is equally so.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the committee will not adopt such a provision as this, but will allow these parties to take their remedy under the law. Suppose a party under this provision should say that he would not allow the deduction, they would then have to go to law about it. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out after the words, "and in case said tax or duty is not paid on or before the last day of each and every month the collector shall," the words "add ten per cent. thereto, and make distraint therefor as provided in other cases under the law to which this is an amendment;" and insert in lieu thereof the words "proceed to collect the same in the manner provided by law; and so much of the eighty-third section of the act to which this is an amendment, is hereby repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That every person, firm, company, or corporation engaged in the manufacture or preparation for sale, by roasting, grinding, or other process, of coffee or spices, or of adulterated coffee or spices, or of any article or compound intended for use in the adulteration, or for use as a substitute for coffee or spices, or who shall put up for sale, either by himself or others, in packages with his or their own name or trade-mark, any manufactured or prepared article or compound, as aforesaid, shall be regarded and taxed as a manufacturer, and shall give a bond in such amount as the collector of the district may deem proper, conditioned that he or they will not sell or dispose of any article so manufactured or prepared by him or them without having paid the tax or affixed the proper stamps as required by law, and will comply with all the provisions of law relating thereto.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out this section, as it has already been provided for in another part of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That apothecaries who manufacture, for their own dispensation and sales to consumers and to physicians, the medicines compounded according to the United States or other national pharmacopoeias, or of which the full and proper formula is published in any of the dispensatories now or hitherto in common use among physicians or apothecaries, or in any pharmaceutical journal now issued by or in incorporated college of pharmacy, shall not be regarded as manufacturers under this act. But apothecaries and all other persons who manufacture for the dispensing and sales of others, or who make and advertise any article, medicinal or otherwise, simple or compound, with any special proprietary claim to merit, or to special advantage in use or effect, whether such claim be based on the properties, qualities, price, or any other distinctive or distinguishing characteristic, whether real or pretended, of the articles so made and advertised, whether such article be or be not made according to the authorities above cited in this proviso, the maker or makers thereof shall be regarded as manufacturers under this act. And apothecaries shall not be regarded as retail dealers in liquors in consequence of selling or of dispensing, upon physicians' prescriptions, the wines and spirits official in the United States and other national pharmacopoeias, either simple or compounded, in quantities not exceeding half a pint of either at any one time, nor exceeding in aggregate cost value the sum of $300 per annum.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out the words "proviso, the maker or makers thereof," after the words "the authorities above cited in this," and insert in lieu thereof the word "section."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That no duty or stamp shall be required for any un compounded medicinal drug or chemical, nor any medicine compounded according to the United States or other national pharmacopoeia, or of which the full and proper formula is published in any of the dispensatories now or hitherto in common use among physicians or apothecaries, or in any pharmaceutical journal now issued by any incorporated college of pharmacy, and not sold or offered for sale, or advertised under any other name, form, or guise than that under which they may be severally denominated and laid down in said pharmacopoeias, dispensatories, or journals as aforesaid; nor medicines sold to or for the use of any person which may be mixed and compounded for said person according to the written receipt or prescription of any physician or surgeon. But nothing in this section shall be construed to exempt from stamp duty any and all medicinal articles, whether simple or compounded by any rule, authority, or formula, published or unpublished, which are put up in a style or manner similar to that of patent or proprietary medicines in general, and advertised in newspapers or by public handbills for popular sale and use, as having any special proprietary claim to merit, or to any peculiar advantage in mode or preparation, quality, quantity, price, use, or effect, whether such claim be real or pretended.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out the words "of pharmacy and" after the words "issued by any incorporated college" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "when."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In the sentence, "but nothing in this section shall be construed to exempt from stamp duty any and all medicinal articles," &c., I move to strike out the words "and all" before the words "medicinal articles."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Near the close of the section I move to strike out the words "quantity, price," after the word "quality."

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That in case any goods or commodities for or in respect whereof any tax or duty is or shall be imposed, or any materials, utensils, or vessels proper or intended to be made use of for or in the making of such goods or commodities shall be removed, or shall be deposited or concealed in any place, with intent to defraud the United States of such duty or any part thereof, all such goods and commodities, and all such materials, utensils, and vessels respectively shall be forfeited, and in every such case, and in every case where any goods or commodities shall be forfeited under this act or any other act of Congress relating to the internal revenue, all and singular the casks, vessels, cases, or other packages whatsoever, containing or which shall have contained such goods or commodities, respectively, and every vessel, boat, cart, carriage, or other conveyance whatsoever, and all horses or other animals, and all things used in the removal, or for the deposit or concealment thereof, respectively, shall be forfeited; and every person who shall remove, deposit, or conceal, or be concerned in removing, depositing, or concealing any goods or commodities for or in respect whereof any duty or tax is or shall be imposed, with intent to defraud the United States of such duty or tax or any part thereof, shall be liable to a fine or penalty of not exceeding $500.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to insert the words "or tax" after the words "with intent to defraud the United States of such duty."

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That the judge of any circuit or district court of the United States, or any commissioner thereof, may issue a search warrant, authorizing any internal revenue officer to search any premises, if such officer shall make oath in writing that he has reason to believe, and does believe, that a fraud upon the revenue has been or is being committed upon or by the use of said premises.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall sell, give, or purchase or receive any box, barrel, bag, or any vessel, package, wrapper, cover, or envelope of any kind, which has been stamped, branded, or marked in any way, so as to show that the contents or intended contents thereof have been duly inspected, or that the tax or duty thereon has been paid, or that any provision of the internal revenue laws has been complied with, whether such stamping, branding, or marking may have been a duly authorized act or may be false and counterfeit, or otherwise without authority of law, said box, barrel, bag, vessel, package, wrapper, cover, or envelope still bearing uncancelled or uneraser said stamp, brand, or mark, and being empty, or containing anything else than contents which were therein when said articles had been so lawfully stamped, branded, or marked by an officer of the revenue, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars; and all such boxes, barrels, bags, vessels, packages, wrappers, covers, and envelopes, with their contents, belonging to such offender, shall be forfeited to the United States. And any person who shall make, manufacture, or produce any box, barrel, bag, vessel, package, wrapper, cover, or envelope, stamped, branded, or marked, as above described, or shall stamp, brand, or mark the same, as hereinbefore recited, shall, upon conviction thereof, be liable to a penalty as before provided in this section. And any person who shall violate the foregoing provisions of this section, with intent to defraud the revenue, or to defraud any person, shall, upon conviction thereof, be liable to a fine of not less than $1,000, and imprisonment for not less than six months; and all such articles, with their contents, belonging to said offender, shall be forfeited to the United States; and one half of said penalty, forfeiture, and fine, to be ascertained by judgment of court, shall go to the informer.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend at the commencement of the section by striking out "any person who" and insert "in case any person" before the words "shall sell, give, or purchase," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Before the words "shall be liable to a penalty of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars," I move to insert the words "or falsely or fraudulently stamped, branded, or marked, such person."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the words "belonging to such offender," and "belonging to said offenders," before the words "shall be forfeited to the United States."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the words "and one half of said penalty, forfeiture, and fine, to be ascertained by judgment of court, shall go to the informer," at the end of the section.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out "and" and insert "or" before the words "and imprisonment for not less than six months;" and also to insert after the words "six months" the words "or both such fine and imprisonment."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. UPSON. I move to insert after the last amendment the words "at the discretion of the court."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to strike out the words "uncanceled or un erased" after the words "or envelope still bearing." I suppose this provision was meant to prevent the sale of packages the contents of which have been sold. Now, a package before the contents have been sold may have a canceled or erased stamp upon it; or after the contents have been sold the stamp may be on it canceled. The fact that the stamp is canceled or uncanceled will not affect the question of the sale of the contents; because, as I take it, the cancellation is while the package is full, and without being emptied it passes from the custody of the revenue officers. The cancellation must be made while the package is full. Hence, if we allow the package to be sold with a canceled stamp upon it, it can be filled again, and there is no means on the part of the officers to detect it.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think there is weight in the suggestion of the gentleman. I move, as an amendment to the amendment, to strike out from the paragraph the words: "still bearing uncanceled or un erased said stamp, brand, or mark, and."

Mr. LYNCH. I think that striking out the words "uncanceled or un erased" would answer every purpose.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That where any whisky, oil, tobacco, or other articles of manufacture or produce, requiring brands, stamps, or marks of whatever kind to be placed thereon, shall be sold upon distraint, forfeiture, or other process provided by law, the same not having been branded, stamped, or marked as required by law, the officer selling the same shall, upon sale thereof, fix or cause to be affixed the brands, stamps, or marks so required, and deduct the expense thereof from the proceeds of such sale.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That manual labor schools and colleges shall not be required to pay a manufacturer's or special tax while the proceeds of the labor of such institutions are applied exclusively to the support and maintenance of such institutions.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That no suit shall be brought against any collector of customs or of internal revenue for any duty, license, special tax, or tax paid, unless such suit is brought within six months from the passage of this act, or within six months after the payment of such duty or tax.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. And be it further enacted, That section fifteen of the act of March 3, 1865, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864," be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that in any port of the United States in which there is more than one collector of internal revenue, the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate one of said collectors to have charge of all matters relating to the exportation of articles subject to tax under the laws to provide internal revenue; and at such ports as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem it necessary there shall be an officer appointed by him to superintend all matters of exportation and drawback, under the direction of the collector, whose compensation therefor shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but shall not exceed, in any case, an annual rate of $2,000, excepting at New York, where the compensation shall be an annual rate of $3,000; and such compensation, together with the office expenses of such superintendence, shall not be included in the maximum of the aggregate expenses of the office of said collector. And all the books, papers, and documents in the bureau of drawback in the respective ports, relating to the drawback of duties paid under the internal revenue laws, shall be delivered to said collector of internal revenue; and any collector of internal revenue, or superintendent of exports and drawbacks, shall have authority to administer such oaths and certify to such papers as may be necessary under any rules and regulations that may be prescribed under the authority herein conferred.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] made the other day a motion in regard to the warehouses at a port of entry where there is more than one collector, I told him that I thought the bill already contained a provision of that kind. I find, however, that this section does not quite cover what is desired, and I wish to propose an amendment to include what is wanted in this section, as this relates to the same subject. I move to amend, therefore, by inserting at the beginning of the eleventh line the words "all bonded warehouses and;" so that the clause will read:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall designate one of said collectors to have charge of all bonded warehouses and all matters relating to the exportation of articles subject to tax under the laws to provide internal revenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting before the word "exportation," in the same line, the words "storage or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by striking out the word "shall," in the same line, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "may."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. This provision as now amended covers all the ground of the former amendment. I hope, therefore, that by unanimous consent the previous amendment will be stricken out.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that will be done.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that change will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out from lines twenty to twenty-three the following:

And such compensation, together with the office expenses of such superintendence, shall not be included in the maximum of the aggregate expenses of the office of said collector.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That every person, firm, or corporation, who distills or manufactures spirits, or who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash, for distillation or the production of spirit, shall be deemed a distiller, under this act. And the making or keeping by any person of grain, mash, wash, or beer, prepared or fit for distillation, together with the possession by such person of a still or other apparatus capable of use for distilling, upon the same premises, shall be deemed and taken as presumptive evidence that such person is a distiller within the meaning of this act.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 24. And be it further enacted, That every person, firm, or corporation, who rectifies, purifies, or refines distilled spirits or wines by any process, or who, by mixing distilled spirits or wine with any materials, manufactures any spurious, imitation, or compound liquors for sale, under the name of whisky, brandy, gin, rum, wine, "spirits," or "wine bitters," or any other name, shall be regarded as a rectifier under this act.

The hour of half past four o'clock having arrived, the Speaker resumed the chair, and the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 294) entitled "An act for the relief of John Gordon," in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (H. R. No. 134) relative to appointments in the Military Academy of the United States, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

TAX BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 25. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall carry on any business of distilling or rectifying without having paid the special tax as required by law, he or they shall, for every such offense, besides being liable to the payment of the tax upon the spirits distilled, also be liable to a penalty of one hundred per cent. in addition thereto, to be assessed by the assessor, and shall each be subject, upon conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; and upon sufficient information of such offense, the collector, deputy collector, or other authorized officer of the district in which the same shall be alleged to have been committed, may enter upon the premises of the person or persons by whom such offense is alleged to have been committed, using such force as may be necessary for that purpose, and may seize all spirits or spirituous liquors, and all materials for making or preparing the same respectively, and all vessels and utensils containing the same, and all stills or other apparatus capable of being used for distilling, and may hold the same. And the said collector, upon the assessment aforesaid having been made, and upon the conviction of the said person or persons, shall sell such stills, apparatus, and other materials, vessels, utensils, and liquors so seized, and shall apply the proceeds in satisfaction of such assessment, and of the fine, if imposed; and the said assessment and fine, or such part thereof as shall not have been so satisfied, shall, until paid, be a lien in favor of the United States, from and after the time when such assessment is made, or such fine laid, upon all property and rights to property of the person by whom such offense shall have been committed, and upon his interest in the lands and premises in which it shall have been committed, and upon all his property therein, and such lien may be enforced by levy and distraint by said collector, or by suit in rem; and when the personal property found shall not be sufficient to satisfy the same, such lands and premises may be seized, and upon the decree of the court the interest aforesaid sold, and proceeds applied in payment thereof. And the person or persons furnishing the information upon which such seizure shall have been made, or the officer who made such seizure, if having acted upon information obtained by himself, shall, upon the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, receive such part and in such proportions of a moiety of the said one hundred per cent. assessed penalty, and of a moiety of the said fine when recovered, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I ask that, by unanimous consent, the committee go back to the eighteenth section and amend it by striking out in the fourth line the words "which has been."

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 26. And be it further enacted, That every person, firm, or corporation, required to pay a special tax as a distiller, or as a rectifier, shall make and sign a notice in writing to the assessor of the district, stating the name or style under which, the name or names and the place or places of residence of the person or persons by whom, and the place where, the business is to be carried on, and its nature. If the business is that of a distiller, the notice shall also state the kind of stills or boilers to be used, the capacity of each, the name or names of the owner or owners of the land or premises on which the distillery is situated, and the nature of the title by which such premises will be held and occupied. Any person or persons who shall make a false or fraudulent representation in such notice shall be liable to a fine of $300, to be recovered with costs of suit.

No amendment being offered,
The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. And be it further enacted, That no person or persons shall make or distill spirits until such person, with two or more good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the collector within whose district the business is to be carried on, has entered, jointly and severally, into a bond to the United States in such sum as shall be hereinafter specified; and such bond shall be accompanied with satisfactory affidavits of the sufficiency of the sureties executing the same, and such approval shall be indorsed on said bond by the collector, and the affidavits be attached thereto; and a new bond may be required by the collector whenever either of the sureties shall die, become insolvent, or remove permanently out of the collection district; in any of which cases the party to the bond shall be conditioned that, in case any still or stills, or other implements to be used for distilling, shall be erected or used by him, his agent, or superintendent, he will, before using, or causing, or permitting the same to be used, report in writing to said assessor the capacity thereof, and give information from time to time of any change in the location, form, capacity, ownership, agency, or superintendence, which all or either of the said still or stills or other implements may undergo; that he will, from day to day, enter or cause to be entered, in a book to be kept for that purpose, the number of pounds or gallons of materials used, and the number of gallons of spirits that may be distilled by said still or stills, or other implements; that said book shall be open at all hours during the day to the inspection of any assessor, assistant assessor, collector, deputy collector, revenue agent, or inspector, who may make any memorandums or transcripts therefrom; that he will render to said assessor or assistant assessor, on the 1st, 11th, and 21st days of each and every month, or within five days thereafter, an exact account in writing of the number of pounds or gallons of material used for the purpose of producing spirits, the number of gallons of spirits distilled, and the number of gallons placed in warehouse; and that he will not sell, or permit to be sold, or removed for consumption or sale, any spirits distilled until the same shall have been gauged, inspected, proved, and deposited in the bonded warehouse, and the quantity thereof duly entered upon his books as aforesaid, with the name and place of business of the party to whom such spirits may be sold; that he will render all accounts and pay all taxes and penalties which he may become liable to render or pay under the laws of the United States; and that such party will faithfully comply with the requirements of law as well with regard to such accounts, duties, and penalties, as to all other matters and things whatsoever. And such bond shall be executed before the said collector of internal revenue, and shall be filed in his office, and a copy of the same, duly certified by him, shall be forthwith transmitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington; and the bond aforesaid shall remain in force until all the provisions and conditions of said bond have been fully complied with: Provided, That such bond shall not be required for a greater amount than double the amount of tax on the spirits that can be distilled by such still or stills or other implements during a period of fifteen days.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move in line thirteen to strike out "party to."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask whether the Clerk has read this evening any other sections than this one.

The CHAIRMAN. He has read those immediately preceding it.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I wish to ask the committee to postpone the consideration of the section relating to the manufacture of high-wines until we have a fuller committee. It is an interest in which the West is largely concerned. I see that the committee is slim this evening. I ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to allow these sections to be reserved.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have a verbal amendment to move. I move in line sixteen to strike out "him" and insert "such distiller."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means whether he will consent to my proposition.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman will see that what we have passed is merely formal.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I understand there is a provision in the bill prohibiting the manufacture of alcohol on the same premises where whisky is manufactured. I only want to have the opportunity to make objection or to move amendments hereafter.

Mr. THAYER. I move in line thirteen to strike out "any" and insert "all."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move to add the following at the end of line fifty-seven:

Provided, however, That any licensed distiller having also obtained a license to rectify spirits, shall and may complete the process of distilling spirits into alcohol by continuous distillation in the same manufactory in which the spirits are distilled, and in that case shall not be required to run the spirits into cisterns and to put the same in casks, barrels, or packages, or pay the duty or tax thereon until the completion of the process of distillation, when the provisions of law shall be applicable to the product, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to postpone his amendment until we come to section twenty-nine.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I shall be glad to accommodate the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is no accommodation to me; I only want to save time.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. The section is passed, I understand, which prohibits the manufacture of alcohol in the same establishment as whisky. It recognizes two systems, one distinct from the other.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. No such section has yet been adopted.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I ask that my amendment shall be considered now.

Mr. Chairman, I have looked over this bill with considerable care. I look on it as important that the interests which are connected with the protection of spirits, and which is expected to be a source of great revenue to the Government, should be allowed to be carried on with as little inconvenience as possible. It is not a matter of so much moment to me how high the tax upon spirits shall be as that no unnecessary inconvenience or obstruction shall be imposed upon the manufacture.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman will allow me to interrupt him. I will call his attention to the twenty-ninth section, where the subject is especially provided, and ask him to wait until we come to that section. It contains the restriction to which he objects.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask consent to go back and amend section twenty-five by striking out the following, at the close thereof:

And the person or persons furnishing the information upon which such seizure shall have been made, or the officer who made such seizure, if having acted upon information obtained by himself, shall, upon the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, receive such part and in such proportions of a moiety of the said one hundred per cent. assessed penalty, and of a moiety of the said fine when recovered, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend section twenty-eight by inserting in line thirty, after the word "therefrom," the following:

Any one of whom having made the inspection during the current day shall leave with the said distiller a certificate to that effect, which shall, upon being sworn, prevent the necessity of any further inspection during that day.

The clause will then read:

That said book shall be open at all hours during the day to the inspection of any assessor, assistant assessor, collector, deputy collector, revenue agent, or inspector, who may make any memorandums or transcripts therefrom, any one of whom having made the inspection during the current day shall leave with the said distiller a certificate to that effect, which shall, upon being sworn, prevent the necessity of any further inspection during that day.

My object in offering this amendment is to save trouble and vexation to the distillers from frequent, daily inspections. While I deem it necessary that a strict watch should be kept over distillers, I am anxious to see them relieved from too frequent visits of the revenue officers. Some check should certainly be put upon officials who for vexatious purposes may insist upon making these inspections.

Mr. MORRILL. If the amendment of the gentleman prevails, the effect of it would be to afford ample security for the commission of any amount of fraud after the inspector shall have once visited the establishment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 28. And be it further enacted, That upon every notice duly made, as herein provided, for making, distilling, rectifying, or compounding spirits or spirituous liquors, and upon payment of the special tax imposed, and the due execution of the bond with sureties as required by law, such person or persons may use such utensils, machinery, and apparatus in the place or premises specified in the notice, and in such place or premises only: Provided, That any collector may refuse to receive such notice or approve of such bond, when, in his judgment, the location of the distillery is such as would enable the distiller to defraud the Government in respect to the revenue; and in case of such refusal, the distiller may appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose decision in the matter shall be final.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 29. And be it further enacted, That no person, firm, or corporation, shall use any still, boiler, or other vessel, for the purpose of distilling in any building or on any premises where beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other fermented liquors are manufactured; and no still, boiler, or other vessel, shall be used as aforesaid in any building or on any premises where beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other fermented liquors, vinegar, ether, or alcohol are manufactured or produced, or where sugars or sirups are refined, or where liquors of any description are retailed, or any other business is carried on; and every person who shall use such still, boiler, or other vessel, for the purpose of distilling, as aforesaid, in any building or other premises where the above specified articles are manufactured, produced, or other business is carried on, or who shall procure the same to be done, shall forfeit such stills, boilers, or other vessels so used, and all the spirits distilled, and pay a fine of $1,000, and be imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than one year, in the discretion of the court; and any person, firm, or corporation, who shall manufacture any still, boiler, or other vessel, to be used for the purpose of distilling, shall, before the same is removed from the place of manufacture, notify the collector where such still, boiler, or other vessel is to be used or sent, of the intention to send or set up the same, and of its capacity; and the time when the same is to be sent or set up; and no such still, boiler, or other vessel, shall be set up without the permit in writing of the collector for that purpose; and any person, firm, or corporation, who shall set up such still, boiler, or other vessel, without first obtaining a permit from the collector of the district in which such still, boiler, or other vessel is intended to be used, or who shall fail to give such notice, shall pay in either case the sum of $500, and shall forfeit the distilling apparatus thus manufactured or set up in violation of law: Provided, That saleratus may be made or manufactured in any building or on any premises where spirits are distilled: Provided further, That any boiler used in generating steam or heating water to be used in such distillery may be located in any other building or on any other premises to be connected with such still or boiling tubs, by suitable pipes or other apparatus, or the steam from such boiler in the distillery may be conveyed to other premises to be used for manufacturing or other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] that if he desires it I will move to pass over this section till to-morrow, when we can have a full House.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I imagine that there can be no dispute upon the question which is raised by this amendment which I have proposed. There can be no objection to continuing the business as it has been done for years. The distillers all manufacture this high proof article, and we ask only that they may be allowed to continue the distillation of alcohol by a continuous process of distillation in the same room and by the same machinery. I only want to strike out the word "alcohol" in the section.

Mr. MORRILL. I will move to pass it over.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I was in hopes it would be accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection it will be passed over.

Mr. INGERSOLL objected, but afterwards withdrew his objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand there is only one point desired to be passed over, and that is simply the word "alcohol."

Mr. McKUER. I move to amend by inserting after the word "on," in section twenty-nine, the words "or in any dwelling house;" so that it will read, "or where liquors of any description are retailed, or any other business is carried on, or in any dwelling-house." It seems to me it would be a wise provision that no distillation should be carried on in any dwelling-house.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I move to strike out in line four the words "beer, lager beer, ale, porter."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Include the words "or other fermented liquors."

Mr. COBB. I will include that.
Mr. STEVENS. I thought this was passed over till to-morrow.

Mr. COBB. Only the word "alcohol."
Mr. INGERSOLL. I beg pardon, the whole subject.

No objection being made, the section was accordingly passed over.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 30. And be it further enacted, That every rectifier or wholesale dealer in distilled spirits shall enter daily, in a book or books kept for the purpose, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, the number of proof gallons of spirits purchased or received, of whom purchased or received, and the number of proof gallons sold or delivered; and every rectifier or wholesale dealer who shall neglect or refuse to keep such record shall forfeit all spirits in his possession, together with the apparatus, tools, and implements used, and be subject to a fine of $500, or an imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than a year, in the discretion of the court. And every rectifier shall mark with a stencil-plate on each package of five gallons or more of distilled or rectified spirits sold by him his name and place of business.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 31. And be it further enacted, That the owner or owners of any distillery shall provide, at his or their own expense, a warehouse suitable for the storage of bonded spirits, of their own manufacture only; or he or they may provide a secure room, in a suitable building, to be used as such warehouse; and no door, window, or other opening shall be made or permitted in the walls thereof, leading to any other room or building used for any other purpose, or into the distillery; and after a bond has been given, as herein-after provided, such warehouse or room, when approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on report of the district collector, is hereby declared to be a bonded warehouse of the United States, and shall be used only for the storing of spirits manufactured by the owner, agent, or superintendent thereof, and shall be under the custody of the inspector as herein-after provided; and shall be kept locked up by the proper officer in charge, at all times, except when he shall be present; and the tax on the spirits stored in such warehouse shall be paid before removal from such warehouse, unless removed in pursuance of law. And the owner or owners of such warehouse shall execute a general bond to the United States with two or more sureties, to be approved by the collector; and such bond shall be for not less than the amount of duties on the spirits to be covered thereby, and in such form, and containing such conditions, as shall be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and may be changed from time to time by the collector in regard to the amount and sureties thereof.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the word "thereof" in the fifteenth line and insert the words "of such distillery."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to insert in line six, after the word "warehouse," the words "but no dwelling-house shall be used for any such purpose;" so that it will read:

Or he or they may provide a secure room, in a suitable building, to be used as such warehouse; but no dwelling-house shall be used for any such purpose.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I see no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. I suggest to the chairman of the committee whether, after the words "stencil-plate," on page 153, line fourteen, the words "or otherwise" should not be added.

The CHAIRMAN. That section has been passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 32. And be it further enacted, That general bonded warehouses, for the storage of spirits or other merchandise allowed by law to be placed in bond to secure the payment of the internal revenue tax thereon, or the exportation thereof, may be established under such rules and regulations and upon the execution of such bonds as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and shall be in the immediate custody of store-keepers who shall be appointed for that purpose, whose compensation shall be paid monthly to the collector of the district by the owners or proprietors of such warehouse, and shall not exceed the rates which may be allowed to store-keepers of bonded warehouses established under the laws and regulations relating to customs.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 33. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury an inspector for each and every distillery established according to law, who shall take an oath faithfully to perform his duties; and who shall take an account of all the meal and vegetable productions or other substances to be used for the purpose of producing spirits, when put into the mash-tub or otherwise used; and shall inspect, gauge, and prove all the spirits distilled, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and shall take charge of the bonded warehouse established for the distillery in conformity to law; and such warehouse shall be in the joint custody of such inspector and the owner thereof, his agent or superintendent; and when any spirits shall be placed in such warehouse, an entry therefor, in such form as shall be prescribed by regulations, shall immediately be made, and signed by the owner of said spirits, and shall have indorsed thereon a certificate of the inspector that the spirits mentioned have been duly inspected and received in said warehouse, and such entry and certificate shall be filed with the collector of the district; and whenever such warehouse is within the limits of any port of entry where there shall be a superintendent of exports, a duplicate of such entry and certificate shall forthwith be filed in the office of such superintendent; and said inspector shall also certify to the returns to be made by the distiller to the assessor; and shall not engage in any other business while holding the office of inspector; and he shall be paid such compensation as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem just and reasonable, at a rate not exceeding $1,500 per annum, for the time during which he is engaged; and the amount of compensation thus paid for inspection shall be assessed by the assessor upon the distiller, and returned to the collector monthly; and in addition to the above compensation, such inspectors shall receive one eighth of one cent for each and every proof gallon of distilled spirits inspected by him and removed to the bonded warehouse, which shall be paid by the distiller or owner of the spirits; but no compensation shall be allowed to such inspector for more than one inspection of such spirits. And in case the duties of such inspector shall be greater at any time than he can perform, upon the joint application of the inspector and owner of such distillery, the collector may appoint an assistant inspector; and upon the refusal of the distiller to join in such application, the collector shall decide as to such necessity; and such assistant inspector shall qualify in the same manner and be subject to the same penalties as the inspector, and he shall be paid in the same manner as the inspector, at a rate not exceeding the sum of three dollars per day while so employed; and in case of disagreement as to the necessity of retaining the services of such assistant, between the owner of the distillery and the inspector, the collector shall decide as to such necessity, and his decision in the matter shall be final. And in case of absence by sickness, or from any other cause, of such inspector or assistant, the collector may appoint an officer to take temporary charge of such distillery and warehouse, who shall receive the same rate of pay as said inspector or assistant for the time he may be so employed, such amount to be deducted from the pay of the absent officer: Provided, That the owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery who shall use, cause, or permit to be used, any materials for the purpose of producing spirits, or shall distill and remove any spirits in the absence of the acting inspector or assistant, without permission granted by the collector of the district, shall forfeit and pay double the amount of taxes on the spirits so produced, distilled, or removed, and in addition thereto a fine of $1,000, to be recovered in the manner provided for other penalties imposed by this act: Provided further, That any person who shall ship, transport, or remove any spirituous or fermented liquors or wines, under any other than the proper name or brand known to the trade as designating the kind and quality of the contents of the casks or packages containing the same, or who shall cause the same to be done, shall forfeit the same, and shall, on conviction thereof, be subject to and pay a fine of $500.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I move to strike out this whole section down to the last proviso. If the object is to break up the small distilleries throughout the country the adoption of this section will effectually accomplish it. It is utterly impossible that one out of a thousand of them can survive the operation of this provision. In addition to a provision for the appointment of a general inspector in each collection district, which has been regarded as sufficient heretofore, in addition to requiring every little distiller to build at his own expense a bonded warehouse and a receiving cistern, this section requires him to pay a salary for an inspector for his own distillery. After going to all the expense of building a warehouse and cistern he is to pay a salary "not exceeding $1,500" and one eighth of a cent a gallon for the glorious privilege of distilling spirits, and paying two dollars a gallon on every gallon that he distills and sells. Now every man will see at once that this will crush all the small distillers, and the consequence will be the creation of a few large distillers, thus giving them the monopoly. You will compel all the small distillers to sacrifice their still-houses and all the machinery they have on hand.

Sir, the national bank system was no more successful in crushing out all the State banks than the large distilleries will be in crushing out all the smaller ones under this law. There are thousands of these small distilleries that cannot afford to pay a salary to an inspector besides building a bonded warehouse and a receiving cistern at their own expense. This inspector is allowed to engage in no other business while he holds that office, but is to receive a salary at the expense of the distiller. Many of these distilleries run only six months, some of them only three months in the year, and during all this time there is to be a Government overseer or agent to see that each one of them measures his grain, to watch him when he is stirring his mash-tub, and inspect all his movements; and the balance of the year he is to do nothing but receive his salary. Where is the necessity of this when the bill provides that there shall be a general inspector for every collection district?

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a word in reference to this section. The object of the section, as of nearly every other section relating to this subject, is to prevent fraud, if possible, in the manufacture of distilled spirits. While in some degree the objections made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] may be true, that the tendency of this section will be to concentrate the business of distilling in the larger distilleries, yet that is not the absolute effect of this section. As to the pay of these inspectors, it is only at the rate of $1,500 per year for the time during which they may be engaged.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. But you do not allow them to be engaged in any other business while they hold the office of inspector.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly while the inspector is performing this duty, while the distillery is in operation, he is expected to be just where the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] says he will be, examining the meal-bags, the mash-tubs, and the corn-room, to ascertain the amount of material used. Of course, if the distillery is running only two months a year, the inspector will be paid for only the two months. The object of this section is to have every distillery supplied with an inspector, so that the Government may know at all times what amount of spirits are distilled in that distillery, and what amount of materials goes into it and is used in the distillery.

Mr. GRIDER. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. GRIDER. The distilleries in the West, especially in Kentucky, operate during the three winter months. It is proposed to have an inspector at each of these distilleries, and during the rest of the year he will have nothing to do.

Mr. ALLISON. That is very true. These inspectors are only employed, as I said before, during the time when the distilleries are in operation, and they are only paid for that time.

Mr. GRIDER. Then the result will be that if, in any particular county, there should be fifty distilleries you will have fifty inspectors on duty for three months of the year, and for the rest of the year you will have no use for them.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; they are not paid except while employed.

Mr. STEVENS. I am not exactly satisfied with this section, and therefore I move to amend by striking out the words "such compensation as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem just and reasonable, at a rate not exceeding $1,500 per annum," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two cents per gallon for all spirits inspected." It is to be observed that by this section the cost of inspecting spirits is to be assessed upon the distiller. The inspector is to be paid $1,500 a year; and the small distiller who distills only one hundred or two hundred gallons is bound to pay it, while the distiller who distills his one thousand or five thousand a day pays no more, except so far as the one eighth of one per cent. may go. Each one must pay a salary of $1,500 a year to an inspector. Each distillery is to have an inspector placed in it, whether the amount distilled is five hundred or five thousand gallons a day. Now, I am willing to have the inspector paid according to the amount of whisky he may inspect, but not that he shall be paid the same for inspecting for a small distillery as for one that distills three or four times as much. Therefore I think that this section of the bill should be carefully examined, as I cannot see that there is any justice in it.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to oppose the amendment of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] I think there is very great objection to it. If it should be adopted I am afraid that we might lose the services of our friend from Illinois, [Mr. INGERSOLL.] He might wish to be appointed the inspector for some large distillery in his district, where they make, as I understand, from two thousand to six thousand gallons a day, for his compensation would then be from forty to one hundred dollars a day. I am afraid that might lead him or some other gentleman to withdraw from his place in this House for the purpose of getting such a position.

Mr. STEVENS. I will modify my amendment so that it shall be to strike out the words "such compensation as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem just and reasonable, at a rate," and inserting "two cents a gallon for all distilled spirits inspected, but." That portion will then read, "and he shall be paid two cents per gallon for all distilled spirits inspected, but not exceeding $1,500 per annum."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Then I withdraw my objection. I think that is very fair.

Mr. MORRILL. I move pro formâ to amend so as to reduce the compensation to one cent per gallon.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that there ought to be no objection to this section as it stands. I think it is even an improvement upon the present law; nor does it vary greatly from that law. The present law requires these inspectors to be paid by the party employing them, and the rate of their compensation is fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury. He fixes it, I have no question, at as high a rate as is fixed in this bill. It is important that these inspectors should not be interested one way or the other as to the amount to be distilled, and that their pay should be sufficient to place them above temptation. The compensation should be ample and such as will enable the Government to engage the proper kind of men—competent, faithful, vigilant. The rate proposed is $1,500 a year, and they will be paid at that rate, whether employed for thirty days, or sixty days, or six months, or twelve months. The proposition made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is an extraordinary one. Even in the very smallest distilleries the pay would amount to a larger sum than the aggregate for the largest distilleries.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that we shall leave the provision contained in the bill untouched. Certainly, judging from our past experience, it is of very great importance that we should frame such a law as will effectually collect the revenue. In years past, while nearly one hundred million gallons per annum have been distilled and only ten to fifteen million gallons were ever exported, we have obtained a tax the past year upon only ten or fifteen millions. The balance has been consumed either for drinking purposes or in the arts and manufactures. Everybody knows that we ought to obtain twice or three times the amount which we have heretofore received; and one of the first requisites in order to obtain any revenue whatever is to have a proper inspector in every distillery.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCHENCK. I propose to amend by striking out "$1,500 a year" and inserting "five dollars a day."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment, in that form, is not in order.

Mr. SCHENCK. Well, then, for the purpose of saying what I wish to say I move to amend the amendment by striking out "two cents" and inserting in lieu thereof "one cent." It may be that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will prevail; but it seems to me open to a very obvious objection. He proposes that the pay shall be at the rate of two cents per gallon for all that is distilled, not to exceed, however, in the aggregate, $1,500 a year. The operation of this would be that the inspector would continue on duty about a week, during which he would have made his $1,500, and as after that he must work for nothing, he would then resign. Thus we should have in each of the different distilleries some fifty or sixty inspectors per annum.

If the gentleman would make the aggregate a per diem aggregate, he would obviate this objection. If he would provide that the inspectors shall receive a compensation in the shape of a percentage upon each gallon distilled, but that it shall be limited for each day that the inspector is on duty, the proposition would not be open to the objection I have stated. But unquestionably, under the proposition in its present form, after the inspector has made his $1,500, which in a large distillery he will do in about a week, he will resign and make way for some other inspector, for he must work the rest of the year for nothing.

Mr. STEVENS. May I correct the gentleman? After they get above the $1,500 they get in addition thereto one eighth of one per cent. for every gallon they inspect. This is intended only for the small ones.

Mr. SCHENCK. I would like the Clerk to read the amendment again.

The Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not know how that computation is to be made. An aggregate which is to be made at the rate of! What is it? I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I renew the amendment. I believe, Mr. Chairman, this section, as reported by the committee, is in the best possible shape in which it can be passed, so far as the interests of the revenue are concerned. It is objected to this section by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] that it will have a tendency, if passed, to crush out the small stills. If that be so it is the best legislation which Congress can enact for the benefit of the revenue; for instead of these small stills being for the benefit of the revenue, under any circumstances, they are steals rather than stills. [Laughter.] I will say, so far as Peoria is concerned, it is willing that every still should go into Pennsylvania or anywhere else, provided you buy our corn. Buy our corn, and you may manufacture whisky where ever you please.

Now, sir, this ought to pay $80,000,000 a year of revenue to the Government; and yet the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means tells us for the last year it was only seventeen millions. In the southern States, where we have slight supervision of these stills, they are increasing like mushrooms in a night. Fifteen hundred are reported in one district in Georgia, where there was not one a little while ago. If you allow a law to go on the statute-book weak and loose, you will not have the rightful revenue returned. If you strike out $1,500 a year, and pay two cents a gallon, in some distilleries the inspectors will receive $1,500 in a few weeks. Peoria is not the only place where thousands of gallons are made in one day; but in Lawrenceburg, Brooklyn, and New York they have distilleries which manufacture from six to ten thousand gallons a day. Ten thousand gallons at two cents per gallon would be $200; and of course when the inspector received his full pay he would resign. The Government demands good inspectors in order to make the proper calculations. It requires scientific accomplishments to make the calculations. It is made at different proofs; some at forty, some at sixty, and some at eighty, which is alcohol proof. If you pass the section as it is you will get your revenue. I admit you will to some extent drive out the small distilleries. I say so much the better for the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I am free to say, as I understand the nature of the business upon which this law rests and the purpose of the House in getting revenue from spirits, the section now under consideration is most vital to the efficiency of the law. Unless we can have a thorough system of inspection by which the Government may reach all distilled spirits we may abandon all hope of having complete returns of revenue from this source. We may, by making these provisions efficient, greatly relieve many other industries of the country. We may, as they have done in England, make this one of the six articles to pay the entire revenues of the country. We may relieve the agricultural interest, the mechanical, and other small industries of the country by laying the burden upon this article.

This article has this peculiarity in comparison with every other on which we lay tax: on this, as the tax now stands, the Government owns nine tenths interest in every gallon which is distilled, or near that. If one gallon escapes the tax the distiller saves nine tenths. It therefore becomes necessary to double and quadruple provisions to prevent illicit distillation. It has been said it would be a troublesome arrangement to put an inspector into every small distillery. Take a small distillery in Kentucky of five barrels a day, and that is a small distillery. Two hundred and fifty gallons a day would pay to the Government $500. Allow three hundred working days in a year, and we have $150,000 revenue derived from one distillery of five barrels a day. Now, there are distilleries which, if honestly administered, will pay the Government $20,000 a day.

Now, the owner of a five-barrel still that pays to the Government $150,000 a year, most certainly can afford to put an inspector over it and pay $1,500 per annum for the performance of his duties. It has been found out in the progress of the operation of this law that these little copper distilleries have manufactured a great quantity of spirits. They are scattered all over the country, and especially in the South. In a single collection district of Georgia there are fifteen hundred such small stills.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. INGERSOLL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BROMWELL. I renew it. What I wish to say will not take me five minutes. This is the first time I ever heard a measure advocated calculated to crush out a common business, a certain pursuit, and to pile it up in the hands of a few. That is the argument of the gentleman from the Peoria district, [Mr. INGERSOLL.] Now, if the business of distilling is a lawful pursuit, the man who has not the good fortune to be possessed of a princely capital has a right at least to ordinary protection. But this bill comes in and literally devours him; it leaves a man with a small establishment nothing. What would be his fate under this bill? He might as well burn his property to-morrow if he cannot use it, or sell it or give it away. Now, while that is all true, I admit that it is also true that there is great difficulty in hunting down the little distilleries. But have we a right to destroy a man's property and business in order to make other men who are dishonest do right?

The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] who is a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, says that even a small distillery would distill $500 worth a day, and that the Government owns nine tenths of it. Why should not the Government then foot the bill for the inspection of its own interest?

Now, sir, the idea of this bill is that an inspector shall be appointed for every distillery. Think of the swarm of officers that will be required! If the distillery be small, it would swamp the man's business. If the distillery be large, he must be a very incompetent man to run a large distillery who cannot have an inspector appointed who will be convenient for his purposes. You will fill the country with inspectors who will be just such men as the owners and the distillers are. Why cannot there be an inspector for a region of country for these small distilleries? Why not have such an arrangement that the large distilleries doing a great business shall be compelled to furnish an inspector, but that the small establishments shall be exempted? This paragraph provides that he shall hold no other office, engage in no other business while he holds this office, and shall have a compensation of $1,500.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HALL. I rise to oppose the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BROWELL.] I beg leave to call the attention of the committee to the proposition which is before us in the consideration of this whisky tax, and to the revenue we have a right to expect from that one item, and to the receipts that the returns of last year show should have come from it. We are seeking here, not to affect any moral question, not to regulate the habits of the people, but simply to raise the greatest possible amount of revenue from the article that we believe of all others best able to sustain it.

Now, the returns for the last year show that forty-five million gallons of whisky, or about that, were consumed in this country, which should have produced, under the law, $90,000,000. The returns show that we received a revenue of about seventeen million dollars, a tax on eight and a half million gallons, or less than one sixth of the whole amount.

Now, that revenue must either be made up by the enforcement of the law upon this article, or, as was well put by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] we must make it up upon other branches of industry. How is it to be done? Simply and only by an enforcement of the law most rigidly. The British Government from its excise realizes $60,000,000 a year. Shall we be satisfied with a law so loosely drawn, so poorly enforced, as only to realize a revenue on one gallon out of every six we manufacture?

Now, let us take the small distilleries which it is urged are to be crushed out by this provision; this rate of tax simply makes an expense, for this inspector, of five dollars on every $500 of revenue to the Government, taking $500 as a basis. Is that an oppressive tax?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I move an amendment, to insert in lieu of the compensation now provided by the paragraph the words "five dollars per day." But, sir, as I am desirous to make as much progress in the bill as possible this evening, and as there are many provisions here that may excite some discussion, I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pending paragraph of the special order terminate in ten minutes after the committee shall resume the consideration of the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask leave of absence indefinitely for Mr. BLOW.

No objection was made, and leave was granted.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspending, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. MORRILL, to strike out the words "such compensation as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem just and reasonable, at a rate not exceeding $1,500 per annum," and inserting "five dollars per day," so that it will read, "and he shall be paid five dollars per day for the time during which he is engaged."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "holding the office of inspector; and he shall be paid such compensation as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem just and reasonable, at a rate not exceeding $1,500 per annum," and insert "employed as an inspector; and he shall be paid five dollars per day," so that the clause will read, "and shall not engage in any other business while employed as an inspector; and he shall be paid five dollars a day."

Mr. MORRILL. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I will not insist upon my amendment but will withdraw it.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. MORRILL as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I move to amend by striking out the words "assessed by the assessor upon the distiller, and returned to the collector monthly," and insert "paid out of the public Treasury," so that it shall read, "and the amount of compensation thus paid for inspection shall be paid out of the public Treasury."

I hold it to be clearly the duty of the Government to pass such laws as may be necessary to protect itself against frauds on the revenue by the illicit distillation of spirits. But I contend that it is also the duty of the Government to pay the expenses of enforcing these provisions of its own laws, and not impose upon the class of small distillers this onerous and oppressive burden. I contend that there is as much honesty in the small distiller as there is in the large distiller. There is less incentive or motive to defraud the Government on the part of the man who distills but a few barrels a day than there is on the part of the man who distills fifty or a hundred barrels a day. In my own district there are large numbers of these small distillers; and I have yet to learn that there has been among them anything like the proportion of frauds discovered that have been perpetrated by the large distillers.

Now, I think the Government has no right to pass laws discouraging a man in the prosecution of any particular business because he is not able to employ the same amount of capital in pursuing that business that the large distiller has. I therefore trust that my amendment will prevail, and that the Government will pay from the public Treasury the expenses of this restriction, as the Government is to be benefited by their operation. I maintain that the revenue from this source will be largely increased by a diminution of the tax. I hold that a dollar tax upon whisky would produce a larger amount of revenue than the two dollar tax.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I move pro forma to strike out the last word of the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DARLING.] I think the amendment proposed by him will test the soundness and sincerity of the argument used by gentlemen here that this tax is paid by the consumer and not by the distiller. If that be so then they can have no objection to the amendment now offered by the gentleman from New York. If you will have an inspector over every distillery, then give him a compensation of five dollars a day, and pay him out of the public Treasury. Then this provision will not break down the small distillers, but they will still be able to go on with their business.

But the idea that in order to guard against illicit distillation it is necessary to adopt a provision which will break down these small distillers is wholly fallacious. I venture to assert that the larger the establishment the more fraud and villainy you will find in it. What is the necessity at all for this inspection? You provide for the appointment of an inspector in every collection district. And in addition to that you propose to provide for an inspector for every little distillery at an annual salary of $1,500, to be paid by the distiller. It has been said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that some of these distillers do not produce more than four or five hundred gallons a day. He must know very little about the subject or he would know that there are thousands of distilleries that do not make more than one hundred gallons a day each. Now, it is not necessary to disguise this matter at all. The object of this proposition is to crush out all these small distilleries and put the whole business in the hands of the large distilleries.

Mr. MORRILL. I would remind the gentleman that we have already adopted an amendment providing that these inspectors shall be paid five dollars a day while employed.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. And why not also provide that they shall be paid out of the public Treasury? And if it is necessary to guard all these little establishments, why not have an inspector in every manufacturing establishment in the North and East, to be paid at their own cost? Gentlemen say it will cost but little more. Now, does the gentleman undertake to say that, under the old law, every distiller has to pay the salary of an inspector? No, sir; under the old law there are inspectors for each collection district; and this bill retains them just as they are. The object, sir, is to break up all those little distilleries throughout the West. There is not one in a thousand that can stand out under such legislation. This is known to every man who is acquainted with the subject. Another object is to place the grain market within the grasp of those large monopolies, so that they can take the farmers' produce at their own price and distill it in their large establishments. The amendment will obviate to some extent the objection to the provisions of the section. If it is deemed necessary on the part of the Government to watch these little establishments, let it be done; but do it at Government expense, and not by a process that will crush out and destroy these small establishments, root and branch. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to amend by striking out after the word "monthly" in the thirty-third line the following:

And in addition to the above compensation, such inspector shall receive one eighth of one cent for each and every proof gallon of distilled spirits inspected by him and removed to the bonded warehouse, which shall be paid by the distiller or owner of the spirits; but no compensation shall be allowed to such inspector for more than one inspection of such spirits.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not germane to the pending amendment, and is not in order.

On the amendment of Mr. DARLING there were—ayes 42, noes 51.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DARLING and GARFIELD were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes 51.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by in-serting after the word "spirits" in the fortieth line the following words:

No inspector shall continue on duty at one and the same distillery for more than sixty days continuously.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I move to amend by striking out in lines thirty-seven and thirty-eight the words "by the distiller or owner of the spirits" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "out of the public Treasury."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Kentucky. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the section the following:

And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to the distillers of apples, grapes, or peaches, who distill less than fifty barrels per year from the same.

The amendment was not agreed to; there being—ayes twenty-four, noes not counted.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I move to amend by striking out from line thirty-one to line thirty-three the following words:

And the amount of compensation thus paid for inspection shall be assessed by the assessor upon the distiller, and returned to the collector monthly.

The amendment was not agreed to; there being—ayes twenty-one, noes not counted.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend by adding at the end of the section the following:

And provided further, That the distillers shall be entitled to a certificate of inspection from any person who, under the provisions of this act, may have made an inspection, upon which certificate shall be noted the time of the day at which said inspection was made, and also a statement, if such be the fact, that the distiller is complying with the law.

Mr. Chairman, the committee having voted down an amendment offered by me earlier in the evening with a view of decreasing the countless inspections to which distilleries are daily subjected, I now submit this one. The purpose in view is to require the person making the inspection to give a certificate to the distiller. This involves some trouble to the inspector, and would, perhaps, satisfy a subsequent one that the prior inspection showing the law had not been disregarded was sufficient, and thus his duties were rendered unnecessary. While we must protect the Government, we should strive to make the law as little irksome as possible, and avoid, if we can, the too numerous visitations of officials.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky, to strike out the section, the motion was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 34. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in every collection district where the same may be necessary, one or more general inspectors of spirits, who shall each take an oath faithfully to perform his duties, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and who shall be entitled to receive one quarter of one cent for each and every wine-gallon gauged and proved by him; and any owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery or bonded warehouse who shall refuse to admit an inspector upon such premises, so far as it may be necessary for the performance of his duties, or who shall obstruct an inspector in the performance of his duties, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $500, to be recovered in the manner provided for recovery of other penalties imposed by this act.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 35. And be it further enacted, That every owner of any still, boiler, or other vessel, used or intended to be used for the purpose of distilling spirits, as hereinbefore provided, or who shall have such still, boiler, or other vessel under his superintendence, either as agent for the owner or for his own account, or who shall use any still or other vessel as aforesaid, either as owner, agent, or otherwise, shall from day to day make true and exact entry, or cause to be entered, in a book, to be kept in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, the number of pounds or gallons of materials used for the purpose of producing spirits, and the number of gallons of spirits distilled, and also the number of gallons placed in warehouse and the proof thereof, which book shall always be open for the inspection of any assessor, assistant assessor, collector, deputy collector, supervisor, or inspector, who may take minutes, memorandums, or transcripts thereof; and shall render to the assessor or assistant assessor of the district, on the 1st, 11th, and 21st days of every month, or within five days thereafter, an account in duplicate, taken from his books, of the number of pounds and gallons of material used in producing spirits, the number of gallons of spirits distilled, and also the number of gallons removed to bonded warehouse and the proof thereof—which said account shall be verified by affidavit prescribed by law, and be certified by the inspector—and shall immediately forward to the collector of the district one of said accounts, and shall pay to the collector the taxes on the spirits so distilled before removing the same from the bonded warehouse, unless removed as provided by law. The entries to be made in the books of the distiller, as aforesaid, shall, upon the several days when the returns are to be made, as provided, be verified by the signature of the person or persons by whom such entries shall have been made, in the presence of the assessor or assistant assessor, or other proper officer, who shall append thereto his certificate of the execution of the same. The owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery shall, in case the original entries required to be made in his books by this act shall not have been made by himself, subjoin to the certificate of the person by whom they were made the following certificate: "I do certify that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, the foregoing entries are just and true, and that I have taken all the means in my power to make them so." And any owner, agent, or superintendent who shall neglect or refuse to furnish the account and duplicate thereof, as herein provided, or who shall refuse to permit the said assessor or assistant assessor, collector or deputy collector, or inspector, to examine the books in the manner herein provided for, when requested, shall, for every such neglect or refusal, forfeit and pay the sum of $500.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by striking out in line thirty-one the words "to be."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 36. And be it further enacted, That, in addition to the special tax provided, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all spirits that may be distilled and removed from the bonded warehouse for consumption or sale, of first proof, on and after the passage of this act, a tax of two dollars on each and every proof gallon; and the said tax shall be a lien on the spirits distilled, on the distillery used for distilling the same, with the stills, vessels, fixtures, and tools therein, and on the interest of said distiller in the lot or tract of land whereon the said distillery is situated, until the said tax shall be paid: Provided, That the tax on all spirits shall be collected at no lower rate than the basis of first proof, and shall be increased in proportion for any greater strength than the strength of first proof.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out "two dollars" in line five, and inserting in lieu thereof "one dollar."

Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment, I am actuated by the purest of motives in reference to the attainment of a large amount of revenue from this source. I have no interest in any distilling establishment, nor have many of my constituents. They are generally a sober, agricultural people, who produce very largely the gross grains which are grown upon the western prairies—mainly corn and rye. Heretofore in our isolated condition we have found a large market for our products in these distilleries which manufactured grains into spirits. They enabled us in a much easier way to transport our products to market. The effect of the tax of two dollars a gallon is to destroy the legitimate manufacture of any large quantities of these grains into high-wines and alcohol.

And let me say another thing. The premium is too high for legitimate manufacture, and so long as we continue it we can provide no legal machinery which will enable us to collect the full revenue. I notify the House that the experience of last year will be the experience of next year. With the temptations held out by this law we can have no expectation of a faithful performance of duty on the part of these inspectors. I have no expectation of it. I believe that a tax of two dollars a gallon on spirits is too great a temptation to be guarded against. If gentlemen will look into the machinery of this bill they will see it is required that the whole product of these distillations shall be run into vats every day. Some of these vats will contain six thousand gallons. Do gentlemen expect the temptation will be resisted by men who are receiving only five dollars a day? They have only to shut their eyes—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. Our experience has shown that the cheating commenced about as rapidly at twenty cents and sixty cents as at two dollars. Believing the mind of every gentleman in the House is made up on this question, and that we do not want any discussion, I only rise to oppose the amendment pro forma.

Mr. HALE. I move to substitute one dollar and one cent.

Mr. Chairman, while I have had so far, and still have, every disposition to sustain the Committee of Ways and Means in the bill which is before the committee, it does seem to me, after the very elaborate argument reported by the revenue commissioners on this subject of the taxation of whisky, in which they very strongly demonstrate the impropriety of the present high tax and the propriety of lessening it, the question ought to be considered in a fuller House than we have to-night. I rise to suggest the propriety of passing over this section so that we may take it up in a day session when the House is fuller and an opportunity may be afforded for an interchange of views. Without expressing the intention of taking one side or the other, it seems to me to be a question which should not be voted on in a thin House.

Mr. MORRILL. If it were an original question very likely I might not disagree with the gentleman from New York, but I do not suppose any different result would be obtained if the House were fuller. I think it is the purpose of a very large majority of the House, as well as of the country, to try the two dollar rate until the law has been fully tested.

Mr. HALE, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

The amendment was then disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 37. And be it further enacted, That proof spirit shall be held and taken to be that alcoholic liquor which contains one half its volume of alcohol of a specific gravity of .7939 at sixty degrees Fahrenheit, and the tax on all spirits shall be levied according to their equivalent in proof spirits; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to adopt, procure, and prescribe for use, such hydrometers, weighing and gauging instruments, meters, or other means for ascertaining the strength and quantity of spirits subject to tax, and to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to insure a uniform and correct system of inspection, weighing, and gauging of spirits subject to tax throughout the United States. And in all sales of spirits hereafter made, where not otherwise specially agreed, a gallon shall be taken to be a gallon of first proof, according to the foregoing standard set forth and declared for the inspection and gauging of spirits throughout the United States.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 38. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery established as hereinbefore provided, shall erect, in a room or building to be provided and used for that purpose, and for no other, two or more receiving cisterns, each to be at least of sufficient capacity to hold all the spirits distilled during the day of twenty-four hours, into one of which shall be conveyed each day all the spirits manufactured in said distillery during that day; and such cisterns shall be so constructed as to leave an open space of at least three feet between the tops thereof and the floor or roof above, and of not less than eighteen inches between the bottoms thereof and the floor below, and shall be separated in such a manner as will enable the inspector to pass around the same, and shall be connected with the outlet of the stills, boilers, or other vessels used for distilling, by suitable pipes or other apparatus so constructed as always to be exposed to the view of the inspector; such cisterns and the room in which they are contained shall be in charge of and under the lock and seal of the inspector; and on the third day after the spirits are conveyed into such cisterns the same shall be drawn off into casks or other packages, under the supervision of the inspector, and shall be immediately inspected, gauged, and proved, and the casks or packages marked, as herein provided, and be removed directly to the bonded warehouse before mentioned: Provided, That the spirits may be drawn off from said cisterns at any time previous to the third day, if so desired by the owner, agent, or superintendent of such distillery; and all locks and seals required under this act shall be provided by the Secretary of the Treasury, at the expense of the owner of the distillery, and shall be combination locks and susceptible of at least ninety-six changes, and the bits of the keys thereof shall be changed at least once a week, and shall always be in the custody of the inspector or assistant inspector, or the officer having charge of the distillery and warehouse.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out that section. It is the most extraordinary contrivance I ever heard of since I read of the cells under old feudal castles. The man who invented it ought to have a patent. We are to have locks with ninety-six combinations and creepings in and about and around until it becomes a labyrinth more involved than Crete ever had. A man who went into it would have to take a thread with him to find his way out.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope this section will not be stricken out. I acknowledge that the provision is a stringent one, but it does not require them to rebuild. They have their cisterns already and it only requires that they shall inclose them and that the inspectors may have a key to the locks of the room in his possession and be able to go around and see that there are no secret pipes leading out by which a few barrels may be drawn out and sold without paying the tax. I know of no way except by some such thorough, stringent measure as this by which an inspection shall be made, so that we shall absolutely know what is done, how much is manufactured daily, and where it goes. It thus comes under the supervision of the Government itself. As a matter of course to do this we have got to point out with a great deal of particularity the mode of inspecting and securing the revenue from distilled spirits.

If any gentleman here knows any better way to do this as thoroughly and with less trouble and annoyance to the owner of the distillery, I shall be very glad to hear it, and should be very willing to adopt it. But the revenue commission that looked into this matter and compared it with the system in other countries have been able to devise no better, more simple, or cheaper means of effecting the object, and I hope it will prevail.

I will say, however, before I sit down, that a thing greatly desired by all countries, not yet attained, but which I hope is to be reached in this country, is the invention of a meter that may be fixed to a still by which all the fluid shall be measured as it is manufactured. It is declared that such an invention has been made by a citizen of the United States, and it is now being examined by the officers of the Coast Survey and the Smithsonian Institute; but it cannot be determined in time for the action of the internal revenue department or Congress this year. Therefore I hope we shall be permitted to use this system, however cumbersome it may appear to be, until another session of Congress, when, perhaps, we shall have found that the invention is a success, and will very much simplify this whole matter and render our revenue from this source more certain. But until that is done I hope this House will stand by the committee in maintaining this system of thorough inspection.

Mr. BROMWELL. I move to insert the word "three" in the place of "two" in line four.

I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] if this section does not materially interfere with the business of carrying on distillation of alcohol. If the business of distillation is not to be put under the ban of moral considerations, which I think influences some minds, if it is to be left like any other business in this country, as a matter of money and business, we certainly do not wish to hamper and disturb it in its most profitable form.

Now, sir, in regions remote from market, the corn which is manufactured into whisky is also made into alcohol, and I would ask the chairman of the committee, or the gentleman who last addressed the committee, if the requirement of these cisterns and warehouses is not going to materially interfere with the business, of distilling alcohol. I do not know enough about this business to give any information as to it myself, but I understand that it is a great convenience and saving of labor and expense if the distiller is allowed to run his whisky directly into alcohol at his pleasure, without having it barreled or stored up in a bonded warehouse.

Now, sir, this will affect the western distillers injuriously, I think; for it is a great deal cheaper to ship alcohol to New York or the eastern market than it is to ship corn and let it be distilled at the East. Every western man can see that if a distillery is worth anything to the West, it is worth more for its purpose of making alcohol than whisky. I should, therefore, from my understanding of it, favor the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to strike out the paragraph. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. STEVENS'S amendment, and it was disagreed to—ayes twenty-three, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 39. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall knowingly and fraudulently use any false weights and measures in ascertaining, weighing, or measuring the quantities of grain, meal, or vegetable materials, molasses, or beer, or other substances to be used for distillation, or who shall fraudulently make false record of the same, or who shall destroy or tamper with any locks or seal which may be placed on any cistern, rooms, or buildings, by the duly authorized officers of the revenue, shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned for the term of two years, and pay a fine not exceeding $1,000, in the discretion of the court; and any person who shall use any molasses, beer, or other substances, whether fermented on the premises or elsewhere, for the purpose of producing spirits, before an account of the same shall have been registered in the proper record book provided for this purpose, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $1,000 for each and every offense so committed.

SEC. 40. And be it further enacted, That on all wines, liquors, or compounds known or denominated as wine, made in imitation of sparkling wine or champagne, and put up in bottles under the label, name, designation, or similitude of any imported wine, or wine of foreign growth or manufacture, or with the appearance or pretense of being imported wine, or wine of foreign growth or manufacture, there shall be levied and paid a tax of six dollars per dozen bottles, each bottle containing more than one pint, or three dollars per dozen bottles, each bottle containing not more than one pint; and the returns, assessment, collection, and time of collection of the tax on such imitation wines shall be subject to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And any person who shall willfully and knowingly sell or offer for sale any such wine made after the passage of this act, upon which the tax herein imposed has not been paid, or which has been fraudulently evaded, shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a penalty of $1,000, or to imprisonment not exceeding one year, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend section forty by striking out the words "the label, name, designation, or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. In lines five and six I move to strike out the words "or wine of foreign growth or manufacture."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend that section in the ninth line by inserting after the word "pint" the words "and not more than one quart."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Unless the Committee of Ways and Means can give some reason for retaining the words I move to strike out the words "or similitude."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I suggest to the gentleman that he will accomplish his object by moving to strike out the words "similitude of;" and insert in lieu thereof "in imitation of;" so that the clause will read:

That on all wines, liquors, or compounds known or denominated as wine, made in imitation of sparkling wine or champagne and put up in bottles in imitation of any imported wine, &c.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I accept that as a modification of my amendment.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move, also, to strike out in line six the words "appearance or." It seems to me that if a man puts up wine in bottles and it has the appearance of foreign wine, it is rather sharp to subject him to these penalties. It might be very difficult to put up wine in bottles that might not have the appearance of foreign wine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. At the request of my critical friend from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] I move to amend the section in line six by striking out the letter "c" in the word "pretence" and inserting "s" in place of it. [Laughter.]

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 41. And be it further enacted, That every owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery shall, at all times when required, supply all assistance, lights, ladders, tools, staging, or other things necessary for inspecting the premises, stock, tools, and apparatus belonging to such person or persons having paid the special tax aforesaid, and shall open all doors, and open for examination all boxes, packages, and all casks, barrels, and other vessels not under the control of the inspector, when required so to do by any duly authorized officer, under a penalty of $200 for any refusal or neglect so to do.

SEC. 42. And be it further enacted, That all spirits distilled shall, before the same are removed to the bonded warehouse, be inspected, gauged, and proved by the inspector appointed for that purpose, after the same has been drawn into casks or packages, each of not less capacity than twenty gallons, wine measure, and said inspector shall mark, by cutting or branding, upon the cask or package containing such spirits, in a manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the quantity and proof of the contents of such cask or package, with the date of inspection, the collection district, the name of the inspector, and the name of the distiller, and also the number of each cask in progressive order, such progressive number, for every distiller, to begin with number one with the first cask or package inspected after this act, and subsequently with number one with the first cask inspected on or after the last day of January in each year, and no two or more casks warehoused in the same year by the same distiller shall be marked with the same number, and the officer in charge of the warehouse shall refuse to allow any cask of spirits to be taken out therefrom which has not cut or branded thereon all the several particulars aforesaid, and in the manner required by this act. And the inspector or other revenue officer in charge of any distillery shall make a prompt return of all spirits inspected by him in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the name of the distiller, to the collector, and a duplicate thereof to the assessor of the district; and any person who shall fraudulently evade or attempt fraudulently to evade the payment of the tax upon any spirits distilled as aforesaid, by changing any marks upon any such cask or package, or in any other manner whatever, or who shall fraudulently put into such cask or package spirits of greater strength than that inspected and certified to by the inspector, shall pay double the amount of tax on each proof gallon of the quantity of such spirits, and forfeit and pay as a penalty the additional sum of $500 for each cask or package so altered or changed, to be recovered as herein provided; and any inspector who shall knowingly put upon any such cask or package any false or fraudulent marks shall, on conviction, be imprisoned one year, and be liable to a fine of $500, in the discretion of the court; and any person who shall fraudulently use any cask or package bearing inspection marks, for the purpose of selling any other spirits than that so inspected, or for selling spirits of a quantity or quality different from that so inspected, shall be imprisoned for a term of six months, or shall pay a fine of $100 for each cask or package so used, in the discretion of the court; and any person who shall knowingly purchase or sell, with inspection marks thereon, any cask or package, after the same has been used for distilled spirits, or who shall fraudulently omit to erase or obliterate the inspection marks upon any such package or cask at the time of emptying the same, shall forfeit and pay the sum of fifty dollars for every cask so purchased or used, or on which the marks are not so obliterated. And any person who shall, with fraudulent intent, use any inspector's brands or plates upon any cask or package containing or purporting to contain distilled spirits, except in the employ of the inspector, or who shall knowingly make or use any counterfeit or spurious brand or plate upon any cask or package of distilled spirits, as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall forfeit the same, and shall pay a fine of $1,000, and be imprisoned for not less than two nor more than five years. And any inspector who shall permit any person not employed by him to use any of his brands or plates, or who shall negligently or willfully leave such brands or plates where they can be used by any other person than those who may be in his employ, shall pay a fine not exceeding $1,000, in the discretion of the court. And any inspector who shall employ any owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery or warehouse under his supervision, or who shall employ any person in the service of such owner, agent, or superintendent, to use his plates or brands, or to discharge any of the duties imposed by this act upon such inspector, shall, for each offense so committed, be subject to the same fine last mentioned.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. On line thirty-nine, in the forty-second section, I move to insert the words "not less than fifty dollars nor more than;" so that the clause will read:

And any inspector who shall knowingly put upon any such cask or package any false or fraudulent marks shall, on conviction, be imprisoned one year, and be liable to a fine of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, in the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I move to insert in line thirty-eight, before the words "shall, on conviction, be imprisoned one year," the following:

And any inspector, assistant inspector, or officer temporarily in charge of any distillery under this act, who shall conspire with the proprietor of any distillery or with any other person or persons to defraud the United States of any revenue or tax derived from distilled spirits or any part thereof, or who shall with intent to defraud the United States of such revenue or tax make any fraudulent return, or entry of certificate of return, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, &c.

The committee have prepared a very elaborate system of defenses here in regard to the payment of this tax to protect the Government against frauds on the revenue. But after all it must be evident to every one that notwithstanding all the precautions to which you resort, notwithstanding all the building regulations and combination locks and everything else you have put into your bill, you must at last depend upon the good faith of the inspector. You must have some hold upon the inspector, or all your precautions will be worthless. You have provided every other precaution; but you have no sufficient precaution against his speculation. "Quis custodiet ipsos custodes?" Who is to inspect the inspector? Nobody. Now, I propose, by my amendment, to obtain a hold upon these inspectors, so that if the only persons whom we can hold for the payment of this tax shall play false to the Government they shall be punished in a manner adequate to prevent the commission of the offense in the future.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] that I think the object he has in view is provided for in section forty-six of this bill.

Mr. THAYER. I do not think that is the case. I think my amendment better be inserted, and then if it shall be found that it is already provided for in another part of the bill it can be changed afterward.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. The very excellent amendment, as I regard it, of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] which has just been adopted, reminds me of one I attempted to have made in the thirty-third section of this bill, and if I am permitted to move it now, I think the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] will not object to it. My amendment was to prohibit any one inspector being on duty more than sixty days continuously in any one distillery. I therefore ask permission to go back to the section I have named in order that I may renew the amendment.

No objection was made.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend section thirty-three by inserting after the sentence ending with these words, "but no compensation shall be allowed to such inspector for more than one inspection of such spirits," the words "and no inspector shall continue on duty at one and the same distillery for more than sixty days continuously." A large number of inspectors being employed, they may be changed from distillery to distillery without much inconvenience. As was remarked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. THAYER,] one of the great evils to be guarded against is the danger of collusion between the inspector and the distiller. Now, a distillery is a very seductive place, and an inspector who is constantly associated with the distiller and his men may become more intimate with them than he should be.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I would ask the gentleman if he thinks we cannot find men who will remain honest more than sixty days.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have no doubt there are those who would continue honest for a longer period than that; but there are many who cannot remain honest for a single day. Every member here knows the effect of constant association. A gentleman here who sits at the same desk with another does not like to vote against him; and when he feels compelled to do so, he gets as far over on the other side as possible. You do not like to vote against the man who messes with you, with whom you have sat day after day at the same table. And that is precisely the danger to be apprehended from these inspectors, from long association with these distillers. After a time they become intimately acquainted with them, and if they do not become attached to them, they are "hail fellows well met" with the distillers and their men. The Methodist church understands this perfectly well, and they do not allow one of their preachers to remain more than two years continuously with the same congregation.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman—

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not yield.

Mr. PRICE. I only want to say—

Mr. SCHENCK. I will not allow myself to be interrupted.

Mr. PRICE. But the gent—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] is not in order, and will take his seat.

Mr. SCHENCK. There is a principle of human nature involved in this, whatever the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] may think of it. Offering the amendment as I do in good faith, I hope the vote will now be taken, and the amendment adopted.

Mr. PRICE. I am in order now, I believe. I only want to say that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] is not posted on the subject of the Methodist church. He better make himself acquainted with that subject before he refers to it here.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. SCHENCK.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SCHENCK and GARFIELD were appointed.

Mr. MORRILL. The vote upon this amendment can be taken to-morrow. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had made commendable progress therein, but had come to no conclusion thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. ELDRIDGE, (at ten o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. DARLING: The petition of Field & Evans, manufacturers of pearl buttons, in the city of New York, for an increase of tariff on pearl buttons.

By Mr. DELANO: The petition of Nathaniel Bedell, and 500 others, citizens and wool-growers of Huron county, Ohio, praying for increased duty on foreign wools.

By Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania: The petition of citizens of Washington county, Pennsylvania, asking for an increase of duties on foreign wools.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of Dr. Benjamin Malone, late paymaster United States volunteers, who was robbed of funds drawn to pay troops with, and whose claim for relief has been reported upon favorably by Judge Advocate Turner.

By Mr. SAWYER: The memorial of the board of directors of the Sugar River Valley Railroad Company for a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Sugar River Valley railroad, from Freeport, in Illinois, to Madison, in Wisconsin.

By Mr. SLOAN: The petition of the board of directors of the Sugar River Valley Railroad Company for a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Freeport, Illinois, to the city of Madison, Wisconsin.

By Mr. F. THOMAS: The petition of John Todd, praying compensation for services rendered to the Army of the United States during the late war against the southern rebellion.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 26, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the morning hour to-day shall be dispensed with that we may proceed with the consideration of the tax bill. If this consent shall be given, I propose to yield to several gentlemen to present matters that will take but little time.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. INGERSOLL. If the House considers it of more importance to dispose of the tax bill than to get the canal and sewerage bill out of the way, I do not know that I ought to insist on my objection. I know that this sewerage bill does not interest the House; but it is desirable that it should be disposed of that other reports may be made. There are several committees that have been waiting for some time an opportunity to report.

It is, I observe, the general disposition of the House to take up the tax bill; and I will therefore withdraw my objection. In consideration of this, I trust the House will give unanimous consent that a morning hour of some early day, next Monday or Tuesday perhaps, shall be given to the disposition of the canal bill.

The SPEAKER. What day does the gentleman propose?

Mr. INGERSOLL. Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent that the morning hour of next Tuesday shall be devoted to the consideration of the canal and sewerage bill?

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Well, then, say Monday.

The SPEAKER. Monday cannot be assigned for that purpose.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Well, I withdraw the request.

PASSPORTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (H. R. No. 568) entitled "An act to repeal section twenty-three of chapter seventy-nine of the acts of the third session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress relating to passports," with a recommendation that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the words, "and hereafter passports shall be issued only to citizens of the United States."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD AND TELEGRAPH LINE.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, by unanimous consent, Senate bill No. 123, entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad in California, to Portland, in Oregon," was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

REPAIR OF POTOMAC BRIDGE.

Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Appropriations a joint resolution making an appropriation for the repair of the Potomac bridge; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the House will consent to consider and pass this joint resolution at the present time. The Long bridge has for a long time been out of repair, so as to be impassable. We are informed that if this appropriation be made, the bridge can be put in perfect order within a week, while if the work be delayed till the ordinary appropriation bill shall have passed, the necessary repairs cannot be made for some time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution, after which the Chair will ask for objections, if any.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides for an appropriation of $10,000 to enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds to place the Potomac bridge in such repair as to render it permanently passable, the work to be done immediately after the approval of this joint resolution.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether the report of the civil engineer of the Interior Department with reference to the repairs of the Long bridge has been submitted to the committee.

Mr. STEVENS. I believe that no formal report has been submitted.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I may be allowed to state that some weeks since a formal report from the civil engineer of the Interior Department was presented to the Secretary of the Interior; and that report showed that an expenditure of $16,200 would be required for making the necessary repairs of this bridge.

Mr. STEVENS. I believe we did receive such a report, but the Commissioner of Public Buildings has made an examination in company with a competent bridge-builder, and they have reported to the committee that $10,000 will be sufficient to do the work.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

Mr. ELIOT. I move that Senate bill No. 222, entitled "An act further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes," now on the Speaker's table, be ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

RICHARD W. MEADE.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution referring the claim of the estate of Richard W. Meade to the Court of Claims. The Senate, by its resolution at the last session of Congress, referred this back to the Court of Claims, but it was decided that the case must be referred by joint action of both Houses of Congress. I do not think there can be any objection to the reference.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I object. I think the matter should be referred for examination.

The joint resolution was introduced, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BOUNTIES OF VETERAN VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following bill to compute the bounties of veteran volunteers so as to protect the rights of such:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in computing the amount of bounty money allowed by any law to veteran volunteers, the sum of $100 heretofore received by any such veteran as part of his veteran bounty shall be exempt and in no way deducted from the bounty money allowed him; but that every veteran volunteer shall receive bounty at the rate of eight and one third dollars per month for the time of his service during the period of his first enlistment, in addition to and without in any way counting his bounty as a veteran.

There was no objection, and the bill was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADDITIONAL POLICE FORCE.

Mr. LATHAM, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds to employ additional temporary police force in and around the Smithsonian grounds.

ARMORY AT ROCK ISLAND.

On motion of Mr. COOK, Senate bill No. 330, making further provision for the establishment of an armory and arsenal of construction, deposit, and repair on Rock Island, Illinois, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On motion of Mr. ANCONA, leave of absence was granted to his colleague, Mr. Boxer, until June 4.

DUNDAS PATENT.

Mr. CULLOM, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to communicate to this House whether any application has been made for the reissue of the Dundas patent for cultivators; and if so by whom, and at what time, and upon what grounds; and to transmit to this House copies of all the papers and documents connected with the applications; and also to state what effect it will have upon the agricultural interests of the country to reissue said patent and have the same relate back and cover the essential improvements made since the year 1851; and also further to communicate what legislation is necessary to protect the interests of the public in regard to such reissues of patents.

Mr. CULLOM moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a very brief personal explanation, and will consume only a moment. A few days since, in casual debate in the House, I referred to some of the recent appointments in western Pennsylvania, and especially the case of Colonel Samuel McKelvy, whose name was sent to the Senate for marshal of western Pennsylvania. I said in substance that he was dismissed from the service of the United States on charges implicating his integrity as a man and an officer. I made this statement on verbal information, which I considered perfectly reliable at the time. I have since examined the proceedings of the court-martial and find Colonel McKelvy was tried on a single charge, plead guilty, and was temporarily dismissed; but on a full explanation of the whole charge was restored. As I have no disposition to do any man injustice I have thought it due to myself to make this correction.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAVES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending question was on Mr. SCHENCK's motion to amend section thirty-three by inserting after the sentence ending with these words, "but no compensation shall be allowed to such inspector for more than one inspection of such spirits," the words "and no inspector shall continue on duty at one and the same distillery for more than sixty days continuously."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I call up the following amendment:

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

On page 103, line twenty-three hundred and thirty-nine, strike out from the beginning of the line to the end of line twenty-three hundred and fifty-five on page 104 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That section one hundred and three be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: That every person, firm, company, or corporation owning or possessing or having the care or management of any railroad, canal, steamboat, ship, barge, canal-boat or other vessel, or any stage-coach or other vehicle engaged or employed in the business of transporting passengers for hire, or in transporting the mails of the United States upon contracts made prior to the passage of this act, shall be subject to and pay a tax of two and one half per cent. of the gross receipts from passengers and mails of such railroad, canal, steamboat, ship, barge, canal-boat, or other vessel, or such stage-coach or other vehicle: Provided, That the tax hereby imposed shall not be assessed upon receipts for the transportation of persons or mails between the United States and any foreign port; but such tax shall be assessed upon the transportation of persons from a port within the United States through a foreign territory to a port within the United States, and shall be assessed upon and collected from persons, firms, companies, or corporations within the United States, receiving hire or pay for such transportation of persons or mails. And so much of section one hundred and nine as requires returns to be made of receipts hereby exempted from tax when derived from transporting property for hire is hereby repealed:

Provided also, That any person or persons, firms, companies, or corporations, owning, possessing, or having the care or management of any toll-road, ferry, or bridge, authorized by law to receive toll for the transit of passengers, beasts, carriages, teams, and freight of any description, over such toll-road, ferry, or bridge, shall be subject to and pay a tax of three per cent. of the gross amount of all their receipts of every description; but when the gross receipts of any such bridge or toll-road, for and during any term of twelve consecutive calendar months, shall not exceed the amount necessarily expended to keep such bridge or road in repair, no tax shall be assessed upon such receipts during any month next following any such term: And provided further, That all such persons, firms, companies, and corporations shall have the right to add the tax imposed hereby to their rates of fare whenever their liability thereto may commence, any limitations which may exist by law or by agreement with any person or company which may have paid or be liable to pay such fare to the contrary notwithstanding: And provided further, That no tax under this section shall be assessed upon any person, firm, company, or corporation whose gross receipts do not exceed $1,000 per annum: And provided further, That boats, barges, and flats, not used for carrying passengers nor propelled by steam or sails, which are floated or towed by tug-boats and used exclusively for carrying coal, oil, minerals, or agricultural products to market, shall be required hereafter in lieu of enrollment fees or tonnage tax, to pay an annual special tax for each and every such boat of a capacity exceeding twenty-five tons, and not exceeding one hundred tons, five dollars; and when exceeding one hundred tons as aforesaid shall be required to pay ten dollars; and said tax shall be assessed and collected as other special taxes provided for in this act.

Mr. MORRILL. The point in dispute was, I think, in relation to the right of railroads to charge the tax on their passenger fares. I believe it would operate very oppressively not to allow them in some parts of the country to charge it, especially horse railroads not now paying their expenses.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. There is one amendment accidentally omitted. After the words "transporting passengers for hire" I move to insert "except hacks or carriages not running on continuous routes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I thought it was understood that the amendment I offered was to be printed with the other amendments.

Mr. MORRILL. The whole matter was referred to the committee, and we reported this.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move to amend by striking out that portion which provides that these corporations may charge to the passengers the amount of this tax. It is the third proviso.

The question being taken on the motion to strike out the aforesaid proviso, no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Messrs. FARNSWORTH and DAVIS.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes sixty-seven, noes not counted. So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I would inquire if the amendment, as reported by the committee, repeals the provision of section ten of the act of last year.

Mr. MORRILL. That section is already repealed.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I desire to move an amendment so as to reserve horse railroads. I believe the proviso stricken out includes horse railroads, and there are many of them that cannot live at the present rates of fare if they have to pay this tax.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move an amendment by inserting after the words "tug-boats" the words "or horses;" so that it will read, "which are floated or towed by tug-boats or horses."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would inquire whether it was intended to exempt all boats carrying mails from tax upon the receipts from passengers.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. My amendment simply applied to hacks and carriages not running on continuous routes.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think the section as amended will exempt coaches carrying mails from this tax.

Mr. PIKE. I would like to know why these special exemptions should be made. I am willing to do the fair thing and strike out the tonnage tax all around.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think the section as amended on motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] exempts all coaches carrying mails from the payment of taxes on receipts from passengers. If that is the intention of the committee I am entirely satisfied, but if it is not I think it had better be looked at.

Mr. MORRILL. As the amendment was reported by me from the Committee of Ways and Means, it certainly did not have that intent or meaning. I do not know exactly how or where the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts was inserted, or exactly what effect it may produce. It is possible that the gentleman from Iowa is correct, and that it would exempt stage-coaches. I think it might exempt more than the gentleman from Massachusetts intended. I suppose he merely intended to exempt the hacks that ply about our cities.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. That is all that is embraced in it.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was again read.

The question was taken on Mr. MORRILL's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move to add to the amendment just adopted the following additional proviso:

Provided, That all such persons, companies, or corporations operating any horse railroad shall have the right to add the duty or tax to their rate of fare.

This amendment applies only to our street railroads. It is represented on the part of the friends of these roads that they have already made their rates of fare as low as they can reduce them and sustain their roads. I desire, for one, to encourage these roads in every town in the country that can sustain one. They are the poor man's railroad—the poor man's carriage. They provide him means of transportation when he cannot obtain it in any other way. They take the poor man to church on the Sabbath and take his children to school on week days. I hope the experiment will be tried for a few years, and if we find that they can bear a reduction upon their charges, or can bear additional taxation, we can lay it on with a heavy hand. But it is, after all, a mere experiment, and we can alter this provision if we find it does not work well.

Mr. STEVENS. I should a great deal rather see these railroad fares altered so as to enable them to charge enough. The idea of laying a tax upon railroads, and allowing them to charge it to the passengers, is not according to my views of legitimate legislation. I know that there is one railroad in this city that is doing well. I know another one that never will do well unless it has passengers. [Laughter.] I am opposed to this system. I would rather authorize them to charge more fare, and then we shall know exactly what we have to pay.

Mr. DODGE. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment. The remarks of my colleague from New York [Mr. HOTCHKISS] may be very correct in regard to the railroads in the smaller towns and cities; but we find in New York city that our street railroads there are very oppressive. They have obtained a right to run through our streets; they have obtained very valuable franchises on the condition that they would transport people from the lower to the upper part of the city, the poor men that the gentleman refers to, the mechanics, the men who cannot afford to walk two or three miles to their business. They got these valuable franchises because they would agree to carry passengers at a given fare. If this amendment passes they will be authorized to add this two and a half per cent. tax upon all these poor persons that the gentleman refers to. I hope the amendment, so far as horse railroads in the large cities are concerned, will not be adopted.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe that there is no measure of justice more worthy of our consideration at this time than that proposed by the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. HOTCHKISS.] He has already stated the beneficial nature and character of these railroads; that they are designed, not only for the general convenience of the public, but for the special advantage of the poor. That is the case in all our large cities and flourishing towns; the poor derive vast benefit from them. Now, if you go to the city of New York, you will find that these railroads are the avenues by which the poor leave the city to pass a few hours in the country and breathe the pure country air. As a sanitary measure and institution I insist that these city roads are entitled to our encouragement.

It has been stated by my colleague from the city of New York [Mr. DODGE] that these railroad grants for the city of New York were obtained by the individuals controlling them from the Legislature of New York without compensation, and therefore he would create a prejudice against these corporations. Even if that were the case they are no less beneficial to the community when constructed. Now, the parties owning these roads at this time are not the men who procured these grants from the Legislature, but they are men who have paid a compensation for all they have. Since 1860, when these grants were made, every article required in the construction and equipment of railroads has enhanced in value more than one hundred per cent. I state it on my own personal knowledge, that a road which in 1861 could have been built for $10,000 a mile will now cost $25,000 a mile.

Mr. STEVENS. Now, I want to know, as a mere matter of arithmetic, one thing from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS.] The poor people now can ride, or could ride without this law, for five cents; and it is proposed to add a cent to each fare. I want to know how much that takes off from their burdens.

Mr. DAVIS. It adds a great benefit to them. [Laughter.] That is the reason of my argument, for I say that upon a fare of five cents there is not a city railroad in New York that will support itself.

Mr. STEVENS. Suppose you add two cents to each fare, then that will double the benefit.

Mr. DAVIS. Undoubtedly it will. And I think it is perfectly proper for these corporations, whose fares are limited by their charters or by municipal regulations, to add the Federal tax to the rate of fare. Why should we apply a different principle to a railroad corporation than we apply to an individual? An individual has a right, if he be taxed by this Government, to add the amount of his tax to the commodities in which he deals. A corporation has no such power, because it is the creature of legislation. And therefore when we come to lay our hands upon them we should be careful to give them the means of relief.

Mr. DODGE withdrew his amendment to the amendment of Mr. HOTCHKISS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on the pending paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pending paragraph of the special order terminate in one minute after the committee shall resume the consideration of the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. HOTCHKISS to allow horse railroads to add their tax to their fares.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of proposing an inquiry to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS.] I want to know from him, why not apply the same principle to notes bearing interest which are taxed? A note bearing six per cent. is taxed; why not allow the tax to be added to the rate of interest allowed? [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. I did not hear the question of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HARDING.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed on this paragraph, by order of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] be allowed two minutes to answer the question. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. I did not hear the question. I will attempt to answer any question I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order.

The amendment of Mr. HOTCHKISS was not agreed to.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the third proviso of the amendment last adopted the following:

Nor upon the receipts of any horse railroad running in one or more towns or cities whose population in the aggregate, according to the last preceding census, does not exceed forty thousand persons.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to read section forty-five, but was interrupted by Mr. LYNCH, who said: I rise to a point of order, which is that I called for a vote by division on my amendment immediately after the result of the viva voce vote was announced.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a question of order, but a question of fact. If the gentleman states that he called for a division in time, the Chair will put the question again.

Mr. LYNCH. I certainly did.

The CHAIRMAN. That is sufficient.

The question being again put on the amendment of Mr. LYNCH, there were, on a division—ayes eighteen, noes not counted.

Mr. ANCONA called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the third proviso of the amendment last adopted to section forty-four the following:

Nor upon any person, firm, company, or corporation engaged in transporting property or passengers for hire whose gross receipts upon such transportation do not exceed their current expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order, the committee having passed the section to which the amendment was offered.

The Clerk continued and concluded the reading of section forty-five, as follows:

SEC. 45. And be it further enacted, That any spirits or other merchandise may be removed from bonded warehouse, for the purpose of being exported, upon the order of the superintendent of exports for the port whence the spirits are to be exported; and such order shall state the port to which such spirits are to be shipped, and the name of the vessel, and also the number of proof gallons, and the marks of the packages or casks, which shall be taken from and shall agree with the return of said spirits made by the inspector of the warehouse; and such spirits or other merchandise shall be branded "U. S. bonded warehouse, for export," and shall be put on board of the vessel in or by which they are to be exported, by an officer under direction of the superintendent of exports, and placed under the supervision of an officer of the customs, after a bond shall have been given in such form and containing such conditions as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, with one or more sureties, to be approved, as to the sufficiency of the sureties, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may direct. And such bond shall be canceled upon the presentation of the proper certificate that said spirits have been landed at the port named in said bond, or at any other port without the jurisdiction of the United States, or upon satisfactory proof that after shipment the spirits have been lost. And at any port where there shall be no superintendent of exports, all the duties and services required of superintendents of exports and drawback shall devolve upon and be performed by the collector of internal revenue designated to have charge of exportations.

Mr. MORRILL. In section twenty-nine, which was reserved last night upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, the Committee of Ways and Means have concluded to make such amendments as will not prevent alcohol from being distilled with whisky or other spirits. I therefore move to amend by striking out in line eight of that section the words "or alcohol," and inserting before the word "ether" the word "or;" so that the clause will read:

And no still, boiler, or other vessel shall be used as aforesaid in any building or on any premises where beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other fermented liquors, vinegar, or other, are manufactured or produced, or where sugars or sirups are refined, or where liquors of any description are retailed, or any other business is carried on.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move also to amend the forty-fourth section by striking out, after the word "packages" in the fifty-fourth line, the words "for export;" so that the clause will read:

Or for the purpose of being rectified, or redistilled, canned, or put into other packages, under such rules and regulations and the execution of such bonds or other security as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend section twenty-five by inserting after the word "thereof" in line thirty-six the following:

And such assessed penalties and fines when recovered shall be distributed according to law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend section thirty-five by inserting after the words "proof thereof" in line thirteen, the following:

And the number of gallons sold, with the proof thereof and the name and place of business of the person to whom sold.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I desire to move several amendments to section twenty-nine, which has been reserved. I move, in the first place, to amend by striking out in the fourth line of that section the words "beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other fermented liquors." It may be, Mr. Chairman, that there are abundant reasons for this provision of the bill, which I suppose is intended as a precautionary measure for the prevention of frauds upon the revenue. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the investigations upon this subject to know to what extent that reason may apply or be a good one.

It seems to me, after having adopted the very perfect system of machinery for the prevention of fraud of inspectors, vats, receivers, and all that, it will scarcely lie in the mouth of the committee or the Government to say it will be impossible to prevent fraud upon the Treasury in cases where a still may be kept in the same establishment with a brewery. I know from my limited observation of the matter that in some of the breweries in the West, and I presume it is so elsewhere, it is necessary, in order to save matter which becomes to some extent damaged in certain kinds of weather or by some unskillful manipulations, to use it for purposes of distillation. Hence, in most of the breweries they have a small distilling apparatus with which they use up this matter which is unfit for brewing and would otherwise go to waste. I think, therefore, a serious loss will be incurred by these brewers if they are not permitted to use this apparatus. I do not believe it is necessary to make this prohibition for the purpose of protecting the revenue of the country. Knowing that some of my constituents have this machinery and would suffer loss by any such prohibition, I have deemed it proper to submit this amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin will not prevail. I may safely say a majority of the cases of fraud during last year have been in establishments where stills were kept in connection with beer breweries. Sour beer can be manufactured into spirits, and a little still may be concealed among the machinery of a large lager-beer brewery. These stills are there and it is hard to get at them. The system of inspection for spirits does not apply to fermented liquors, and therefore if we allow little stills to be set up in the mass of machinery in a lager-beer brewery, it will be impossible to reach them. It may be a small loss to the parties, but a very small loss, because they can always sell this sour beer to the distilleries. If these words are stricken out it will seriously impair the efficiency of the law.

Mr. PAINE. I would suggest to my colleague to strike out the same words in line seven. I corroborate the statement made by him in respect to the practice in our State. I believe there is no dispute about it. The practice has grown up in breweries, numerous in our part of the world, of having these stills to save damaged stuff from going to loss; and the adoption of this provision will work serious injury to many who are engaged in these breweries. It seems to me there ought to be some arrangement by which honest brewers should be permitted to continue to use these stills. It will enable them to turn to account what would otherwise be wasted. I suggest the Committee of Ways and Means may devise a system of inspection to cover the case.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will look at the concluding paragraph of the fifty-fifth section he will see there has been an allowance made of seven and a half per cent. for the purpose of covering the loss they may incur by the waste of sour beer. It need not be wasted, as it can be sold to the distillers. We have preferred to make that allowance rather than to let these stills remain in these breweries. If the amendment prevails then the whole system of inspection to distilleries will be applied to the breweries.

Mr. COBB's amendment was rejected.

Mr. COBB. I move to strike out the same words in line seven.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is not a sub-district in the United States where the deputy assessor, if he is fit for his business, does not know every single brewery which has a distillery attached and the amount of liquor distilled. I cannot see why a man cannot be a distiller and a brewer as well as a lawyer and a claim agent.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend on page 152, line fifteen, by inserting at the commencement of it the words "or in any dwelling-house."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I understood the chairman of the committee to declare that they were willing to make an amendment by which alcohol could be distilled in a distillery where they distill spirits. They have made an amendment which they declared to have that end and effect. Now, I think the language is ambiguous; therefore I propose that it shall be explicitly stated in the third line of the twenty-third section.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. We are on the twenty-ninth section, and I suggest that we had better finish it.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to offer it to section twenty-three.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let it be read.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Section twenty-three reads as follows:

That every person, firm, or corporation who distills or manufactures spirits, or who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash, for the distillation or the production of spirits, shall be deemed a distiller under this act.

I propose to amend by adding after the word "spirits," the words "or alcohol by continuous distillation from grain."

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move an amendment on page 14, after line one hundred and twenty-two, which I send to the desk. This paragraph was reserved.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

And in addition to other provisions of law whenever fraud is alleged as to any list or return, and the party charged with fraud shall make denial of the same in writing and shall demand a hearing thereon, and shall tender to the assessor of the proper district a bond with two or more sureties payable to the United States, in a sum not less than double the amount of the tax, together with the penalties assessed because of such alleged fraud, and conditioned that such person will abide by the orders and judgments of the court before whom such case shall be heard, and will pay whatever sum may be adjudged against him for tax or penalty, or both, and also all costs that may be adjudged against him. And upon the approval of such bond by such assessor it shall be the duty of such assessor to transmit to the district attorney of the United States for the district within which such collection district is situated all the papers in the case; and it shall also be the duty of said district attorney to immediately institute in the proper circuit or district court of the United States a suit for the recovery of the tax, penalties, or forfeitures assessed or incurred because of such alleged fraud, and the same shall be prosecuted to judgment as in other cases, and such cases shall have precedence over other civil cases on the calendar of such court. And until final judgment all proceedings by the assessor and collector shall be suspended; and in case of seizure of property, the property seized shall be released upon the approval of the bond herein provided for; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect in any manner proceedings by indictment as provided by law.

Mr. ALLISON. This provision is inserted to meet the objection to the section made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is the same provision offered by him with some additions and erasures.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. I offer the following amendment to the same section:

On page 13, line ninety-three, after the word "proper," insert the words "not inconsistent with the provisions of existing laws for the punishment of contempt."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I wish to call the attention of the committee to an amendment which was offered to this section when we had it under consideration. It was offered by myself, to incorporate in this section the provision of a subsequent section in regard to the payment of witness fees on preliminary examinations by assessors, and the payment of mileage to assessors in such cases. It would come in immediately preceding the amendment last adopted. I move, after the word "purpose," in line one hundred and twenty-two, to insert the following:

When the assessor is required or compelled to travel to make examinations, as provided in this section, he shall be allowed mileage and his necessary and proper traveling expenses. The costs for the attendance and mileage of witnesses shall be taxed by the assessor and paid by the delinquent parties, or otherwise by the collector of the district on certificate of the assessor, at the rates usually allowed in said district for witnesses in district courts of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. No objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Kentucky. I desire to offer an amendment to section thirty-six.

The CHAIRMAN. That section has been passed.

Mr. RANDALL, of Kentucky. I ask the unanimous consent of the committee to go back to that section.

Mr. ALLISON. I must object to going back.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to strike out on pages 117 and 118, beginning at line twenty-six hundred and ninety-nine, the following:

That it shall not be lawful to record any instrument, document, or paper required by law to be stamped, unless a stamp or stamps of the proper amount shall have been affixed, and canceled in the manner required by law; and the record of any such instrument, upon which the proper stamp or stamps aforesaid shall not have been affixed and canceled as aforesaid, shall be utterly void, and shall not be used in evidence.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

It shall be unlawful, from and after the passage of this act, to record any instrument, document, deed, mortgage, or other paper required or authorized by law to be recorded, unless such stamp or stamps as shall be required thereon by law shall be affixed thereto and duly canceled; and the record of any such instrument, or the record of any instrument heretofore recorded, upon which the proper stamp or stamps aforesaid shall not have been affixed and canceled as required by law, shall be invalid and of no effect, except as constructive notice of the interest acquired by the purchaser, grantee, or mortgagee of any real estate interest under any contract, deed, or mortgage which may have been recorded without being properly stamped, as provided by law; and neither the original instrument nor the record thereof shall be used in evidence for any other purpose until the original instrument or a certified copy thereof, if the original shall be lost, shall have been duly stamped, so as to entitle it to be recorded under the provisions of this act or the act hereby amended; and when the original instrument, or a certified copy thereof, as aforesaid, shall have been duly stamped, so as to entitle the same to be recorded, shall be presented to the clerk, register, or other officer having charge of the original record, it shall be the duty of such officer, upon the payment of the fee legally chargeable for the recording thereof, at the option of the party presenting such instrument, to make a new record thereof or to note upon the original record the fact that the error or omission in the stamping of said original instrument has been duly corrected pursuant to law; and after such record or entry the original instrument or such certified copy or the record thereof may be used in all courts and places in the same manner and with like effect as if the instrument had been legally entitled to record when first recorded: Provided, That no right acquired in good faith before the proper stamping of such instrument or copy, and the recording or entry aforesaid, shall be affected or impaired by such correction of the stamping aforesaid.

I offer that amendment for the purpose of correcting what I believe would operate unjustly in many cases unless the correction shall be made. There are many cases in which conveyances have been made and recorded which have not been properly stamped according to law. It has been done in good faith and without intent to defraud the Government.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The one hundred and fifty-second section of the existing law provides that an unstamped recorded instrument shall be of no effect whatever. The amendment of the gentleman proposes to go back and constitute all of these unstamped records constructive notice of what they contain. Now, that is all they could be as recorded instruments if they had been properly stamped; so that all the interests which may have been acquired prior to the passage of this act, whether in good faith or not, are covered by the provision in the first part of this section declaring that all of these unstamped deeds shall be constructive notice to all persons of their contents. This amendment would be a great deal worse than the existing law.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to say a word on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will say his word now.

Mr. DAVIS. What I wish to accomplish by my amendment is simply to protect these parties who have acted in good faith in placing these unstamped instruments on record; and not allow a person, finding by an examination of the record that there is an instrument upon record which has accidentally been illegally recorded, to avail himself of this act which we attempt here to pass to defeat the title of an honest and innocent party.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The case the gentleman now puts, if such a case should occur, would not be constructive notice to the party who should examine the record, but it would be actual notice by bringing that fact to the knowledge of the parties. Now, the difficulty with the amendment of the gentleman is that instead of providing for a case of the kind he has stated he provides that these unstamped instruments shall be constructive notice by being upon the record. Now, if the gentleman desires to provide that actual notice of the existence of the interest embraced in one of these unstamped instruments shall save the party holding it from any injury by a subsequent purchaser having knowledge of the illegality of the record, that is a very different thing. But when he begins by providing that these cases shall all be covered by constructive notice, then he is trenching upon ground that we should not trench upon, for it may interfere with thousands of titles.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.]—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] has one half minute left.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I will take some other opportunity.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS.] The portion he proposes to strike out is substantially the provision of the existing law. And there is nothing whatever in his amendment which will really require instruments to be stamped, because the same provision which makes these unstamped instruments void, except when constructive notice is given, will authorize any party to place on record an instrument not stamped, provided he afterward places a stamp on the original; and in the meantime the document so illegally recorded is constructive notice to every man who may purchase the property. So that in effect the unstamped instrument so recorded would have the same effect as though properly stamped and recorded.

Therefore it is that we must have a provision by which the revenue will be protected. And in order to protect the revenue it is necessary to provide that these instruments recorded without being stamped shall be absolutely void and of no effect. The Committee of Ways and Means have prepared an amendment, providing that parties who have neglected to stamp these instruments through inadvertence or some fault not criminal, may upon a proper showing to the collector of the district still stamp the original instrument and place it upon record. And in case the original is lost, we have added a provision which authorizes the stamping of the copy of the instrument.

Mr. THAYER. The gentleman will allow me to correct what evidently was an inadvertence in the statement of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.] The proviso he refers to was not prepared by the Committee of Ways and Means, but was offered by myself at the last session.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, I do not want to take any special credit to the committee.

Mr. THAYER. I only desire to have the history of that legislation correctly stated. The Committee of Ways and Means opposed my proviso very strongly, but I carried it in the House over their opposition.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] if that proviso was stamped when he placed it on record, for it is notice to everybody. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. The committee have already adopted some of the provisions contained in the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS.] But unfortunately he does not propose to insert them in the proper place; therefore we propose to insert the provision so as to relate to section one hundred and fifty-eight of the present law, in the paragraph relating to that subject, instead of where the gentleman from New York proposes. Therefore, I hope the amendment proposed by him will be voted down, when the committee will propose the amendment I have indicated.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I now move to insert in the paragraph relating to section one hundred and fifty-eight of the present law, after the words, "And provided further, That where it shall appear to said collector upon oath, or otherwise, to his satisfaction, that any such instrument has not been duly stamped at the time of making or issuing the same, by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or urgent necessity, and without any willful design to defraud the United States of the stamp duty, or to evade or delay the payment thereof, then and in such case, if such instrument," the words "or if the original be lost a copy thereof duly certified by the officer having charge of real estate records in the proper town or county."

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I would like to ask my colleague one question; how can you obtain a certified copy of an instrument which has not been recorded and which has been lost?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course you cannot have a certified copy unless the instrument has been recorded; but an instrument may be lost after being recorded.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to say to the gentleman from Iowa that my purpose has been to protect parties in those cases where papers have already been recorded without being stamped, when the parties have acted in good faith.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. For the purpose of saying a word or two, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. As I understand this provision, in the first place, the recorder is prohibited from recording an instrument unless it has been properly stamped. Now, then, how can you have a certified copy of an instrument which has never been recorded and has been lost? You first prohibit the recording of the instrument and then provide for a certified copy of the instrument which has been lost or destroyed. Here is a sort of inconsistency which I do not comprehend. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LONGYEAR. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after "proper recording officer of the county or township" the words "or otherwise duly proven to the satisfaction of the collector."

Mr. ALLISON. I accept that amendment as a modification of my amendment.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend by inserting after line twenty-eight hundred and thirty-seven, on page 123, the following:

And when the original instrument or a certified copy thereof, as aforesaid, shall have been duly stamped so as to entitle the same to be recorded, and shall be presented to the clerk, register, recorder, or other officer having charge of the original record, it shall be the duty of such officer, upon the payment of the fee legally chargeable for the recording thereof, at the option of the party presenting such instrument, to make a new record thereof or to note upon the original record the fact that the error or omission in the stamping of said original instrument has been corrected pursuant to law; and after such record or entry the original instrument or such certified copy or the record thereof may be used in all courts and places in the same manner and with like effect as if the instrument had been legally entitled to record when first recorded: Provided, That no right acquired in good faith before the stamping of such instrument or copy thereof and the record thereof, as herein provided, shall in any manner be affected by such stamping as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend by inserting at the end of line twenty-five hundred and ninety-six, on page 113, the following:

Provided, That no penalty shall be assessed upon any person for such neglect or refusal, or for making or rendering a false or fraudulent return, except after reasonable notice of the time and place of hearing, to be regulated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, so as to give the person charged an opportunity to be heard, and subject to the right of giving bond and staying proceedings for the purpose of a hearing in a circuit or district court, as provided in the fourteenth section of this act.

This amendment simply makes this paragraph conform to the fourteenth section as amended. I think it must commend itself to the judgment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I move to amend by inserting after the amendment just adopted the following:

And provided further, That no prosecutions for fraud or wrongful evasion of any of the provisions of this act shall be commenced until after the person accused or his agent or attorney shall have been notified in writing by the person charged with such prosecution of the offense of which he is charged, nor until after he shall have had opportunity to pay the penalty and other liability of the Government for which such prosecution is authorized: Provided, however, Such notice shall not be required where such prosecutor shall be satisfied that such notice would defeat the collection of the demands due the Government.

Mr. Chairman, cases have occurred in which large numbers of expensive prosecutions have been instituted by informers upon speculation, these suits being for the inadvertent omission of a two-cent stamp, or even some of them where there was no omission at all. Hundreds of the best citizens have been sued, in cases within my knowledge, in one day and in one court and for a two-cent omission, or alleged omission. The first notice these citizens had of their suits was the visit of the United States marshals to them with a writ; and they were compelled either to litigate with the United States at an expense, even where the defense succeeded, greater than the fine, or else they pay all the costs. These suits may be thus resorted to on speculation, and to put fees into the pockets of officers, and in flagrant violation of the rights of the best citizens. Why not give them an opportunity to pay all the Government demands before they are sued?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman whether it would not answer his purpose to let this apply to cases where there have been omissions to affix stamps. It seems to me the amendment would work detrimentally to the Government. There may be cases where it may be necessary before notice to seize the property.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. In order to cover that I make the prosecutor the judge of the necessity. There can be no danger in permitting the man to have the discretion to whom is confided the charge of the interests of the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I fear that the prosecutor would be construed strictly to mean the United States district attorney. We have cases arising in all parts of the district, and they would be subject to the delay of hunting up the district attorney.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I shall be glad to accept any suggestion from the gentleman from Iowa. I used the word "prosecutor" because it occurred to my own mind.

Mr. MORRILL. As the amendment is offered I am entirely opposed to it, and I hope it will not be adopted. It applies to all sorts of fraud that may be committed under this bill. The gentleman strikes at the officers in whom he has no confidence. If they are guilty of what he suspects, they ought to be summarily dismissed, and yet he proposes to intrust these same officers with the discretion as to whether they shall commence suit without notice or not. He first provides these officers who get up these prosecutions to put money into their pockets, shall give notice to the parties, and then he provides that they may do just as they are mind to about it. He also provides that the party shall first have an opportunity to pay his liability and penalty. The party must have had an opportunity to pay his liability, and if he only had paid it, he would be subject to no penalty. If the gentleman would apply it to stamps I think it would be far less objectionable. As it is now I am decidedly opposed to it.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I wish to make a suggestion. In the first place, let me say there is nothing in my amendment directed against or which can apply against the fidelity of any officer. I do not understand what the gentleman means by that.

Mr. ALLISON. We have provided in another part of this bill that no prosecution shall be commenced for fraud except on the direction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. These subordinate officers are not permitted to commence suit without the assent of the Commissioner.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. How broad is that?

Mr. ALLISON. It applies to all prosecutions.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. In order that I may look at that provision and have an opportunity to consult with the Committee of Ways and Means, I withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. THAYER. In order to correct an incongruity in the bill as it now stands, I desire to move an amendment in reference to these inspectors. I think some distinction should be made between the punishment of officers of the Government who may conspire to commit fraud against the Government and the punishment of others. They should have the distinction of having more punishment than any others. I will ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I propose to add to section forty-six.

The Clerk read as follows:

And any inspector, assistant inspector, or officer temporarily in charge of any distillery, under this act, who shall conspire with the proprietor of any distillery, or with any other person or persons, to defraud the United States of the revenue or tax arising from distilled spirits, or any part thereof, or who shall, with intent to defraud the United States of such revenue or tax, place any false or fraudulent mark upon any cask or package, or make any false or fraudulent entry, certificate, or return, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not less than two nor more than five years, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. THAYER. It will be observed that this covers all cases of fraud on the part of the inspector; and it will be necessary, in order to make the amendment complete, that the amendment which was adopted last evening should be stricken out.

Mr. CONKLING. I oppose the amendment pro forma—I have nothing to say against it in fact—for the purpose of making a statement in behalf of my colleague [Mr. WINFIELD] as a member of the Committee of Ways and Means. He and his district are interested very much in section thirty-eight, which has been passed over, inasmuch as there are in his vicinity a large number of small distillers engaged in the business exclusively of manufacturing whisky, or apple-jack, whichever it may be called, from apples. He is now and has been for several days confined to his bed by illness, and therefore has been disappointed in his desire to continue in the House an effort which he made very zealously in the Committee of Ways and Means to have these small distilleries exempted from the regulations in reference to bonded warehouses and inspectors. It is idle of course, even if we were so disposed, to attempt at this stage of the bill to get a vote favorably upon his proposition, but I deem it due to my colleague to state to the House that having been very zealous, and indeed I might say somewhat pertinacious, in the committee, to get an exemption in favor of these small distilleries, he has been prevented by illness from coming here and making the effort which he no doubt would have made sufficiently pointed, and for which he would have assigned sufficient reason to have given it very great strength in the House even if he had not been able to make it successful.

The amendment offered by Mr. THAYER was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. My amendment being adopted, it is necessary to amend on page 167 by striking out all after the word "provided" in line thirty-six down to and including the word "court" in line forty, as follows:

And any inspector who shall knowingly put upon any such cask or package any false or fraudulent marks shall, on conviction, be imprisoned one year, and be liable to a fine of $500, in the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish to make an amendment on page 171, section forty-four.

Mr. MORRILL. I must object, because I desire to get through the bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I have been watching here for hours to get this amendment in. I do not know how the Clerk could get so far along. If I cannot go back to offer it I shall have to offer it as an independent section.

Mr. GARFIELD. Do that.

Mr. MORRILL. We will hear it read.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I suppose the chairman of the committee will object to it, but I think the House will not. I propose to add at the end of section forty-four the following:

And in all cases arising under the act of which this is amendatory, the commissions allowed on the articles manufactured shall inure to the benefit of the officers authorized by said acts in the inspection districts where said articles are manufactured, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MORRILL. We have already passed that section and made a provision on that subject.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I want to try the sense of the House upon it.

Mr. GARFIELD. We have already acted upon the section.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Then I ask consent to offer another amendment if the House has acted injudiciously or without consideration.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman has of course a right to offer an independent section. I must object to going back.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman might indulge me as he has other gentlemen.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 47. And be it further enacted, That any person owning any distilled spirits intended for sale, manufactured prior to the time when this act takes effect, exceeding fifty gallons altogether, shall notify in writing the collector of the district wherein such spirits may be stored, held, or owned, within sixty days thereafter, to gauge and prove the same; and upon the receipt of said notice the collector shall cause said spirits to be gauged and proved, and the casks or packages containing the same to be marked by the inspector in the following manner:—
Manufactured prior to — 185—. — Inspector — District. Inspected —, 186—. And no spirits so manufactured, held, or owned, shall be gauged, proved, or marked in any cistern or other stationary vessel, but shall be gauged, proved, and marked only in barrels, casks, or packages in which the same shall have been placed; and the quantity held in leach-tubs shall be estimated by the inspector, and, when drawn off into packages, shall be gauged and marked as herein provided. Upon the receipt of the return the collector shall immediately forward to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a copy thereof; and any person holding or owning such spirits, and refusing or neglecting to notify the collector, as in this section provided, shall forfeit the same and pay the sum of $500, to be collected in the manner provided by law for the collection of other penalties. No distilled spirits on which the tax has been paid shall be stored or allowed to remain on any distillery premises, under the penalty of a forfeiture of all spirits so found.

Mr. O'NEILL. I offer the following, to come in at the end of the section:

Provided, That wherever, under the provisions of this act, an inspection may be made by any officer authorized by law, that said officer shall give to the party whose premises he may have inspected a certificate of the fact of the inspection having been made, the time of the day at which it was made, with a statement thereon that the provisions of the tax laws have been fully complied with or violated, as the case may be.

I desire to say a word before the vote is taken. I have endeavored to get this amendment adopted in some shape several times. In the first place I offered an amendment which, upon reflection, did not meet the case, as was said by the chairman of the committee. I then offered it in another form, which came nearer to what I desired to accomplish. Now, it is a positive fact that all distillers and brewers are subjected to frequent visitation by the inspectors of revenue, and what I desire is this: that wherever the inspector has made an inspection a certificate of the same shall be given to the distiller or brewer. He is entitled to it. The inspectors come upon his premises and put him to the trouble of showing his books and exhibiting the number of barrels of whisky or of beer. Everything is shown to the officer, and then in an hour afterward, perhaps, another inspector comes along and demands the same thing. I think the law should require each of the inspectors to give a certificate that an inspection has been made, stating the time of day at which it was made, so that when a subsequent inspector comes he will be able to judge whether it is necessary for him to make an inspection.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman manifests so much perseverance in the face of so many adverse decisions that I am astonished. But to show the utter want of necessity for the provision I will state that we have but one inspector in a district. I trust the committee will preserve the symmetry of its record and vote the amendment down now, as it has done in all previous cases.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert, at the end of section forty-seven, the following:

And all spirit after being removed from the original package in which it was inspected and gauged into other package for purpose of rectification, redistillation, or change of proof, shall again be inspected and gauged and properly branded, and the absence of an inspector's brand shall be taken and held as sufficient cause or evidence upon which any spirits so found may be forfeited.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I now move to amend by adding, at the end of section forty-seven, the following:

And in all cases arising under this act and the acts of which this is amendatory, the commission allowed on the articles manufactured, shall inure to the benefit of the officers authorized by said acts in the respective districts where said articles are manufactured, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

I now desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MORRILL,] or some member of that committee, in what particular the bill has been amended so as to provide for this.

Mr. GARFIELD. In this way: that where the spirits are produced in one district and shipped in bond to another district the commission is to be divided equally between the assessor and collector of the two districts. The law of 1863 gave it to the assessor of the district where it was produced; the next law gave it to the collector of the district to which it was shipped. Each party complained of it; and we have divided it between them.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I offer this amendment for the purpose of preventing injustice to a most meritorious class of officers; that is, the officers residing in the districts where this article is produced. The proposition of the committee is to divide these commissions between the officers in the districts where this article is manufactured and the officers in the districts where the article is sold.

Now, I say that it is due to the officers in the districts where this article is manufactured that they shall have the exclusive commissions arising from the sale of this article. They have the exclusive responsibility and labor connected with this article except the simple responsibility of taking care of the money after it has been paid in when the article is sold from the bonded warehouse. Now, it is unjust that these officers should be deprived of these commissions. If any payment should be made to the officers making the sale from the bonded warehouse, then let it be added; but do not take these commissions from these officers who have all the trouble and responsibility. See how unjust it would be to carry in force the provision which the committee recommends. Take the district in which I reside; it pays one third of all the revenue derived from the State of Indiana. And in doing so that revenue is almost all derived from the manufacture of high-wines. It is within twenty-five or thirty miles of Cincinnati, and these high-wines may be transported to the city of Cincinnati, and there placed in bond; and when that is done, as it has sometimes been done, and as it may become the interest of the manufacturers to do, the officers of the district in which Cincinnati is located reap the benefit of one half the services of the officers in the district in which I reside. I say it is manifest injustice to the officers of my district. The officers in Cincinnati do nothing but merely collect the money which is to be paid before the spirits go out of bond and are delivered.

Now, I appeal to this House to correct this injustice. Take the case of the officers in my district. If these distillers choose to remove this spirit in bond to Cincinnati or to New York, and sell it there, the officers there will get one half of the commissions for the services performed in the fourth congressional district of Indiana. And my argument applies to other districts in the same way. Now, I say this is unjust. I think if the House will look at this matter, when they come to understand the effect of it to be as I have stated—and I have represented it as I understand it—they will reverse their action, and confine these commissions to the officers of the districts where these spirits are manufactured. But that is not all of which I complain. In the statistical tables showing the amounts manufactured in these districts all the whisky transported in bond and sold out of the district where it is manufactured goes to the credit of the district where it is sold; and the district where it is manufactured gets no credit in the statistics of the country for the manufacture of this article. I say this is unjust, and I hope the House will correct or reverse its action on this matter.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the provision of the law upon which we have already passed may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Provided further, That in calculating the commissions of assessors and collectors of internal revenue in districts whence cotton or distilled spirits are shipped in bond to be sold in another district, one half the amount of tax received on the quantity of cotton or spirits so shipped shall be added to the amount on which the commissions of such assessors and collectors are calculated; and a corresponding amount shall be deducted from the amount on which the commissions of the assessors and collectors of the districts to which such cotton or spirits are shipped are calculated."

Mr. MORRILL. Upon the first enactment of these revenue laws the commissions upon duties from spirits collected in other parts of the country were allowed to the collectors in the districts from whence the liquors came.

That was found to be a subject of very great complaint. The collectors in other parts of the country, having to give bonds, and having charge of the money, being required to pay it over, and being responsible for it as well as looking after the liquors upon their arrival within their district—doing, as was contended, much more than the collectors of the district where the spirits were manufactured—made such representations to Congress that the provision of the law in that respect was changed. From that time the law has continued in its present form, allowing the collectors the commission upon the spirits in the places where the duties are collected. But at this session the subject has again been reconsidered; and although the party where the spirits are distilled will have still less labor under this bill than heretofore, the Committee of Ways and Means have concluded to report a compromise and to divide the sum, allowing each collector one half. Certainly this is fair. No more ought to be asked. It is much better, also, for the Government. Even as the law has existed, it has been better for the Government, for the reason that these collectors in large districts to which the spirits go do not thereby have their compensation increased above the minimum rate. Therefore, I think the proposition as it now stands is correct. If the gentleman's amendment should be adopted, it will be seen, of course, that it will create the necessity for going back and revising what the committee has already adopted. I trust the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to amend the amendment so as to provide a salary of $5,000 per year for each collector and assessor. The distinguished chairman of the committee has failed to present anything to change my views in regard to the justice of the proposition which I have advocated. I desire now to ask the chairman of the committee whether this high wine, this whisky, before it is removed from one district into the other, does not have to go into bond in the district where it is manufactured.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir; and the collectors take the bonds. That is about all they do.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Ay; but the gentleman has told us that the collector who disposes of the liquor has to go through the formality and incur the responsibility of taking a bond; and that for this reason his duties are so much more onerous and involve greater liability than the duties of the collector in the district where the article is manufactured. Sir, I hold that all the important and responsible duties are performed before the liquor is taken from the district where it is manufactured. The mere matter of making the sale amounts to comparatively nothing.

It does look to me as though the object of the proposition, as contained in the bill, were to build up and foster and protect the office of collector in the larger districts, so as to make these positions offices of magnitude and of profit, while the smaller collectors in the local districts are to be stripped down to comparatively nothing. It is provided that the collectors, after the pay reaches a certain amount, shall receive one eighth of one per cent. over and above the other commissions. There is no limitation in this respect. The committee have failed, as I understand, to report any limitation to the salaries of collectors. They have fixed a limit to the salaries of assessors but they have provided no limit with regard to the salaries of collectors. Under the bill, as it now stands, these wines are permitted to go from the local districts to the large commercial cities, such as Cincinnati, New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and in those the collectors reap the fruits of the labors of the men in the smaller districts, whose salaries are reduced in some instances to a mere pittance. I desire that these officers in the smaller districts shall have such salaries as will secure the services of qualified and responsible men. By the bill the salaries of the assessors are limited to $5,000, but, as I have said, there is no limit with regard to the pay of the collectors. This bill, with its present provisions, will have the effect of building up the office and swelling the salary of the collectors in the large commercial cities, while the collectors in the smaller district receive comparatively small compensation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FARQUHAR. I modify my amendment in order to say a word. I do not desire to weary the patience of the House. I know the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is anxious, as we all are, to get this bill out of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. He was not particularly courteous to me when I endeavored to submit my amendment, but perhaps I had better not indulge in any retort for that. Now, I think the chairman has not presented any argument, nor do I believe any argument can be presented, to sustain the proposition that it is right to divide these commissions between the officers who perform the labor, the officers who have the responsibility, the officers in whose districts these high-wines are manufactured, and the collectors in the large cities in order that you may swell up their salaries. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not want to consume time about this matter. The Committee of Ways and Means thoroughly considered this subject. They heard all parties. If there is any injustice it is not against the places where the articles are distilled. I have no doubt the mind of the House is made up. Unless we have the vote now I shall move that the committee rise, for the purpose of closing the debate.

Mr. FARQUHAR demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. FARQUHAR and GARFIELD were appointed.

The committee was divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 34, noes 70.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 48. And be it further enacted, That all boilers, stills, or other vessels, tools, and implements used in distilling or rectifying, and forfeited under any of the provisions of this act, and all condemned material, together with any engine or other machinery connected therewith, and all empty barrels, and all grain or other material suitable for distillation, shall, under the direction of the court in which the forfeiture is recovered, be sold at public auction, and the proceeds thereof, after deducting the expenses of sale, shall be disposed of according to law; and all fines and forfeitures incurred or imposed by virtue of this act shall be sued for and recovered as by law provided, with costs of suit; and one moiety of the fines, forfeitures, and assessed penalties recovered shall be for the use of the United States, and the other moiety thereof to the use of the person or persons, to be ascertained by the judgment of the court, who shall be in fact the cause of any such fine, penalty, or forfeiture being adjudged or recovered. And all spirits or spirituous liquors which may be forfeited under the provisions of this act, unless herein otherwise provided, shall be disposed of by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct. The term "person," as used in this act, shall be held to include persons, firm, body-corporate, company, or association.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out from the word "suit," in line twelve, down to and including the word "recovered," in line seventeen.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move the following amendment:

That in all cases of seizure and suit under the provisions of this act and the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, or any supplement or supplements thereto, a sale shall be ordered by the proper authority, the United States marshal of the district in which such sale shall be ordered shall be authorized to employ an auctioneer and to pay him out of the proceeds of such sale a commission not exceeding two and one half per cent. on the gross amount of such proceeds.

Mr. Chairman, this was offered some two or three days ago, but was reserved, and I hope it will now be adopted. In many courts the judges allow these commissions. They allow them in Massachusetts, Maryland, and New York, as well as in other States. A regular, skilled auctioneer will get much better prices for goods than that have been seized and sold.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I think he is mistaken in the fact of that percentage being allowed in Massachusetts.

Mr. STEVENS. What does the marshal get now?

Mr. O'NEILL. I do not know whether he gets anything under the provisions of the present law. I know that the marshal of the eastern district of Pennsylvania has not received pay even for watching the goods after they were seized.

Mr. STEVENS. Does he not get his fees as in other cases?

Mr. O'NEILL. I understand not. I have asked for this information at the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and have not been satisfied. I propose that there shall be a specific law on the subject.

Mr. STEVENS. I think he should get his fees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment in order to finish what I have to say on the subject. I understand that the officers engaged in the district and circuit courts in proceedings instituted by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue get nothing for their services. Goods are seized by the marshals and are held and carefully watched, and then they are delivered upon settlement here at the Internal Revenue Bureau, so that the marshal does not get a cent of compensation. This is the case to such an extent that the office of marshal for the eastern district of Pennsylvania is almost worthless. I offered a bill some weeks ago for the purpose of increasing the general fees of the marshals, which I hope will soon be reported to the House and adopted. This business of the revenue department is thrust upon this officer; he is responsible and his sureties are responsible, and yet he frequently does not get compensation for his services, depending entirely in all cases upon the allowance of the judge of the court.

Mr. ALLISON. I would like to accommodate my friend from the Philadelphia district, but I understand that in his district there is no difficulty in securing the services of a marshal who will be content to receive the very large fees now allowed by the fee bill to marshals.

Mr. O'NEILL. Let me interrupt the gentleman for a moment. It is no rule by which to judge an officer that he seems to think he does not get sufficient compensation. My idea is, that we should at least, while we have a competent official, provide him with a fair and just payment for the performance of his duties.

Mr. ALLISON. If this property is sold under an order or judgment of the court the marshal receives the same fees that he receives in all other cases, and there is no reason why he should receive special compensation in this class of cases more than in any others. If the property is sold under proceedings in the nature of distraint, the collector is allowed five per cent. for the purpose of covering those expenses. The extra compensation now asked for is not allowed in any other case, and I do not see why it should be allowed in any case to the marshal of the circuit or district court of the United States. I do not know what the rule may be in particular districts, but I undertake to say that if the judge in any district allows the marshals to charge the Government of the United States two and a half per cent. commission for these sales he does what he ought not to do. I think, therefore, that instead of adopting this amendment we ought to correct the law in relation to the judges who allow these fees.

Mr. O'NEILL. My friend from Iowa mistakes, I fear, my proposition. He seems to think the Government must pay this commission. This is not so. It is to be paid out of the results of the sale, not to the marshal, but to the auctioneer.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pending paragraph of the special order terminate in one second after the committee shall resume the consideration of the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. O'NEILL. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question recurred upon Mr. O'NEILL's original amendment, and being put, the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. On page 175, in line eleven, I move to insert after the word "shall" the words "after demand of payment first made upon the party liable, his agent, or attorney;" so that the clause will read:

That all boilers, stills, or other vessels, tools, and implements used in distilling or rectifying, and forfeited under any of the provisions of this act, and all condemned material, together with any engine, or other machinery connected therewith, and all empty barrels, and all grain or other material suitable for distillation, shall, under the direction of the court in which the forfeiture is recovered, be sold at public auction, and the proceeds thereof, after deducting the expenses of sale, shall be disposed of according to law; and all fines and forfeitures incurred or imposed by virtue of this act shall, after demand of payment first made upon the party liable, his agent, or attorney, be sued for and recovered as by law provided, with costs of suit, &c.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that the provision we have inserted in section forty-one accomplishes all that is necessary.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 49. And be it further enacted, That every brewer shall file with the assessor of the assessment district in which he shall design to carry on his business a notice in writing, stating therein the name of the person, company, corporation, or firm, and the names of the members of any company or firm making such application, together with the place or places of residence of such person or persons, and a description of the premises on which the brewery is situated, and of his or their title thereto, and the name or names of the owner or owners thereof; and also the whole quantity of malt liquors annually made and sold at the brewery for two years last preceding the date of such application.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend that section by inserting in line two, before the word "assessor;" the word "assistant;" so that it will read, "that every brewer shall file with the assistant assessor," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In line five I move to insert before the word "company" the word "such."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In line six I move to insert after the word "firm" the words "making such application."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In line twelve I move to strike out the words "such application" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "filing such notice."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 50. And be it further enacted, That every brewer shall execute a bond to the United States, to be approved by the collector of the district, in a sum equal to twice the amount of tax which in the opinion of the assessor said brewer will be liable to pay during any one month, which bond shall be renewed on the 1st day of May in each year, and shall be conditioned that he will pay, or cause to be paid, as herein provided, the tax required by law on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other fermented liquors aforesaid made by him, or for him, before the same is sold or removed for consumption or sale, except as hereinafter provided; and that he will keep, or cause to be kept a book in the manner and for the purposes hereinafter specified, and which shall be open to inspection by the proper officers as by law required, and that he will in all respects faithfully comply without fraud or evasion with all requirements of law relating to the manufacture and sale of any malt liquors before mentioned: Provided, That no brewer shall be required to pay a special tax as a wholesale dealer by reason of selling at wholesale, at a place other than his brewery, malt liquors manufactured by him.

SEC. 51. And be it further enacted, That there shall be paid on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors, by whatever name such liquors may be called, a tax of one dollar for every barrel containing not more than thirty-one gallons; and at a like rate for any other quantity or for any fractional part of a barrel which shall be brewed or manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, within the United States; which tax shall be paid by the owner, agent, or superintendent of the brewery or premises in which such fermented liquors shall be made, in the manner and at the time hereinafter specified: Provided, That fractional parts of a barrel shall be halves, quarters, sixths, and eighths; and any fractional part of a barrel containing less than one eighth shall be accounted one eighth; more than one eighth and not more than one sixth, shall be accounted one sixth; more than one sixth and not more than one quarter, shall be accounted one quarter; more than one quarter and not more than one half, shall be accounted one half; more than one half and not more than one barrel, shall be accounted one barrel; and more than one barrel and not more than sixty-three gallons, shall be accounted two barrels, or a hoghead.

SEC. 52. And be it further enacted, That every person owning or occupying any brewery or premises used, or intended to be used, for the purpose of brewing or making such fermented liquors, or who shall have such premises under his control or superintendence as agent for the owner or occupant, or shall have in his possession or custody any brewing materials, utensils, or apparatus, used or intended to be used on said premises in the manufacture of beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other similar fermented liquors, either as owner, agent, or superintendent, shall, from day to day, enter or cause to be entered, in a book to be kept by him for that purpose, the kind of such fermented liquors, the description of packages, and number of barrels and fractional parts of barrels of fermented liquors made, and also the quantity sold or removed for consumption or sale, and shall also from day to day enter or cause to be entered, in a separate book to be kept by him for that purpose, an account of all material by him purchased for the purpose of producing such fermented liquors, including grain and malt; and shall render to said assessor or assistant assessor, on the 1st day of each month, or within ten days thereafter, a true statement in writing, taken from his books, of the whole quantity or number of barrels and fractional parts of barrels of fermented liquors brewed and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, for one month last preceding said 1st day of the month; and shall verify, or cause to be verified, the said statement, and the facts therein set forth, by oath or affirmation, to be taken before the assessor or assistant assessor of the district, according to the form required by law; and shall immediately forward to the collector of the district a duplicate of said statement, duly certified by the assessor or assistant assessor. And said books shall be open at all times for the inspection of any assessor, assistant assessor, collector, deputy collector, inspector, or revenue agent, who may take memoranda and transcripts therefrom.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend section fifty-two, so as to make it correspond with the former portion of the bill, by striking out in line twenty the word "first," and inserting in lieu thereof "tenth;" so that it will read:

And shall render to said assessor or assistant assessor, on the 10th day of each month, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after the word "month," the words "or ten days thereafter."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In lines twenty-four and twenty-five I move to strike out the words "preceding said 1st day of the month," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "during the preceding month."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. In lines thirteen and fourteen I move to strike out the words "and number of barrels and fractional parts of barrels of fermented liquors made." I understand that it is impossible to tell, until they come to sell it, what quantity they have, there is so much evaporation.

Mr. MORRILL. The law as it now stands has been subjected to the scrutiny of the makers of beer and ale every year since it has been in operation, and there has never been any complaint that I am aware of made to any member of the Committee of Ways and Means on the subject. I hope these words will not be stricken out.

Mr. O'NEILL. This is a matter which interests the malt maker and does not apply so much to the brewers of beer and ale.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend the section by striking out the following clause:

And shall also from day to day enter or cause to be entered, in a separate book to be kept by him for that purpose, an account of all material by him purchased for the purpose of producing such fermented liquors, including grain and malt.

There is one point in the amendment that is worthy the consideration of the committee. I understand that in the brewing of beer there are certain secrets of the trade, or certain processes, each brewer having a secret of his own, for which he has paid, in many instances, a very large amount of money. I think the provision of this section goes a little too far in the statement it requires of them.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe that the brewers of good ale and beer do not feel at all reluctant to allow people to know what is put in it. The amendment of the gentleman to strike out this provision would allow the manufacturers of a spurious article who obtain a substitute for hops and malt to go on to any extent without exposure. I must object to it.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend my amendment by striking out the last word, in order to enable me to say a word further. I do not pretend to represent the views of the makers of bad ale, porter, or beer. I believe the brewers of Philadelphia are celebrated throughout the world. I know there is a difference between the large and the small brewers. The large malt makers have large amounts of capital invested in their establishments, and they furnish the small brewers with malt. The large brewers of Philadelphia, in most instances, make their own malt. In the very center and heart of our city there are large buildings covering hundreds of feet square devoted to this business. One of them is an immense establishment, and I presume the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has seen the proprietors of that brewery. What I am striving for here is to save makers of malt from being obliged to tell these inspectors how they make their malt. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I will renew the amendment to the amendment. I do so for the purpose of saying that it requires some knowledge of these things to know how to vote upon this question, for it is not every man who owns a lager-beer shop. [Laughter.] I think the amendment of my colleague [Mr. O'NEILL] should prevail, and I will state the reason. It is not always proper that everybody should know everything that goes into beer. I remember a case I tried ten years ago, a case of a brewer called George Schweitzer, who was charged with being a lunatic. Another brewer of the name of Henry Fogelsong was called to prove that the other was a lunatic. He said that he knew George was a lunatic, for ten years before he had showed it most plainly. All the brewers in their neighborhood used calves' feet and brains in making their beer, and they helped very much to make the beer sweet. He had often urged the practice upon old George and he never would do it, and therefore he knew he was a lunatic, because he would not use the proper article. [Laughter.]

Now, it will not do to have it get out generally that such matters as these are put into the beer. Does the Committee of Ways and Means mean that a brewer shall state in his return how many rats he puts into his beer? I passed one time by the cooler of a brewery and I counted sixty large rats which had just been thrown out after having laid in soak all night. Now, does the committee mean that the whole health of the country shall be affected through the imagination by a knowledge of these things, when, if people did not know anything about them, it is the best kind of juice and makes the sweetest article of beer in the world? I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. O'NEILL. My colleague's constituents, I judge from his remarks, like these peculiar flavored beers; mine do not. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. I will only say that this provision is indispensable to the perfection of the bill. It is the same that is included in all revenue laws of other countries; and no objection has been made to it by the makers of beer and ale in this country.

Mr. STEVENS. Well, I will withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. O'NEILL was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 53. And be it further enacted, That the entries made in such books shall, on the first day of each month, or within ten days thereafter, be verified by the oath or affirmation of the person or persons by whom such entries shall have been made, which oath or affirmation shall be written in the book at the end of such entries, and be certified by the officer administering the same, and shall be in form as follows: "I do swear (or affirm) that the foregoing entries were made by me, and that they state truly, according to the best of my knowledge and belief, the whole quantity of fermented liquors, either brewed, or brewed and sold, or removed from the brewery owned by —, in the county of —, amounting to — barrels. And further, that I have no knowledge of any matter or thing, required by law to be stated in said entries, which has been omitted therefrom." And the owner, agent, or superintendent aforesaid, shall also, in case the original entries made in his books shall not have been made by himself, subjoin thereto the following oath or affirmation, to be taken in manner as aforesaid: "I do swear (or affirm) that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, the foregoing entries fully set forth all the matters therein required by law, and that the same are just and true, and that I have taken all the means in my power to make them so."

Mr. MORRILL. In the clause which reads, "on the 1st day of each month or within ten days thereafter," I move to amend by striking out the words "the 1st" and inserting "or before the 10th;" and also striking out the words "within ten days thereafter."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out the words "either brewed, or brewed and sold, or," and inserting "brewed, the quantity sold, and the quality."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to amend by striking out the words "amounting to — barrels," as that is no longer needed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 54. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or superintendent of any brewery, vessels, or utensils used in making fermented liquors, who shall evade or attempt to evade the payment of the tax thereon, or fraudulently neglect or refuse to make true and exact entry and report of the same in the manner herein required, or to do or cause to be done any of the things by law required to be done by him as aforesaid, or who shall intentionally make false entry in said book or in said statement, or knowingly allow or procure the same to be done, shall forfeit, for every such offense, all the liquors made by him or for him, and all the vessels, utensils, and apparatus used in making the same, and be liable to a penalty of not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, to be recovered with costs of suit, and shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year; and said liquors, utensils, and apparatus may be seized and held by any collector or deputy collector until a decision shall be had thereon according to law: Provided, That proceedings to enforce said forfeiture shall be commenced by such collector within twenty days after the seizure thereof. And such proceedings shall be in the nature of a proceeding in rem, or in any proper form of action, in the circuit or district court of the United States for the district where such seizure is made, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction. And any brewer who shall neglect to keep the books, or refuse to furnish the account and duplicate thereof as hereinbefore provided, or who shall refuse to permit the proper officer to examine the books in the manner provided, shall, for every such refusal or neglect, forfeit and pay the sum of $300.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 55. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall cause to be prepared, for the payment of tax aforesaid, suitable stamps denoting the amount of tax herein required to be paid on the hogshead, barrels, and halves, quarters, sixths, and eighths of a barrel of such fermented liquors, and shall furnish the same to the collectors of internal revenue, who shall each be required to keep on hand, at all times, a supply equal in amount to two months' sales thereof, if there shall be any brewery or brewery warehouse in his district, and the same shall be sold by such collectors only to the brewers of their districts, respectively; and such collectors shall keep an account of the number and values of the stamps sold by them to each of such brewers respectively; and upon all sales of such stamps in sums of $200 or more to one person, at one time, an allowance or deduction of seven and one half per cent. shall be made to the purchaser.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend the last clause of this section so that it will read:

And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may allow upon all sales of such stamps in sums of $200 or more to one person, at one time, a deduction of not more than seven and one half per cent.

Mr. PAINE. My only objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is this: it will be remembered that a little while ago he cited this clause as explaining the reason which influenced the committee to fix the tax to which brewers are to be subjected. He pointed out to me this clause as a reason why justice was in fact done to the brewers, notwithstanding the provision to which I have referred. Now, he proposes to make a change in this provision, which does not with certainty secure to the brewer this benefit, but leaves it for the Commissioner to decide whether or not the brewer shall enjoy the benefit. It makes it a possible benefit but not a certain benefit under the law.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that the law before fixed this at five per cent. instead of seven and a half. The reason of the law was that a certain proportion of all the beer brewed becomes sour and, as beer, worthless. Hence, if the brewer affixes the stamp and the beer on being put into the market turns out worthless, the value of the stamps affixed and canceled is an utter loss to the brewer. In consideration of this loss the law hitherto has made an allowance of five per cent. of the value of the stamps. That allowance is increased by this bill to seven and a half per cent. I desire to propose, as an addition to my amendment, to strike out in the fifteenth line the words "one person" and insert "any brewer."

Mr. STEVENS. I suggest to the gentleman that his amendment should read, "to any brewer, and by him used in his business."

Mr. GARFIELD. I accept that as a modification of my amendment.

Mr. PAINE. Let me suggest further that "shall" should be substituted for "may" after the word "Commissioner."

Mr. GARFIELD. I modify my amendment in that way.

The amendment of Mr. GARFIELD, as modified, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 56. And be it further enacted, That every brewer shall obtain, from the collector of the district in which his brewery or brewery warehouse may be situated, and not otherwise, unless said collector shall fail to furnish the same upon application to him, the proper stamp or stamps; and shall affix upon the spigot-hole or tap (of which there shall be but one) of each and every hoghead, barrel, keg, or other receptacle, in which any fermented liquor shall be contained, when sold or removed from such brewery or warehouse, a stamp denoting the amount of the tax herein required upon such fermented liquor, in such a way that the said stamp or stamps will be destroyed upon the withdrawal of the liquor from such hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel, or upon the introduction of a faucet or other instrument for that purpose; and shall also, at the time of affixing such stamp or stamps as aforesaid, cancel the same by writing or imprinting thereon the name of the person, firm, or corporation by whom such liquor may have been made, or the initial letters thereof, and the date when canceled. Every brewer who shall refuse or neglect to affix and cancel the stamp or stamps herein required in the manner aforesaid, or who shall affix a false or fraudulent stamp thereto, or knowingly permit the same to be done, shall be liable to pay a penalty of $100 for each barrel or package on which such omission or fraud occurs, and shall be liable to imprisonment for not more than one year.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 57. And be it further enacted, That any brewer, carman, agent for transportation, or other person, who shall sell, remove, receive, or purchase, or in any way aid in the sale, removal, receipt, or purchase of any fermented liquor contained in any hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel from any brewery, or brewery warehouse, upon which the stamp herein required shall not have been affixed, or on which a false or fraudulent stamp is affixed, with knowledge that it is such, or on which a stamp once canceled is used a second time; and any retail dealer or other person who shall withdraw or aid in the withdrawal of any fermented liquor from any hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel containing the same, without destroying or defacing the stamp affixed upon the same, or shall withdraw or aid in the withdrawal of any fermented liquor from any hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel, upon which the proper stamp shall not have been affixed, or on which a false or fraudulent stamp is affixed, as hereinbefore required, shall be liable to a fine of $100, and to imprisonment not more than one year. Every person who shall make, sell, or use any false or counterfeit stamp or die for printing or making stamps which shall be in imitation of, or purport to be a lawful stamp or die of, the kind before mentioned, or who shall procure the same to be done, shall be guilty of a felony, and be imprisoned for the term of five years; Provided, That every brewer who sells fermented liquor at retail at the brewery or other place where the same is made, shall affix and cancel the proper stamp or stamps upon the hogheads, barrels, kegs, or other vessels in which the same is contained, and shall keep an account of the quantity so sold by him, and of the number and size of the hogheads, barrels, kegs, or other vessels, in which the same may have been contained, and shall make a report thereof, verified by oath, monthly to the assessor, and forward a duplicate of same to the collector of the district: And provided further, That brewers may remove malt liquors of their own manufacture from their breweries or other places of manufacture to a warehouse or other place of storage occupied by them within the same district in quantities of not less than six barrels in one vessel without affixing the stamp or stamps herein required, but shall affix the proper stamp or stamps, as aforesaid, upon such liquor when sold or removed from such warehouse or other place of storage: And provided further, That where fermented liquor has become sour or damaged, so as to be incapable of use as such, brewers may sell the same for manufacturing purposes, and may remove the same to places where it may be used for such purposes in casks or other vessels, unlike those ordinarily used for fermented liquors, containing respectively not less than one barrel each, and having the nature of their contents branded upon them, without affixing thereon the stamp or stamps herein required.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 58. And be it further enacted, That every brewer shall brand, or cause to be branded, upon every hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel, containing the fermented liquor made by him, before it is sold or removed from the brewery or brewery warehouse, or other place of manufacture, the name of the person, firm, or corporation by whom such liquor was manufactured and the place where the same shall have been made; and any person other than the owner thereof or his agent who shall intentionally remove or deface such brand therefrom shall be liable to a penalty of fifty dollars for each cask from which the brand is so removed or defaced.

No amendment being offered,
The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 59. And be it further enacted, That every person, other than the purchaser or owner of any fermented liquor, or person acting on his behalf, or his agent, who shall intentionally remove or deface the stamp affixed, as herein required, upon the hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel in which the same may be contained, shall be liable to a fine of fifty dollars for each such vessel from which the stamp is so removed or defaced, and to render compensation to such purchaser or owner for all damages sustained by him therefrom.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 60. And be it further enacted, That the ownership or possession by any person of any fermented liquor after its sale or removal from brewery or warehouse, or other place where it was made, upon which the tax required shall not have been paid, shall render the same liable to seizure wherever found, and to forfeiture; and that the want of the proper stamp or stamps upon any hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel in which fermented liquor may be contained after its sale or removal from the brewery where the same was made, or warehouse, as aforesaid, shall be notice to all persons that the tax has not been paid thereon, and shall be prima facie evidence of the non-payment thereof.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 61. And be it further enacted, That every person who shall withdraw any fermented liquor from any hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel upon which the proper stamp or stamps shall not have been affixed as herein required, for the purpose of bottling the same, or who shall carry on, or attempt to carry on, the business of bottling fermented liquor in any brewery or other place in which such fermented liquor is made, or upon any premises having communication with such brewery or any warehouse, shall be liable to a fine of $500, and the property used in such bottling or business shall be liable to forfeiture.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 62. And be it further enacted, That any assessor, collector, inspector, or revenue agent who shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or in the production by distillation or by other process of spirits or ale, beer, or other fermented liquors, shall, on conviction before any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, pay as penalty not less than $500, nor more than $5,000, in the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following as an additional section:

SEC. 63. And be it further enacted, That every officer or employé appointed or holding office in the Bureau of Internal Revenue under authority of law, whose payment, charges, salary, or compensation shall be composed, either wholly or in part, of fees, commissions, allowances, or rewards, from whatever source derived, shall be required to render to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under regulations to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, a statement under oath setting forth the entire amount of such fees, commissions, emoluments, or rewards, of whatever nature, or from whatever source received, during the time for which said statement is rendered; and any false statement knowingly and willfully rendered under the requirements of this section, or regulations established in accordance therewith, shall be deemed willful perjury, and punished, on conviction therefor, as provided in section forty-two of the act of June 30, 1864, to which this act is an amendment, and any neglect or omission to render such statement when required shall be punished, on conviction therefor, by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $500, in the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELKER. I offer the following amendment:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That all disabled soldiers or sailors having served in the Army or Navy of the United States, in the late rebellion, who are now, or may hereafter be, placed upon the pension-rolls of the Government, shall, on producing to the assistant assessor of his district satisfactory evidence that he is such pensioner, be entitled to receive a license to carry on the business or occupations specified in paragraphs three, eight, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-four, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-four, thirty-five, and thirty-six of section seventy-nine, without the payment of any sum of money whatever for such permission.

Mr. Chairman, one word by way of explanation of that amendment. The paragraphs referred to are as follows: paragraph three, retail dealers; eight, livery-stable keepers; twenty-one, keepers of eating-houses; twenty-two, confectioners; twenty-four, patent-right dealers; twenty-seven, intelligence office keepers; twenty-eight, insurance agents; thirty, auctioneers; thirty-one, manufacturers; thirty-two, peddlers; thirty-four, photographers; thirty-five, tobacconists; thirty-six, butchers.

I received a letter from the collector in one of the counties of my district that he was applied to by a soldier, who had lost both of his arms at Gettysburg, for a license as a peddler, and that he was compelled to charge him under the law. Therefore I have offered the amendment. I appeal to members that where we do not sacrifice any large amount of revenue we ought to favor this class who only get a pension from the Government of eight dollars a month. I think that where these men endeavor to sustain themselves by engaging in these businesses they ought to have this provision made in their behalf. It is right and just, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. I confess that I am reluctant to oppose the proposition of the gentleman, but I am in favor of doing whatever we can do for our gallant soldiers in the way of pensions and bounties directly. If we choose to vote them money let us do it directly. This proposition would allow these parties to engage in business all over the country and sell the use of their names everywhere, and it would create at once a practical monopoly. The gentleman's amendment reaches so far as to embrace a great variety of business, and I trust it will not be adopted. If it were confined to peddlers, or to two or three trades, it might not be so objectionable, but as proposed I fear we should have by far too many shirks seeking shelter under the names of our worthy soldiers.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WELKER. I hope I may be allowed to present this again.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 62. And be it further enacted, That so much of this act as imposes a stamp tax on fermented liquors shall take effect from and after the 1st day of September, 1866.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to strike out the words "imposes a stamp tax on" and insert in lieu thereof the words "changes the existing law in relation to distilled spirits and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. It will be observed, as the section now stands, that the provisions in regard to distilled spirits and fermented liquor go into operation on the 1st of September next. We have already, on page 40, repealed our present law on the subject, and I ask unanimous consent to go back and add after the word "repealed," on page 40, line seven hundred and sixty-eight, the words "to take effect on the 1st day of September, 1866."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next section—some of the blanks being subsequently filled, on motion of Mr. MORRILL, with the various sums fixed as salaries—as follows:

SEC. 63. And be it further enacted, That the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be reorganized so as to include one Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with a salary of $5,000; one deputy commissioner, with a salary of $3,500; one cashier, with a salary of $3,000, who shall also act as disbursing officer for said office; and which offices are now created, and the duties thereof defined by law; and to authorize, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, the employment of the following additional officers and clerks, and with the salaries hereinafter specified, namely, two deputy commissioners, each with a salary of $3,000; one solicitor, with a salary of $4,000; seven heads of divisions, each with a salary of $2,500; thirty-four clerks of class four; forty-five clerks of class three; fifty clerks of class two; and thirty-seven clerks of class one; fifty-five copyists, each with a salary of $720; three messengers, each with a salary of $1,000; five assistant messengers each with a salary of $850; and fifteen laborers, each with a salary of $720; and a sum sufficient to pay the officers, clerks, and employes herein authorized is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 64. And be it further enacted, That all official communications made by assessors to collectors, or by collectors to assessors, or by assessors to assistant assessors, or by assistant assessors to assessors, may be officially franked by the writers thereof, and shall, when so franked, be transmitted by mail free of postage.

Mr. THAYER. I move to amend, in line two, by inserting after the word "assessors" the words "to assessors, or by collectors;" so that it will read "that all official communications made by assessors to assessors, or by collectors to collectors," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I have an amendment to offer by inserting after the word "assessors" in line four the words "or by collectors to their deputies, or by deputy collectors to collectors."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELKER. I move the following amendment, to come in at the end of the section:

And collectors shall be allowed reasonable express charges for the necessary transportation of money from their deputies to them as accounts for stationery are allowed.

I offer this amendment because several collectors have been refused payment of charges for the transmission of money by express. I think it ought to be allowed.

Mr. ALLISON. I would suggest whether the effect of this amendment would not be virtually to authorize collectors to send money by express; and if so, whether they would not be relieved from their liability as collectors.

Mr. WELKER. I do not suppose it would, unless they had orders to do so.

Mr. SPALDING. I hope it will not be adopted. They are the best-paid men in the country now.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 65. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to appoint an officer in his Department who shall be styled "Special Commissioner of the Revenue," whose office shall terminate in four years from the passage of this act. It shall be the duty of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue to inquire into all the sources of national revenue, and the best methods of collecting the revenue; the relations of foreign trade to domestic industry; the mutual adjustment of the systems of taxation by customs and excise, with the view of insuring the requisite revenue with the least disturbance or inconvenience to the progress of industry and the development of the resources of the country; and to inquire from time to time, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, into the manner in which officers charged with the administration and collection of the revenues perform their duties. And the said Special Commissioner of the Revenue shall from time to time report, through the Secretary of the Treasury, to Congress, either in the form of a bill or otherwise, such modifications of the rates of taxation or of the methods of collecting the revenues, and such other facts pertaining to the trade, industry, commerce, or taxation of the country, as he may find, by actual observation of the operation of the law, to be conducive to the public interest; and in order to enable the Special Commissioner of the Revenue to properly conduct his investigations, he is hereby empowered to examine the books, papers, and accounts of any officer of the revenue, to administer oaths, examine and summon witnesses, and take testimony; and each and every such person falsely swearing or affirming shall be subject to the penalties and disabilities prescribed by law for the punishment of corrupt and willful perjury; and all officers of the Government are hereby required to extend to the said Commissioner all reasonable facilities for the collection of information pertinent to the duties of his office. And the said Special Commissioner shall be paid an annual salary of $4,000, and the traveling expenses necessarily incurred while in the discharge of his duty; and all letters and documents to and from the Special Commissioner relating to the duties and business of his office shall be transmitted by mail free of postage. And section nineteen of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864," approved March 3, 1865, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I offer the following as additional sections to the bill:

And be it further enacted, That in any case, civil or criminal, where suit or prosecution shall be commenced in any court of any State against any officer of the United States, appointed under or acting by authority of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," passed June 30, 1864, or of any act in addition thereto, or against any person acting under or by authority of any such officer, or against any person holding property or estate by title derived from any such officer, it shall be lawful for the defendant in such suit or prosecution, at any time before trial, upon a petition to the circuit court of the United States in and for the district in which the defendant shall have been served with process, setting forth the nature of said suit or prosecution, and verifying the said petition by affidavit, together with a certificate, signed by an attorney or counselor at law of some court of record of the State in which such suit shall have been commenced, or of the United States, setting forth that, as counsel for the petitioner, he has examined the proceedings against him, and carefully inquired into all the matters set forth in the petition, and that he believes the same to be true; which petition, affidavit, and certificate shall be presented to the said circuit court, if in session, and if not, to the clerk thereof, at his office, and shall be filed in said office, and the cause shall thereupon be entered on the docket of said court, and shall be thereafter proceeded in as a cause originally commenced in that court; and it shall be the duty of the clerk of said court, if the suit were commenced in the court below by summons, to issue a writ of certiorari to the State court, requiring said court to send to the said circuit court the record and proceedings in said cause; or if it were commenced by capias, he shall issue a writ of habeas corpus cum causa, a duplicate of which said writ shall be delivered to the clerk of the State court, or left at his office, by the marshal of the district, or his deputy, or some person duly authorized thereto; and thereupon it shall be the duty of the said State court to stay all further proceedings in such cause, and the said suit or prosecution, upon delivery of such process, or leaving the same as aforesaid, shall be deemed and taken to be moved to the said circuit court, and any further proceedings, trial, or judgment therein in the State court shall be wholly null and void. And if the defendant in any such suit be in actual custody on meine process therein, it shall be the duty of the marshal, by virtue of the writ of habeas corpus cum causa, to take the body of the defendant into his custody, to be dealt with in the said cause according to the rules of law and the order of the circuit court, or of any judge thereof in vacation. And all attachments made, and all bail and other security given, upon such suit or prosecution shall be and continue in like force and effect as if the same suit or prosecution had proceeded to final judgment and execution in the State court; and if, upon the removal of any such suit or prosecution, it shall be made to appear to the said circuit court that no copy of the record and proceedings therein, in the State court can be obtained, it shall be lawful for said circuit court to allow and require the plaintiff to proceed de novo, and to file a declaration of his cause of action, and the parties may thereupon proceed as in action originally brought in said circuit court; and on failure of so proceeding, judgment of nolle prosequi may be rendered against the plaintiff, with costs for the defendant: Provided, That an act entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports," passed March 2, 1833, shall not be so construed as to apply to cases arising under an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," passed June 30, 1864, or any act in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, nor to any case in which the validity or interpretation of said act or acts shall be in issue.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the fifth section of an act passed June 30, 1864, entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," is hereby repealed: Provided, That any case which may have been removed from the courts of any State under said fifth section, to the courts of the United States, shall be remanded to the State court from which it was so removed, with all the records relating to such case, unless the justice of the circuit court of the United States in which such suit or prosecution is pending shall be of opinion that said case would be removable from the court of the State to the circuit court under and by virtue of the sixty-sixth section of this act. And in all cases which may have been removed from any court of any State under and by virtue of said fifth section of said act of June 30, 1864, all attachments made, and all bail or other security given upon such suit or prosecution, shall be and continue in full force and effect until final judgment and execution, whether such suit shall be prosecuted to final judgment in the circuit court of the United States, or remanded to the State court from which it was removed.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That whenever a writ of error shall be issued for the revision of any judgment or decree in any criminal proceeding, where is drawn in question the construction of any statute of the United States in a court of any State, as is provided in the twenty-fifth section of an act entitled "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States," passed September 24, 1789, the defendant, if charged with an offense bailable by the laws of such State, shall not be released from custody until a final judgment upon such writ, or until a bond with sufficient sureties in a reasonable sum, as ordered and approved by the State court, shall be given; and if the offense is not so bailable until a final judgment upon the writ of error. Writs of error, in criminal cases, shall have precedence upon the docket of the Supreme Court, of all cases to which the Government of the United States is not a party, excepting only such cases as the court, at their discretion, may decide to be of public importance.

I have been directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to offer this amendment to the bill. It has been submitted to the Committee of Ways and Means and they concur in it. It is merely a change of the law of 1833, giving it the construction that was intended by Congress when that law was passed, confining the operations of the act to officers and persons acting under them and by their authority. It appears from reading the debates that by inadvertence the words "or other persons" were inserted after the word "officers," so that under it, all cases arising under State laws in connection with any trade or business for which the present law requires a license to be taken out, or this bill requires a special tax to be paid may be removed into the United States court, the parties claiming that the payment of the tax authorized them to conduct the particular business, no matter what the provisions of the State law might be. A great many cases were thus removed from the State courts into the United States courts. This interferes with the municipal regulations of all towns and cities and the proper administration of State laws.

Mr. HALE. I have not had an opportunity to see this amendment in print, and I would inquire of the gentleman from Iowa whether under the sections now proposed all suits against officers of the revenue for acts which they may claim to justify under this law are to be transferred, or whether it is confined to those cases in which the validity of constructions of the act is in question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The best answer I can give is to read the first section of my amendment. It is as follows:

That in any case, civil or criminal, where suit or prosecution shall be commenced in any court of any State against any officer of the United States, appointed under or acting by authority of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," passed June 30, 1864, or of any act in addition thereto, or against any person acting under or by authority of any such officer, or against any person holding property or estate by title derived from any such officer, it shall be lawful for the defendant in such suit or prosecution, at any time before trial, upon a petition to the circuit court of the United States in and for the district in which the defendant shall have been served with process, setting forth the nature of said suit or prosecution, and verifying the said petition by affidavit, together with a certificate, signed by an attorney or counselor at law of some court of record of the State in which such suit shall have been commenced, or of the United States, setting forth that, as counsel for the petitioner, he has examined the proceedings against him, and carefully inquired into all the matters set forth in the petition, and that he believes the same to be true; which petition, affidavit, and certificate shall be presented to the said circuit court, if in session, and if not, to the clerk thereof, at his office, and shall be filed in said office, and the cause shall thereupon be entered on the docket of said court, &c.

Mr. HALE. I submit to the gentleman that he has made the section altogether too broad.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It must be against an officer or against a person acting under the authority of that officer; consequently it may be a suit against him as an individual for an act done as an officer.

Mr. HALE. If that it is the construction of it, then it strikes me that it is by no means broad enough.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In perfecting this amendment the Committee on the Judiciary availed themselves of the act of 1833, which has already received a construction. The only change that is made is in confining the operation of the act to persons who were officers or acting under the authority of officers. That act included other persons.

Mr. HALE. It strikes me, after hearing the explanation of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Wilson,] that his amendment is altogether too meager in its provisions if it is intended to confine it to suits brought against persons who—

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Brought against them for any act performed by them as officers.

Mr. HALE. It does not say so.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think it does quite clearly.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the first section of the amendment so that it will read:

That in any case, civil or criminal, where suit or prosecution shall be commenced in any court of any State against any officer of the United States, appointed under or acting by authority of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," passed June 30, 1864, or of any act in addition thereto, or against any person acting under or by authority of any such officer, or on account of any act done under color of his office, or against any person holding property or estate by title derived from any such officer, affecting such property or estate, and involving the construction of this act, it shall be lawful for the defendant, &c.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will accept that amendment.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to move an amendment to section sixty-five. The first sentence of that section reads:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to appoint an officer in his Department who shall be styled "Special Commissioner of the Revenue," whose office shall terminate in four years after the passage of this act.

I desire to move to strike out the words, "the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to appoint an officer in his Department," and insert in lieu thereof the words, "Congress shall by concurrent action elect an officer."

I am done, for my part, with giving any patronage to the Secretary of the Treasury where it can be avoided. He has already stated that he will appoint no one to office unless he sustains the policy of the President. He has this morning distinctly so informed a member of this House who called upon him in regard to an appointment. He asked the member if the applicant sustained the policy of the President, and when the member declined to tell him, he said, "I can appoint and will appoint no man who does not support the policy of the President." And referring to an apostate Senator from that region, the Secretary said, "I consult him when I make appointments, and I will appoint nobody who is not recommended by him."

Now, it is time for this House to let the people of the country know whether these officers are to be sacrificed to this determination of the subordinates of the President. If we do not stand by them they will not stand by us, and they ought not to. Sir, it is time we spoke out the truth about these things. It is a malfeasance in office. I will go further and say that I have already ascertained that four subordinates of the President have made the same declaration. And if I was a little younger, and I shall be in a week, I think I would let these officers know that there is a grand inquest of the nation before whom men who are guilty of malpractices in office can be brought and their cases presented to another tribunal which would try them.

Sir, we are recreant to our own interests, we are recreant to our own dignity, we are recreant to all the interests of the country if we do not stand by those who stand by us. With my consent no more patronage shall be put into the power of any man to be abused, avowedly abused. It is time that we speak aloud, and that we say to our friends in the country that they are in no danger; that they shall not be sacrificed because they stand by Congress; that they shall not be destroyed because they are not the tools of a recreant President. I say that I have authentic information that this very day this policy has been avowed by the Secretary of the Treasury; that he has declared distinctly that in the State referred to he will consult no one in relation to appointments but a recreant, apostate Senator, who has betrayed his party and his country—

Mr. SPALDING. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he is serious in urging this amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I am.

Mr. SPALDING. Then I seriously oppose it.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has fully accomplished his purpose by making his speech. I presume that he does not intend to direct any portion of his remarks against the distinguished gentleman who has been employed in this service hitherto. Nor is there, I suppose, the slightest apprehension that any other man will be appointed to this position. If this amendment were appropriate anywhere, it is not appropriate here. I am one of those who, from the first, have been in favor of keeping our finances in all their relations—tax bills, tariffs, and everything else—separate and distinct from politics. I am still in favor of that policy. I do not approve of all the acts of the Secretary of the Treasury, nor do I approve of his recent speech. The speech which he made some months since in Indiana I thought was an able one. I do not so consider the speech that he recently made. I think it was an unfortunate speech for the head of the Treasury, and entirely uncalled for. But at the same time I do not propose to change the ordinary course of legislation, and especially I do not propose to show temper when we can show nothing more than that. Even if we were here in a minority, I suppose that this power is no more than we would consent to grant to the Secretary of the Treasury. It is the same power we lodged with the Secretary last year and was satisfactorily exercised. I do not believe in the wisdom of any attempt to take the power away this year. I trust, therefore, that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not be adopted.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word, for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the provisions of the Constitution upon the subject of appointments to office. I do not know that the consideration of what the constitutional provisions may be will have any weight with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, but it strikes me that with this committee it ought to have. Now, sir, I find in the Constitution no warrant for the exercise by Congress, under any circumstances, of the appointing power. I find the appointing power provided for in express terms in the second section of the second article of the Constitution, which I ask leave to read:

"He [the President] shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint, ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law. But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments."

Here we have defined by the Constitution the only authorities recognized by that instrument as capable of exercising the appointing power—the President and the Senate, the President alone, the courts of law, and the heads of Departments. I respectfully inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he proposes that, for the sake of punishing the Secretary of the Treasury for his very wicked speech the other evening, and his very wicked remark since, Congress shall override the provisions of the Constitution and assume a power of appointment to the exclusion of all the authorities defined by the Constitution.

Mr. STEVENS. This is no office. This is an agency to be created by this Congress, just the same as if we were to create a commission to proceed to the South or anywhere else—just the same as we created a commission for the purpose of examining into these very matters of revenue. It does not come within the meaning of the Constitution at all, and never has been so considered. I propose no violation of an office of the Constitution. This is not an office. We propose simply to appoint an agent to do a particular thing. We might, if we chose, authorize a committee of this House to do it. It requires no appointment by the President. Whether or not the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] deems those arguments of the Secretary of the Treasury "wicked," I do deem them wicked. I do not believe that the gentleman so regards them; I think they rather appeal to his taste or appetite.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] says that he is for keeping the Secretary of the Treasury free from politics. So am I; and it is for that very reason that I have introduced this amendment and made these remarks. The Secretary of the Treasury has assumed to regulate his patronage by politics, and not by that which is connected with the interests of finance. He has prostituted his office to an unholy purpose; and I think it is time that—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HALE. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DELANO. I observe, Mr. Chairman, that this sixty-fifth section provides—

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to appoint an officer in his Department who shall be styled "Special Commissioner of the Revenue," whose office shall terminate in four years from the passage of this act.

As I understand, this provides for the appointment of an "officer;" and when appointed he will hold an "office." I cannot, therefore, readily comprehend the statement of the able and distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, that this is not an office, unless we are using words of which we do not comprehend the meaning. I suppose that is all that need be said on that point in addition to the well-taken constitutional objection of my friend from New York, [Mr. HALE.] But I ask this committee to consider for a single moment in what attitude they will place themselves by taking from the Secretary of the Treasury the usual and customary authority of appointing the officer. It can be looked upon in no other light than that of reproach to this officer. It can be looked upon in no other light than that of condemnation of his conduct.

Tell me what the Secretary of the Treasury has done which deserves the reproach and provokes this attack. On the question of reconstruction he differs from the majority of this House. Is he the slave of the majority of this House? Is he not entitled to entertain his own opinions about the proper manner of reorganizing these States? Are we all to square our opinions to a particular line of conduct or to a particular rule that is to be marked out by those in the majority? Cannot an officer of this Government have opinions on this subject without deserving the censure of this House in exercising the legitimate powers which belong to his office? What do we do by this line of policy? What do we effect in the country except to provoke and irritate a public sentiment already too much excited, and to prevent ourselves from arriving at those wise and calm conclusions which the country demands at our hands? How has the Secretary of the Treasury here to-day been denounced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] And why? Because he entertains opinions in reference to the matter of reconstruction different from the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman will allow me to say I do not denounce him for entertaining any such opinions, but I do denounce him for prostituting the patronage of this Government to make all other opinions bend to his own.

Mr. DELANO. I ask the gentleman for his authority for saying that the Secretary of the Treasury has prostituted the patronage of the Government. What has he done it in: where and when? Let us have the specifications.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman desires an answer?

Mr. DELANO. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS. Probably the gentleman did not hear what I said at the outset.

Mr. DELANO. I did not hear any specifications.

Mr. STEVENS. I presume the gentleman did not hear what I said. I assert that a member of this House, of high respectability, to-day went to the Secretary of the Treasury to get certain officers named in his district, one of them a wounded soldier, and he was asked their opinions about sustaining the President's policy, stating distinctly unless they did sustain them he would not appoint them; that the President had made up his mind that that course should be pursued.

Mr. DELANO. I would like to have his name. I venture to say there is a misapprehension between the gentleman and the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury may have said he would not appoint any man openly abusive and hostile to the President. I undertake to say beyond that he has not gone. I should like to have the proof.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman spoke of his own knowledge, I should of course believe him; but he does not pretend to do this. The gentleman who informed me not twenty minutes ago spoke upon his own authority, as respectable a man as any in the House. Possibly he may not wish to have his name known. I have not had time to consult him. It may bring down upon him the wrath of those in the Department. They know who I mean at the other end of the avenue, for he has just come from there.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAINE. I move to strike out "Secretary of the Treasury," and insert "President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. STEVENS. Let me modify my amendment first, so that it shall read that "Congress, by concurrent action, shall elect a Commissioner of the Revenue, and it shall be the duty of said Commissioner of the Revenue," &c.

Mr. BLAINE. I move to strike that out and to insert "by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." It strikes me the language of the bill as it now stands reported from the Committee of Ways and Means is unusual in placing the appointment in the head of the Department. As mentioned by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE,] the appointing power is vested by the Constitution in the President of the United States. These Secretaries are but his servants, and we do not intend to invest the Secretary of the Treasury with a power distinct from the President of the United States. I think the chairman of the committee will accept the suggestion and modify his proposition so that the President shall not be interfered with in his constitutional right of nomination, nor shall the Senate be interfered with in their constitutional right of confirmation.

Mr. SPALDING. Who appoints the assessors?

Mr. BLAINE. The President; he appoints all of them. We all know that the different heads of Departments are intrusted with the nomination of their subordinates. The Secretary of War nominates officers of the Army and the Postmaster General nominates his subordinates; but the President of the United States is the power that does it; each one is the servant of the President.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to section nineteen of the act of 1865 for which this is a substitute, which did authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to select three commissioners.

Mr. BLAINE. It has been done in frequent instances. But it will be seen that it is not the usual legal, constitutional way in which the Government is presumed to work. You are investing in a mere servant of the President a power which the Constitution gives to the President alone, subject to the review of the Senate, and my amendment simply puts this on the constitutional basis and does not interfere with anybody.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not regard the proposition in any shape in which it may come as of any practical importance. I do not believe there is a single man on this floor who believes that the office is to be conferred upon any individual except one that is known to us all. And for the purpose of terminating debate upon this section I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CANAL AND SEWERAGE COMPANY.

Mr. STEVENS. At the request of a member who is absent I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were adopted to the bill to incorporate the District of Columbia Canal and Sewerage Company.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered.

MOTION TO RECONSIDER.

Mr. BIDWELL. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote of the House on Senate bill No. 123.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall resume the consideration of House bill No. 513, all debate upon the pending paragraph and the amendments thereto terminate in one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. BLAINE. I withdraw my amendment for the purpose of having a direct vote on the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.]

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. STEVENS, there were—ayes 21, noes 47; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania persist in his amendment?

Mr. STEVENS. I believe I will withdraw it. I think this section is of no use anyhow. I withdraw it.

Mr. COBB. I move to amend by striking out the entire section down to and including the word "postage," in line forty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] to strike out the words "the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to appoint" and insert in lieu thereof "the President is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint."

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move as an amendment to the amendment to add the following:

And from and after the passage of this act all revenue agents authorized by this act and all acts to which this act is an amendment shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The question was taken on Mr. FARNSWORTH'S amendment to the amendment; and there were—ayes thirty, noes not counted.

So the amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I do not think that these amendments ought all to fail on account of the absence of a quorum. I hope the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will allow us to have a vote on this amendment in the House.

Mr. MORRILL. The amendment can as well be put on any other bill as on this.

The question recurred on Mr. WILLIAMS'S amendment.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILLIAMS] will accept my amendment as a modification of his.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir; it would read awkwardly.

Mr. STEVENS. I offer the following as an amendment to the amendment:

From and after the passage of this act all revenue agents authorized by this act, and all acts to which this is an amendment, shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. LATHAM. Is an amendment to that amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order; that is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. LATHAM. Is a question in order?

The CHAIRMAN. No; no debate is in order. The Chair is about to put the question. [Laughter.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I understand that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means is willing that I may offer my amendment in the House, so that we may have a vote upon it. [Cries of "Oh, no!" and "Object!"]

Mr. STEVENS. I call for tellers on the amendment to the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STEVENS and DELANO were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 35, noes 39; no quorum voting.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] will withdraw his motion, and that this proposition will be put in shape and offered in the House on Monday, when we can vote upon it by the yeas and nays. I want very much to get through with the bill this evening.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I am content with that.

Mr. STEVENS. With the understanding that the vote is not to be taken to-night I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And I withdraw my amendment.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. COBB, to strike out of section sixty-five the following:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to appoint an officer in his Department who shall be styled "Special Commissioner of the Revenue," whose office shall terminate in four years from the passage of this act. It shall be the duty of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue to inquire into all the sources of national revenue and the best methods of collecting the revenue; the relations of foreign trade to domestic industry; the mutual adjustment of the systems of taxation by customs and excise, with the view of insuring the requisite revenue with the least disturbance or inconvenience to the progress of industry and the development of the resources of the country; and to inquire from time to time, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, into the manner in which officers charged with the administration and collection of the revenues perform their duties. And the said Special Commissioner of the Revenue shall from time to time report, through the Secretary of the Treasury, to Congress, either in the form of a bill or otherwise, such modifications of the rates of taxation or of the methods of collecting the revenues, and such other facts pertaining to the trade, industry, commerce, or taxation of the country as he may find, by actual observation of the operation of the law, to be conducive to the public interest; and in order to enable the Special Commissioner of the Revenue to properly conduct his investigations, he is hereby empowered to examine the books, papers, and accounts of any officer of the revenue, to administer oaths, examine and summon witnesses, and take testimony; and each and every such person falsely swearing or affirming shall be subject to the penalties and disabilities prescribed by law for the punishment of corrupt and willful perjury; and all officers of the Government are hereby required to extend to the said Commissioner all reasonable facilities for the collection of information pertinent to the duties of his office. And the said Special Commissioner shall be paid an annual salary of $4,000 and the traveling expenses necessarily incurred while in the discharge of his duty; and all letters and documents to and from the Special Commissioner relating to the duties and business of his office shall be transmitted by mail free of postage. And.

So that the section, as amended, will read:

Sec. 65. And be it further enacted, That section nineteen of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864," approved March 3, 1865, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 30, noes 51; no quorum voting.

Before the result was announced,

Mr. MORRILL said: If the gentleman will withdraw his amendment now, I will consent that a vote may be taken upon it in the House.

Mr. COBB. With the express understanding that I may move this amendment in the House, or if I should not be present my colleague [Mr. PAINE] may move it, I will withdraw it at this time.

Mr. SPALDING. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] will withdraw that motion, and let us get through with the bill in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPALDING. We cannot do that to-night.

Mr. MORRILL. There is but one section left. It will take but a few minutes to get through.

Mr. SPALDING. Very well; I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. MORRIS. I move to insert the following as a new section after section sixty-five:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act corn-shellers shall be exempt from internal tax or duty.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting after the words "corn-shellers," the words "and woodenware." [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment as amended; and being put, the Chairman announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. MORRIS. I call for a division upon the question.

The question was put; and upon a division there were—ayes nineteen.

Before the vote in the negative was taken,

Mr. MORRIS called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MORRIS and SPALDING were appointed.

Mr. MORRILL. I regret to see the unwillingness manifested upon the part of members to have the consideration of this bill in Committee of the Whole concluded to-day; I therefore move that the committee now rise.

Mr. MORRIS. Before that question is put, I would inquire of the Chair in what position my amendment will be when the consideration of this bill is again resumed.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question will then be upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MORRIS,] as amended upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. WASHBURN.]

The question was upon the motion of Mr. MORRILL that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. DEFREES, (at five o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. BANKS: The memorial of Pardon Worsley, for compensation for services rendered the United States.

By Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio: The petition of Barrington Bohmyer, asking to be paid for military service.

By Mr. DEFREES: A petition from sundry soldiers of Indiana, asking an amendment be made to the homestead act, so as to enable soldiers or their legal representatives in any land district, by exhibiting their discharge papers and making oath to their identity before the register, to secure a title to one hundred and sixty acres or less, and the time of settlement left to the option of the party acquiring title.

By Mr. ELIOT: The petition of Solomon T. Perry, and others, for the erection of a light-vessel at or near the reef of rocks known as the Hen and Chickens, in Buzzard's bay.

By Mr. HOLMES: The petition of Morgan L. Brown, and others, citizens of Madison county, New York, for an increase of the tariff on wool.

By Mr. PIKE: The petition of O. S. Livermore, and 32 others, of Eastport, Maine, for enactment of laws regulating inter-State insurances.

IN SENATE.

Monday, May 28, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY. The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

DEPOSITS IN NATIONAL BANKS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. WILSON, Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. VAN WINKLE, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. BUCKALEW as the select committee to inquire into the condition of the national banks with reference to Government deposits therein, under the resolution adopted by the Senate on the 24th instant.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 9th of February last, information in relation to a compendium of medical statistics collected during the late war; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Second Auditor of the Treasury, communicating, in obedience to law, copies of accounts of persons charged with the disbursement of moneys, goods, or effects of any kind for the benefit of the Indians from July 1, 1864, to June 30, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the memorial of John C. Jacobi, late chaplain of Kalorama hospital, praying for compensation for loss of property by fire at that hospital on the 24th of December, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the petition of Joseph Taylor, of Baltimore, in which he says that he fervently prays and beseeches Congress to take into consideration the suffering condition of over twenty thousand journeymen cigar-makers in the United States, and he asks Congress to increase the duties on imported cigars to three dollars per thousand and fifty per cent. ad valorem; and also to reduce the duty on Havana tobacco eighteen and three quarter cents per pound. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I also offer a petition of cigar-makers of Massachusetts, in which they set forth at length their grievances from the inequality of the laws regulating the cigar trade of the United States, and they ask remedies, which they set forth at length, to the end that they may be relieved from the evils complained of, and they say at the end "the only feasible plan is to put a direct tax on the leaf, for which your petitioners will ever pray." I move the reference of this petition also to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I also offer a petition, numerous signed by citizens of Andover, in Massachusetts, praying Congress to impose such conditions upon the rebel States as shall punish treason, at least with ineligibility to office and loss of power, and reward loyalty with confidence and honor; and which shall demand, as an evidence of sincere loyalty and good faith on the part of those States, the abolition of all distinctions, in their constitutions and laws, on account of color or race. As that subject is now pending before the Senate, I move that this petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD presented a petition of citizens of Keokuk, Iowa, praying for the passage of a general bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GRIMES. I present the petition of officers and late officers and seamen of the Mississippi flotilla, who represent that they entered the public service at the commencement of the war and continued in it until its close, and that they have not received that proportion of prize money resulting from captures made by the flotilla that they were entitled to under the laws when they entered the service, nor such an amount as was received by those who were associated with them in the same service upon the Atlantic ocean, and praying for relief. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CONNESS, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 257) to regulate the occupation of mineral lands, and to extend the right of preemption thereto, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report in writing; which was ordered to be printed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. HENDRICKS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 341) amendatory of the preemption laws, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

RAILROAD TO POINT OF ROCKS.

Mr. WADE. I offer a resolution, and as it is merely a resolution of inquiry, I ask for its present consideration:

Whereas the necessity of the nation requires that the seat of Government should be more accessible to the great interests and convenience of the eastern, and particularly to the western portion of the same; and whereas the State of Maryland did, by an act approved March —, 1865, grant to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company the right to construct a railroad from the said railroad at the Point of Rocks to the line of the District of Columbia, with a purpose to run the same into the city of Washington: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire into the fact whether said railroad company intend to carry out the provisions of their said charter.

Mr. CRESWELL. I am not aware of the object of this resolution, but I suppose, of course, it is fairly stated on its face. My colleague [Mr. JOHNSON] is not here to-day, but will be here to-morrow.

Mr. WADE. I will state to the Senator that this resolution concludes no right; it is only an inquiry as to whether the company intend to build the road. I was requested to ask for its present consideration, but I have no objection to its going over if the Senator so desires.

Mr. CRESWELL. I prefer that it should go over until to-morrow.

Mr. WADE. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over until to-morrow.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 339, reported from the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 339) granting a pension to Benjamin Franklin was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Benjamin Franklin, a private in company H, second regiment Minnesota cavalry volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month, to commence from the 15th day of January, 1865, and to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAIRO AND FULTON RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 223.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 223) to revive and extend the provisions of an act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point upon the Mississippi, opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi river, approved February 9, 1853, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. POMEROY, in section one, line three, after the word "that" to strike out the words "the above recited act" and to insert, "the act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri, to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point upon the Mississippi opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi river, approved February 9, 1853."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

KANSAS AND NEOSHO VALLEY RAILROAD.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I rise to ask the Senator from Missouri if he desires to take up that bill in the absence of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. LANE,] who, I understand, is opposed to the bill. I do not know why that Senator is absent this morning, but I suppose he will be here during the day. I have no desire on my own part to postpone the consideration of the bill any further; but it seems to me that it ought not to be taken up when the Senator from Kansas is out of his seat—I presume necessarily so.

Mr. HENDERSON. One of the Senators from Kansas is present.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But the Senator from Kansas who is absent is opposed to the bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I presume my colleague will be in before we complete the reading of the bill. He is in town, and I know of no reason why he is not here. I presume that if we take up the bill he will be here before its reading is completed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I happen to have received a note from the Senator from Kansas, not in regard to this bill but with reference to another matter, in which he stated that he should be necessarily detained from the Senate to-day.

Mr. POMEROY. I know of no reason why we should not proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is a question for the Senator from Missouri and other Senators to consider whether when a Senator from the State where the grant is proposed to be made, who is opposed to the bill, is absent, we ought to take it up in his absence. I think not.

Mr. HOWARD. I know very little of the merits of the bill which it is proposed to take up now; but as the Senator from Kansas is not in his seat at present I hope it will not be taken up, but that instead of it we shall take up House bill No. 11, relating to commerce between the States.

Mr. HENDERSON. I rise simply for the purpose of withdrawing my motion and giving a notice to the Senate. This is the third time this bill has been called up. It is really a matter of very little consequence; it simply involves perhaps the grant of five or six or seven thousand acres of land in the State of Kansas. Beyond that I think it cannot interfere with anybody's rights. I do not know that it interferes with anybody's rights in that respect. It is nothing more than a usual and ordinary land grant. This is the third time I have attempted to get the bill up, and something comes in the way all the time. I now give notice that I shall, after to-morrow, call the bill up no matter who is present or who is absent, and ask that the Senate vote upon the proposition.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand the Senator from Missouri to withdraw his motion.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir; I withdraw it for the present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 363) supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SIDNEY PERHAM of Maine, Mr. GEORGE V. LAWRENCE of Pennsylvania, and Mr. NELSON TAYLOR of New York managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 568) to repeal section twenty-three of chapter seventy-nine of the acts of the third session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress, relating to passports.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had appointed Mr. S. E. ANCONA, of Pennsylvania, as one of the managers at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 85) for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, in place of Mr. ADAM J. GLOSSBRENNER, who has been excused from serving at said conference.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 602) to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the late war for the Union; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 143) making an appropriation for the repair of the Potomac bridge.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed an enrolled bill (H. R. No. 568) to repeal section twenty-three of chapter seventy-nine of the acts of the third session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

INTER-STATE INTERCOURSE.

Mr. HOWARD. I now move to take up House bill No. 11.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 11) to facilitate commercial, postal, and military communication among the several States, the question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. CRESWELL, to add the following as an additional section to the bill:

And be it further enacted, That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. SUMNER. I would simply remark that that amendment is entirely superfluous. Congress can do what is there proposed at any time. I do not see any use in adding the words.

Mr. MORRILL. That depends very much, I believe, upon questions which may arise before the courts. It has been pretty well settled in this country that there are certain rights which inhere in corporations, that cannot be repealed unless the power to do so is reserved.

Mr. CHANDLER. This bill is general in its character; there are no specific rights granted to any one corporation over others. The power which this amendment proposes to reserve is evidently contained in the original bill. I would rather take the bill as it is, and I prefer that the amendment should not be adopted.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 12, noes 13.

Mr. MORRILL. I feel under a sort of obligation to pay a passing compliment to this bill. I once had some thoughts collected on this subject on one or two points, but they have pretty much passed out of my mind at the present moment, and I am rather apprehensive that I shall not be able to recall them at this time in a way at all satisfactory or instructive to the Senate; but it is a matter of quite too much importance to be allowed to go by default. I am not going to speak against time, and I do not propose to make a very discursive speech. I propose only to reply to two or three propositions which were stated on a former occasion on the other side of the Chamber.

The honorable Senator from Michigan [Mr. HOWARD] when this question was up the other day denominated it a very simple proposition, by which I suppose he meant to convey to us the idea that it was an unmixed and plain proposition, one that was uncompounded with other questions. I believe he thought it so plain, so simple, so unmixed, and clear that even the great power and ingenuity of the honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] "to make the worse appear the better reason" could not obscure it.

Now, sir, what is the proposition so characterized by the honorable Senator from Michigan? We all know what the bill is. The bill, in its comprehension and sweep, asserts that the Government of the United States may authorize the railroads in the several States to make connections with each other, without regard to the terms of their charters and without regard to the laws and constitutions of the several States. That is the general proposition; but the proposition which the honorable Senator from Michigan maintains is so clear and explicit that no sophistry of argumentation can obscure it. It is simply the proposition that the Government of the United States has the exclusive power to regulate foreign commerce and commerce among the States. I do not mean to misstate the honorable Senator. I understand that to be his proposition, that it is clear beyond cavil and beyond controversy that the Government of the United States has the exclusive right to regulate foreign commerce and commerce among the States. I do not deny that proposition. I think that is clear and conclusive. The very statement of it carries conviction. Nobody denies it on this side of the Chamber that I know of. But is that all there is in this case? Does the honorable Senator mean to say that when he has declared that proposition to be a clear one he has argued his case and is entitled to a verdict? Is there no other question of commerce than foreign commerce and commerce among the States? When the honorable Senator has made that declaration and asserted that proposition he has not reached this case at all. He has argued it, to be sure, very adroitly; he has shown that he understands the skill of the profession which he ornaments; but he has not begun to approach this case. This bill has nothing to do with foreign commerce, and I suggest to the honorable Senator that it has very little to do with commerce among the States.

The great distinction for which I contend, and which the Senator on the former occasion did not touch, nay, did not approach, is this: while I concede that the jurisdiction of the United States is exclusive and supreme over foreign commerce and commerce among the States, there is a commerce which is internal, which is domestic, and which is exclusively within the power of the States. That is the proposition to which I invite the attention of the honorable Senator and to which I commend him. This bill invades that commerce, and therefore I oppose it. The honorable Senator will find in the history of the legislation of this country, in the history of the Constitution, in its interpretation by the wise men who inaugurated it, and in its interpretation by the courts, that the distinction which I insist upon has been recognized in every department of the Government; that there is a commerce foreign and among the States, and there is a commerce of the States and in the States which is peculiar to the States and with which the Government of the United States has nothing to do, and upon which it cannot trench. That is the doctrine. The point I shall undertake to establish to-day, if I succeed in collecting myself sufficiently to make reference to the books, is, that this bill is unauthorized by the Constitution, because it trenches on the reserved rights of the States to regulate that commerce which is internal and in the States and not among the States.

My honorable friend from Wisconsin, not now in his seat, [Mr. Howe,] characterized this as "a very little proposition"—I think that was his phrase—so small and so harmless that it created surprise in his mind that it had ever arrested the attention of anybody. He was surprised that it should have been opposed by any one. I believe he said it was as harmless as a walking-stick in the hands of its owner or at his feet; that it contained no powers the exercise of which anybody should apprehend. But, sir, what was his argument? How did he illustrate the simple and harmless character of this "little proposition?" Before he took his seat he contended that the Government of the United States had the authority, under and by virtue of its power to regulate commerce, to build roads or canals in any of the States, and to go the full length of fixing the rates of fare and freights upon the railways which have been created entirely within the States. That was his proposition—"a very little proposition," says the honorable Senator from Wisconsin; such a one as should not create apprehension anywhere; which is explained to be a power sufficiently comprehensive and broad by the Government of the United States to build railroads and canals anywhere and everywhere through the States without their consent and against their authority; and superadded to all that the power to appropriate all the railroads and canals which have been built by the enterprise and industry of the American people in the States, by fixing the rates of tolls and fares on these internal avenues! It is needless to tell me that a power which goes thus far and which authorizes the fixing of the tolls and the freights is not a power to regulate and control and direct all these avenues. It was well said, long ago, that—

"You take my life
When you do take the means whereby I live."

And the power of the General Government which asserts the right to fix the tolls, the rates of fare and freights on these roads, takes the vital forces from these roads.

This measure naturally raises the question of power between the Government of the United States and of the several States; and of course, in the consideration of such a subject, it becomes necessary to draw the line somewhat between the authority of the Government of the United States on the question of regulating the commerce of the United States with foreign nations and among the States and that power which is peculiar to the people of the several States. I know it has been attempted in this argument, now and heretofore, to prejudice this side of the case by the argument that we were raising here the old doctrine of State rights and State sovereignty; that those who seek to oppose this bill seek to oppose it upon the ground of State rights and State sovereignty, and State rights and State sovereignty in an offensive sense.

Now, Mr. President, for myself I disclaim all such purpose, and I disclaim any desire or purpose to put it upon any such ground. Sir, I am not a believer in the doctrine of State sovereignty and never was; that is, in the sense in which it has been contended for. I believe that State sovereignty is a myth, a political myth, in the sense in which it has been or ever could be contended for. The right of absolute sovereignty never did inhere in any of these States; it never was in the colonies. While the colonies were integral parts of Great Britain they were, of course, subject to the jurisdiction of Great Britain, and it was idle to talk about sovereignty in colonies. When the colonies revolutionized, they did not revolutionize for themselves individually, but for the country at large. It was united America that accomplished the Revolution. It was not a revolution in favor of thirteen independent nations, but a revolution for the American people; the American people in unity effected the Revolution; and therefore the sovereignty inhered in the American people at large, the American people united. United America achieved the Revolution, and it was not a revolution of thirteen independent and sovereign nations. Therefore no such thing as absolute sovereignty ever did inhere in the thirteen States, except in the thirteen States as represented by the American people united.

I therefore, sir, go entirely wide off from the doctrine of State sovereignty and State rights; but while I do that, I stand upon the doctrines of the Constitution as represented in the reserved rights of the American people. I maintain that the Government of the United States under the Constitution of the United States is a limited and not an absolute Government; that while the American people delegated certain functions to the Government of the United States which were to be exercised by it, and the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States among those functions, it expressly reserved to itself all the powers not therein expressly delegated; and, sir, the interests which I advocate to-day are the interests which were expressly reserved. While the people did grant, I concede, to Congress the right to regulate commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, it reserved to itself the right to regulate domestic commerce, commerce which was exclusively internal and in the States. That question which springs necessarily from the right of eminent domain belongs exclusively to the States and never was in the General Government. Nobody has contended, and I presume nobody will contend, that the right of eminent domain exists anywhere except in the States. Nobody ever did contend, and I am sure nobody ever will, that the right to land, the title to real estate ever vested in the Government of the United States. The people of the several States do not draw their titles to their property from the Government of the United States, nor hold of it nor under it; but those rights are now all in the States, and necessarily the right of eminent domain is in the States; and from the earliest period of this Government down to the present time never has the General Government undertaken to enter upon the soil of any State to exercise the right of eminent domain in its own right or to take possession of the soil of the several States except by the consent of the States. I commend the honorable Senator from Michigan, when he again takes up the line of his argument, to his reading on this subject, and he will find through the whole history of the legislation of this country and throughout the judicial decisions no single instance where the Government of the United States has ever undertaken to exercise the right of eminent domain in any one State; and simply for the reason that the right belongs to the States and not to the General Government. Of course, sir, I am not now discussing the extraordinary powers which are exercised in time of war; I am discussing the power of commerce, commercial questions.

In this way I undertake to go entirely aside from the questions of State rights and State sovereignty which are raised here; and the only distinction I seek to raise is the distinction between commerce foreign and among the States and that which is in the States and peculiarly of the States and springs up from the exercise of those reserved rights which belong to the people exclusively. Whenever this distinction ceases to exist in the minds of the American Congress, then, sir, your Government is transformed from a Government of delegated and limited powers to an absolute and imperial Government.

Now, sir, to show that there is some danger on this subject, and that I do not misapprehend the tendency of the times and the tendency of the doctrine which is contended for in this bill, having already adverted to the ground maintained by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] as to the power of the Government to build railroads and canals in the several States and to fix the tolls and rates of freights and fares upon existing roads, let me call the attention of the Senate to what is transpiring in this very Congress in this direction as illustrating the dangerous tendency of the exercise of this power and the extent to which it is proposed to carry it. I have before me a bill originating in the House of Representatives, and which, if passed there, will be sent here for the concurrence of the Senate. It is a bill with this significant title: "A bill to authorize the construction of national railroads and establish the same as military and commercial roads." That is the sounding title of the bill—a bill to establish national railroads! Upon an examination of this bill you will find its scope and comprehension to be this: it authorizes, in the first section, any five or more persons, being citizens of the United States, to associate themselves together as a body politic and corporate with full power to designate by a certificate a route for a railway across this continent. There is no limitation in the bill. Any five persons who choose to associate themselves under the power of this bill, having filed a certificate in the Bureau of National Railroads, which is authorized by the bill, may build a railway in any direction within the limits and jurisdiction of the United States, through any State or any Territory, and may exercise the right of eminent domain as a corporation, go in any direction they please, and bring to their backs the entire authority and power of the Government of the United States to take and condemn property, no matter what, real estate, highways of the several States, railways of the several States, navigable streams of the several States, or whatever they choose to appropriate. I do not misstate the force of this bill or what is contemplated under it. It is a bill to organize a bureau in a Department of this Government, with the power in a general way to associate any number of individuals, not less than five, with the power to construct national railways in any direction and in all directions. I ask the honorable Senator from Michigan whether he is prepared to go quite that length; for, sir, this bill is following exactly in the track of the bill which is before the Senate; it is the legitimate fruit of the doctrine of that bill, no more, no less. The third section of this bill is that "there shall be assigned to the Comptroller of National Railroads"—we are to enter upon a grand system of national railways; these railways are to be constructed through the several States in any direction or in all directions, limited only by the desire and the ambition and the ability of the parties who are thus organized by this bill.

Mr. President, was it ever supposed until now, was it ever dreamed by anybody in Congress or out of Congress until now, that there was power in the Government of the United States to authorize a body of men to build railways without regard to the laws of the several States or the improvements of the several States, in any direction and in all directions, throughout the length and breadth of the Republic? Why, sir, it may sound well to talk of a national railway system! The term has a large sound, I admit; and if we were in imperial France or in the Russias, I could understand how such a bill as that could be introduced. If these States were mere departments of an imperial and absolute Government, I could understand how you could have a national railway system inaugurated here at the seat of Government which might build its railways in all directions; but when I know that this Government is a Government of limited powers, when I know that it has no power except what it derives from the Constitution, and that Constitution is silent on this subject, and when I know, moreover, that the powers that are not delegated are reserved to the people, and that the people for half a century have been exercising these very powers and have built up a grand system of railways threading this whole country, I hesitate to believe that the Government of the United States either has the power to exercise any such functions or that it is at all expedient to exercise them if it had.

Mr. President, it is a great mistake to suppose that the strength of this nation lies in the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States is not strong. The strength of this nation is in the American people; and the strength of the nation is in the American people as they exercise it on the basis of their reserved rights. There is no strength outside of that. The Government of the United States is absolute weakness standing by itself; when not backed by the people we have seen during this war that it was weakness itself. From the very nature of the case it must be so. It was designed to be so. The Government of the United States was never designed to be strong, only for protection; only for general defense. But, sir, in all the relations which constitute the strength of the nation you must rely on the people. The strength of this nation and the power of this nation is in the people; the strength and power of the people are in their reserved rights—rights independent of the Government to direct their primary relations.

As illustrating this same principle, to show the tendency to do everything in a national way—for nothing is supposed to be legitimate about these times except it has the indorsement of nationality—let me read the title of another bill. They not only propose, you see, to frame a general bill by which you may form national railway corporations to make railroads throughout the length and breadth of the land, but they propose to do it exactly as you would form private corporations for manufacturing establishments in the several States, exactly on that plan; but they propose something more. Here are two bills that have a practical bearing on this question and a practical application of the general principle contended for in this general bill and growing out of the bill we have under consideration to-day, and illustrating the power which the friends of this bill claim to assert on the part of the General Government. Now, let me read the title of a bill introduced into the House of Representatives on the 30th of April:

A bill to authorize the Cleveland and Mahoning Railroad Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the States of Ohio and Pennsylvania, to continue and construct the railroad of said company from the village of Youngstown, Mahoning county, in said State of Ohio, to and into the said State of Pennsylvania, and thence by the most advantageous and practicable route to the city of Pittsburgh, in said State of Pennsylvania, and to establish said road as a military, postal, and commercial railroad of the United States.

Now, what is the effect of that bill? Here is a corporation chartered by the State of Ohio to build a road within the limits and jurisdiction of Ohio, of course, and this is a bill which authorizes that corporation, the creature of the power of Ohio, to extend its road to Pennsylvania, another State, and into Pennsylvania to a certain point, some one hundred miles more or less, with all the powers and privileges and immunities that that corporation has within the limits of Ohio. Is it possible that the Government of the United States has any such power? Is it possible that the Government of the United States can authorize and empower a railroad corporation, chartered to build a road within a particular State, to run its road into another State, and there to exercise all the privileges, powers, and immunities that it may exercise in the State that gave it the charter of incorporation? That is this bill; that is the principle of the bill now before the Senate.

To show you how prolific this principle is, I will read you the title of another bill springing from the same source; for I believe all have the same paternity, all come from the same quarter; and as they are laid here upon our tables, for our instruction, I suppose, if not for our edification, I may allude to them by way of illustrating my argument. This is "A bill to promote the construction of a line of railways between the city of Washington and the Northwest"—for what? For commercial purposes? For military purposes? Why, sir, to show you the looseness with which we go, here is "A bill to promote the construction of a line of railways between the city of Washington and the Northwest, for national purposes." Not only is it contended that you may do it for commercial purposes, that you may do it for military purposes, but now you may do it "for national purposes;" and what is "national" we are not told by this bill. The bill sets out with this interpretation of itself:

Whereas there is now a complete line of railroad between the city of Washington and Cumberland, in Alleghany county, in the State of Maryland, which is about being shortened nearly fifty miles by a line from said city of Washington to the Point of Rocks, on the Potomac river, in Frederick county, in said State; and whereas a company has been incorporated by the State of Maryland to construct a railroad from Cumberland aforesaid to the Pennsylvania line, in the direction of Pittsburg, designed to connect with a railroad in Pennsylvania to the latter city; and whereas the Pittsburg and Connellsville Railroad Company, incorporated by the State of Pennsylvania, has completed a railroad from Pittsburg to Connellsville, on a line to connect with the Maryland road aforesaid; and whereas but a comparatively short distance between Cumberland and Pittsburg remains to be completed to furnish with the railroad between Washington and Cumberland a direct railroad communication, by a short and advantageous route, between Washington city and Pittsburg and the connections with the Northwest from the latter city; and whereas the Legislature of Pennsylvania has attempted to create impediments in connecting the railroads so as aforesaid authorized to be built in Pennsylvania and Maryland, which prevent at this time the completion of a work of national importance, and has thereby attempted to impair the value of a franchise under which citizens of Maryland and Pennsylvania have made large investments; and whereas it is proper for military and postal purposes, and especially to facilitate and regulate commercial intercourse among the States: Therefore be it enacted, that a railroad may be built to form these connections through the intervention of these State railroad corporations. I do not introduce these bills as arguments. They have not passed, and probably never will pass, the Congress of the United States. I introduce them as illustrating the doctrine, the dangerous tendency of the doctrine of the bill which is now before the Senate.

But, sir, the point to which I threatened to address myself if I sufficiently recovered to make myself explicit was to demonstrate the distinction between commerce external and among the States and commerce internal and peculiar to the State and within its jurisdiction. If I maintain that distinction by the authorities, I rule off this bill. Now, let us see what the books say on that subject. The honorable Senator who champions this bill just at this time—I do not know how many champions it has had; I remember that on a former occasion it had one with whom I congratulate myself that I am not to deal now—seemed to forget altogether that there was such a thing as internal commerce, seemed to forget that we had a system of railroads in this country that was the product of the energy and the enterprise of the people as against the Government, for the Government did nothing for fifty years, while the people, in their own power and might, exercising the high functions reserved in the Constitution, were building up a system of railways incomparable in the history of the world, investing some three thousand millions of their own money, building some thirty thousand miles of railway, offering intercommunication and facilities for travel and intercourse and exchange, bringing markets home to the door of every farmer in the land. Oblivious to all that, the Government all this time stood afar off and did nothing. Now, Mr. President, I maintain that the Government has no power to lay its hands on that commerce, no power to lay its hands on this system of railway intercommunication in the States. I read from Kent's Commentaries; speaking of the commercial power of the Government of the United States, and stating the decision in Gibbons vs. Ogden, he says:

"This power, like all the other powers of Congress, was plenary and absolute within its acknowledged limits, but it was admitted that inspection laws relative to the quality of articles to be exported, and quarantine laws, and health laws of every description, and laws"

Now I ask the honorable Senator's attention to this—

"and laws for regulating the internal commerce of a State, and those with respect to turnpike roads, ferries, &c., were component parts of an immense mass of legislation not surrendered to the General Government."

That is my point, and this authority is to this effect: that although the power of the General Government is supreme in the jurisdiction which is conceded to it, yet, says the commentator, laws "regulating the internal commerce of a State, and those with respect to turnpike roads, ferries, &c., were component parts of an immense mass of legislation not surrendered to the General Government."

Mr. HOWARD. Will the honorable Senator from Maine allow me to say one word right here?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. I have listened to the Senator's citation from Kent, but I see nothing in that which conflicts in the slightest degree with the view which I took of this case. But I ask the honorable Senator whether he finds in Chancellor Kent, or in any other book treating of the constitutional power of Congress over commerce, any assertion or statement of a principle that trade, intercourse, or travel commencing in the city of New York, passing through the State of New Jersey, and ending in the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, is internal commerce. I fancy the honorable Senator will hardly find any such doctrine in Kent, or elsewhere.

Mr. MORRILL. I have been arguing since I got up that that commerce which was among the States was within the power of Congress; but I am combating the doctrine that by force of the power to regulate commerce among the States you can enter a State and take possession of its roads. The proposition of this bill is to authorize a road constructed by New Jersey, entirely within its limits and jurisdiction, to extend itself beyond the limits of its charter, and outside of the limits and jurisdiction of New Jersey. On that question I maintain the authorities are all the other way; and the authority which I am reading recognizes the doctrine of commerce among the States and commerce in the States and purely of the States, over which Congress has no power whatever, and the commentator specifies turnpike roads and ferries as among the roads over which Congress has no control. But further he says:

"The court construed the word 'regulate' to imply full power over the thing to be regulated, and to exclude the actions of all others that would perform the same operation on the same thing."

Further, and bearing on the same point, I read from the same authority:

"Inspection laws, quarantine laws, and health laws, as well as laws for regulating the internal commerce of a State, are component parts of the immense mass of residuary State legislation, and over which Congress has no direct power, though it may be controlled when it directly interferes with their acknowledged powers."

Thus I think, Mr. President, I am maintained by this authority in raising the distinction which I have stated. I acknowledge the right of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and commerce among the States; but when it comes to the jurisdiction of the States and undertakes to make a railroad in a State, or control those which have been constructed within the limits and jurisdiction of the State, and by its authority, its jurisdiction ceases.

Sir, this is not an open question. If there is anything concluded, this question is concluded. Not only has it been concluded by the general teachings of those who made the Constitution of the United States; not only has it been concluded by fifty years of legislation on this subject, denying all the powers which are now claimed to be exercised, but it has been expressly adjudicated by the courts and specifically determined by the courts, that the Congress of the United States has no such power. I referred the honorable Senator, the other day, to the case of the Blackbird creek. I suppose he has become very familiar with the report of that case before this time. That is in the same direction. I have now to add an authority which was not at hand on that occasion, which is explicit and specific on this very question of the right to make railways in the several States.

I read from the case, Veazie et al. vs. Moor, in 14 Howard, page 573, which was a case arising on the internal waters of the State of Maine, where precisely this question was raised. The river Penobscot is a navigable river up to a certain point, and there the navigation which was open to the sea was obstructed by the falls of the river. Above that for many miles it was still navigable, an imperfect navigation. The Legislature of the State of Maine granted the exclusive right to navigate the river above those falls to A, B, and C for a term of years. Those who maintained the doctrine of the honorable Senator from Michigan contended that the right of Congress to regulate navigation upon that river was exclusive, that the State could not interfere, and that its legislation therefore was unconstitutional. The court of my State decided that, although that river was navigable above the falls, the navigation to the sea having been interrupted by the falls, it became internal navigation, and the commerce upon it internal. Those who entertained different opinions, opinions in harmony with those of the honorable Senator apparently, brought the case here. The Supreme Court of the United States sustained the opinion of the court of my State, saying that that navigation was internal and within the exclusive jurisdiction of the State; that the Government of the United States had no control and no authority over it by virtue of that provision of the Constitution. In settling that case, in limitation of the authority of the General Government over this question, they touch upon this precise point of interfering with the railways of the several States. They say:

"Commerce with foreign nations must signify commerce which in some sense is necessarily connected with these nations, transactions which either immediately or at some stage of their progress must be extra-territorial. The phrase can never be applied to transactions wholly internal between citizens of the same community or to a polity and laws whose ends and purposes and operations are restricted to the territory and soil and jurisdiction of such community. Nor can it be properly concluded, that because the products of domestic enterprise in agriculture or manufactures, or in the arts, may ultimately become the subjects of foreign commerce, that the control of the means or the encouragements by which enterprise is fostered and protected, is legitimately within the import of the phrase foreign commerce, or fairly implied in any investiture of the power to regulate such commerce. A pretension as far-reaching as this would extend to contracts between citizen and citizen of the same State, would control the pursuits of the planter, the grazier, the manufacturer, the mechanic, the immense operations of the collieries and mines and furnaces of the country; for there is not one of these avocations, the results of which may not become the subjects of foreign commerce, and be borne either by turnpikes, canals, or railroads, from point to point within the several States toward an ultimate destination like the one above mentioned. Such a pretension would effectually prevent or paralyze every effort at internal improvement by the several States; for it cannot be supposed that the States would exhaust their capital and their credit in the construction of turnpikes, canals, and railroads, the remuneration derivable from which, and all control over which, might be immediately wrested from them because such public works would be facilities for a commerce which, while availing itself of those facilities, was unquestionably internal, although immediately or ultimately it might become foreign."

Here, Mr. President, you find that in settling this question the Supreme Court, by way of illustrating the importance of the principle, and by way of combating the very doctrine contended for in that case, say explicitly that it would be ruinous and an unauthorized application of the principle to say that because the products carried over the roads might ultimately reach an adjoining State or a portion of the country, therefore the Government of the United States might interpose for the construction or regulation of railways within the several States. The court continue, and I beg the honorable Senator's attention to this language:

"The rule here given with respect to the regulation of foreign commerce equally excludes from the regulation of commerce between the States and the Indian tribes the control over turnpikes, canals, or railroads, or the clearing and deepening of water-courses exclusively within the States, or the management of the transportation upon and by means of such improvements."

I ask the honorable Senator from Wisconsin whether he recognizes the soundness of that doctrine. I understood him to say on a former occasion that he had not any doubt of the power of the General Government to construct railroads through the several States, and also to regulate the rates of fares and freights upon those railways; but the court in this case explicitly say that the power to regulate commerce among the States does not admit of an interference with turnpikes, canals, or railroads in the several States.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from Maine has been pressed into making an argument here when he was not expecting it, and as it is desirable that we should transact some executive business I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine give way to the motion of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senate will come to a vote on this bill. I have been trying now for two entire sessions to get a vote upon the question. We are ready to take a vote, and I hope the Senate will grant me a short time to come to a vote. All I ask is a vote. The Senator from Maine pledged me that he would not speak against time, and that he would not speak over thirty minutes; and as the time that the Senator from Maine took for himself is nearly up, I will ask the Senate not to go into executive session, but to give me a vote on this bill that I have been trying now for more than two years to get a vote upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 17, noes 12.

PENSION LAWS.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Before the executive session I hope I shall be indulged in submitting the usual motion for the appointment of a committee of conference on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 363) supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can only entertain the motion by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I now move that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. LANE of Indiana, Mr. VAN WINKLE, and Mr. DAVIS the committee on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 602) to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the late war for the Union was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 143) making an appropriation for the repair of the Potomac bridge was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

THE STAUNTON PETITION.

Mr. WILSON. It will be remembered that a few days since the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] called the attention of the Senate to the case of some petitions from Virginia, and in the debate on that subject the name of Mr. Segar was used. I have since received a letter from him which he requests may be read to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can only be received and read by unanimous consent. No objection being made, the reading will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

ERRIT HOUSE, May 27, 1866.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to certain allegations of a Staunton (Virginia) correspondent of Senator TRUMBULL, connecting me with some attempt to persecute the Union men of Augusta county, I beg leave to make the following statement:

Some two weeks since, I received from Nicholas K. Trout, Esq., of Staunton, a member of the State Senate, and whom I had never known but as an earnest Union man, a letter addressed to me as Senator-elect of my State, and requesting me to see Judge Underwood and procure, if I had the influence, the appointment of Mr. Harvey Risk as commissioner under the civil rights law for the Valley region of the State, he being represented to me as a gentleman of character and capacity who had been a member of the freedmen's court, and who had in that capacity given satisfaction to the community, white and black. This part of the commission I duly executed.

In the succeeding portion of Mr. Trout's letter he stated that a petition purporting to have come from Staunton had been presented to the Senate and referred to the Military Committee which (he said) exhibited the people of Augusta county in a light they did not deserve, and that he desired information of the terms of the petition and of the signatures thereto, more especially as he had not been able, after inquiry, to find a single person in Staunton who had signed the petition.

Regarding myself practically as a representative of the people of my State, and every day while in the city attending to their business in the several Departments, though denied thus far the honor of an actual seat in the Senate, I went to yourself as chairman of the Military Committee, briefly stated the case, and asked to be allowed a copy of the petition, to which you readily assented, and sent a messenger with me to your committee-room for the copy.

I copied the petition myself, not wishing to trouble the clerk, and inclosed a copy by the first mail to Mr. Trout.

This is the whole of my connection with this affair. I did nothing more than discharge a representative duty, furnish a copy of a public document, for what object to be used could be known only to those seeking it, and not knowing myself personally nor having ever seen a single signer of the petition.

The idea that I could enter into any scheme to persecute Union men anywhere is simply preposterous and ridiculous, for I do not suppose there is a single man in all the South who has come in for so large a share of rebel persecution and obloquy as myself.

Very respectfully and truly yours, JOSEPH SEGAR.

Hon. HENRY WILSON, Senate United States.

Mr. CONNESS. In connection with this subject I desire to say that I had a Richmond paper on my desk a few days past, which I have sought to obtain again, but do not find, which contained an article directly connected with this subject. It consisted of a brutal attack upon the Union men of Virginia, the Union men who were Virginians residing now within Virginia; and the article appeared to have been instigated by this petition sent from Staunton to Congress asking for protection. I think the article had an indicative heading such as "cowards and recreants," or something to that effect. It denounced those men as cowards and recreants, and warned them to leave the State; plainly told them they would not be permitted to stay there, and that they had better get ready to go as soon as the blue coats should leave, meaning the soldiers of the United States who were then left in the State of Virginia. There is no doubt in the world that there is a settled purpose there to drive from the State of Virginia the loyal Virginians who are now living there. I have now in my possession a copy of the Richmond Examiner, I think, in which the grand jurors who recently sat at Norfolk and indicted Mr. Davis for the crime of treason are taken up, one by one, and discussed and denounced, threatened, attacked in the most bitter manner, their lives misrepresented, their characters misrepresented, and Virginians warned not to associate with them nor to have contact with them and not to deal with those of them who are in business. In that connection the gentleman now holding the office of collector of the port of Richmond was denounced because two persons in his employment were summoned as witnesses or jurors—I forget now which—which witnesses or jurors were soldiers in the Union Army, and one at least of whom was imprisoned in the rebel prisons eight months. The collector is denounced in this paper because he dares to keep in his employment two loyal soldiers who have given themselves to the Union cause.

I feel that as attention has now again been directed to this case, the matter should not pass without adding this statement, calling the attention of the Senate and the country again to the deliberate purpose of the rebels, led on and egged on by the rebel press of Virginia, to drive from their midst every loyal man in the State. I hope it will be found consistent with public duty, and with a proper exercise of power on the part of the executive department of this Government, to see that these men shall not be abandoned, but that treason shall be suppressed in its fiendish utterances against these loyal men.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to make a statement in regard to the matter before the Senate. I received a letter from a gentleman of high standing in Staunton, a few days after the petition was presented to this body asking for troops to be sent for the protection of loyal men, stating to me that the signatures were, in the judgment of the people there, forgeries. I answered his letter only the other day. I called upon the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs some time ago to know if I could get a copy of the petition. He said I could, and I received one in the Senate but three or four days ago.

I am further informed by the gentleman that when the person who professed to act as a notary public had that paper before him there was nothing in the form of a petition over the names. There was a paper containing names, and the petition was subsequently drawn over the names. I am satisfied myself, from the representations of the gentleman in Staunton who wrote to me upon the subject, that the signatures to this paper are forgeries to a great extent, and I am told by a gentleman who has inspected the original petition that in his judgment the names were signed by the same pen and the same ink, all except three, and by the same individual.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move the Senate adjourn.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to move a reconsideration of a nomination in executive session.

Mr. CLARK. I move that we proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ANTHONY. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. POLAND. I believe we are in executive session.

Mr. CONNESS. No; the Senate voted to go into executive session, but the doors, as I understand, have been considered open for certain business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts commenced reading a letter and the Chair asked if there was any objection to its being read. None was made, and the letter was read. The Senator from California then went on to make remarks, and then the Senator from Delaware. The doors were open during this time certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. I move now that they be considered closed, and that we go on with executive business.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Before that motion is put, I should like to say a word in reply to a statement made by the Senator from Delaware, which I think is unjust to the parties who sent this petition here. The petition referred to was presented by me. I have had two or three letters from the gentleman who inclosed me the petition, and I have seen one person who knew him and spoke of him as a respectable gentleman. I have no doubt whatever of the authenticity of the petition. Immediately after the Senator from Delaware applied to me for a copy of the petition, I was apprized by a letter from Staunton that parties had made threats against those who signed this petition. There is nothing in the petition improper for any person to have asked of Congress. The parties simply claimed protection as loyal men. That was all there was in their petition, with the addition of a statement that they could not obtain their rights through the local tribunals, which I am satisfied from many letters I have received is true, not only in Augusta county, Virginia, but elsewhere. I have no doubt that the motive which inspired this attempt to get the names of the parties signed to this petition was for the purpose of persecuting them there. I have seen, since this petition came here, a Staunton paper, and there are a number of articles in it on the subject; among others there are statements by parties whose names were signed to this petition, some of them stating that they did not understand it when they signed it, did not know the character of it. I was informed that an attempt had been made to intimidate the parties who had signed the paper and get them to disavow it, that there had been such a public pressure brought to bear upon them that they were making various excuses to avoid the persecutions that it was likely to visit upon them, and that in some instances, as the Senator from Delaware has intimated now, it was charged that the names were forged. The parties wrote me for the original petition to show that the men's names were there. They were not willing to rest under such imputation as that of having sent a petition here with names that were never signed by the parties. The original petition has been sent out there to confront those who make such a statement.

Now, sir, I have no doubt in the world of the authenticity of the petition from all that I have heard in regard to it. As I stated, I have had more than one letter from the gentleman who inclosed it to me, who is represented to me—I do not know him personally—to be a citizen resident there in Augusta county, and there were affidavits accompanying the petition stating that the parties whose names were signed were residents there. I know none of them; but I state these facts, and I think it very unjust to the petitioners to have the imputation cast upon them here that the names signed were forgeries. It looks to me very much more like an attempt on the part of that wicked spirit which prevails, I am sorry to say, in some portions of the South to persecute any man who is loyal and true to the Union and has been so during the rebellion.

Mr. SAULSBURY. One word, Mr. President. All I have to say in reply to the Senator from Illinois is that he acts upon his own information; he forms his own judgment from the information he has received from Staunton. I form mine upon the information that I have received, and I know that my information comes from sources that at least entitle it to my respect and confidence. I was assured, in a letter, that diligent inquiry had been made to ascertain who it was, if there was any one there that had signed such a petition, and no one could be found.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator allow me to inquire why was such an inquiry instituted? What was the object of it?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will tell the Senator why it was. It was because it was believed that there was an attempt made to misrepresent the men of Staunton and of that county, and for some purpose of private malice against some particular individuals to have soldiers sent there to be quartered upon and to oppress the people. That was the object, as I understand from the letter. Now, sir, if there is any disposition to persecute any man on account of his loyalty or otherwise, in Staunton or in Augusta county, I am no party to that; but I as firmly believe that the statement made to me is true, from the gentleman from whom I received it, as the honorable Senator from Illinois believes that his information is correct.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware one question: if he himself would countenance the visiting of popular censure upon any man for sending a petition in respectful terms to the Congress of the United States, whether he agreed with his views or not?

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This discussion is proceeding only by the unanimous consent of the Senate. It is not necessary that a motion be made to go into executive session; but it is the duty of the Chair to execute that order of the Senate whenever requested to do so by any Senator.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say a word in reply to the question put to me by the Senator from Illinois. I have condemned, and have had cause to condemn in the bitterest terms, petitions sent from my own neighborhood and from my own State to get the military quartered upon us—petitions sent for soldiers to keep us from the polls. So, when the Senator asks me if I would condemn a man for signing a petition which was respectful in its terms, I say yes. It is according to the subject-matter; I would condemn no man for asking in respectful terms for a remedy for any existing wrong; but when his object is oppression, himself, then I would condemn him.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Would you not allow him to judge whether it was wrong or not?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a right to judge, too.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must execute the order of the Senate, and have the doors closed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before that is done I wish to make an appeal to the Senator from Rhode Island to withdraw his motion for a moment. His motion, I believe, is to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion has been withdrawn. The Senate made an order some time ago that it proceed to the consideration of executive business, but by common consent this discussion went on until interrupted by another motion to go into executive session. On that motion being called to the attention of the Chair it becomes the duty of the Chair to execute the order already made and have the doors closed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before the Chair executes that order I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to make one inquiry. I wish to inquire whether a Senator can in any case be called upon to explain why he has obtained a copy of a document on the files of the Senate, which is a public document, not belonging to the executive files of the body. I do not understand this. I have always thought that when a constituent of mine wrote to me for anything that appertained to the public business of the Senate I had a right, without any question about it, to send him information in regard to it. If I am wrong about that I want to know it. I do not want to get into any scrapes. I supposed that all the documents of the Senate in public session were public documents of the country, and that we could send them if printed, or furnish copies of them if not printed, or information of their contents, without being questioned about it. The reason I make the inquiry is that I am surprised that it is thought necessary in the Senate to make any explanation for having furnished to anybody a copy of any document that is public in its character and belongs to the files of the Senate. If I am wrong about it, I should like to know.

Mr. CLARK. I think the Senator from Indiana is under a misapprehension. The other day the Senator from Illinois asked leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate an original petition for the purpose of returning it to the friends of the petitioners in Staunton, Virginia, on the allegation that it was asserted there that some of the names to the petition had been forged, and there was an attempt to get the names for the purpose of prosecuting or persecuting some of the parties there.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I thought the proposition of the Senator from Illinois in that respect was entirely proper.

Mr. CLARK. But with that application the name of Mr. Segar, of Virginia, became connected in some way. Now, Mr. Segar comes in with a paper to explain his connection with the matter. That is all there is to it. There is no question arising as to the conduct of any Senator.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is all I wanted to know. Now, I wish to suggest on this question of adjournment, before the motion is put—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not to adjourn. That has been withdrawn.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But I presume it will be renewed.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator from Indiana has got through, I will renew the motion that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am not through.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senator will let us know when he gets through, so that I may make the motion before anybody else gets the floor.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am very anxious, for one, that this session of the Senate shall approach its close. I do not want to sit here all summer. I appeal to Senators that we go on with the business, transact it, get done, and go home.

Mr. TRUMBULL. What measure have you to bring forward?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have no measure of my own to bring forward especially, but I am ready to assist any other Senator that has a measure to bring it to a wholesome result.

Mr. SHERMAN. We will expedite business, if you will leave it to us.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The fact that I have no special measure to bring forward does not touch the question. I presented one bill of some interest this morning touching the pre-emption of the public lands, and I hope that will not prolong the session of the Senate. All I want is that we shall go on with business. Now, we have a bill partly discussed, and that has been popping up in this body from time to time for two or three sessions, and I think we had better dispose of it. If it has got merits it ought to pass; if it has not we ought to defeat it. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that we go on in open session with the discussion of that bill and come to a vote upon it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate has already voted to go into executive session.

Mr. CLARK. Now let us have that order executed.

Mr. POLAND. If we are not in executive session I move that we go in.

Mr. CLARK. I ask for the execution of the order already made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In pursuance of the order of the Senate, the Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The Senate having proceeded to the consideration of executive session; the doors were afterward reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 28, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER announced, as the first business in order, the call of committees (commencing with the Committee of Elections) for reports to go upon the Calendar and not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

No reports were presented.

STAMPS ON LEGAL DOCUMENTS.

The SPEAKER stated the next business in order to be the call of States for resolutions, under which call the following resolution, pending last Monday at the expiration of the morning hour, came up for consideration:

Whereas the provisions of the internal revenue law of June 30, 1864, in section one hundred and seventy, under the head of "legal documents," which require certain kinds of process and legal documents used in the courts of the States to be stamped, have been held by the highest courts of several States to be unconstitutional and void; and whereas they are at least of doubtful validity, and in fact impose a tax on redress, which ought always to be as free as possible; Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to consider the propriety of repealing said provisions, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

The resolution was agreed to.

MAPS OF BOUNDARY SURVEY.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to inform this House what progress has been made in completing the maps connected with the boundary survey under the treaty of Washington, with copies of any correspondence on this subject not heretofore printed.

The SPEAKER. This being a call for executive information, unanimous consent is necessary for its consideration on this day.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TREASURY SALES OF GOLD.

Mr. PERHAM submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform this House what amount of gold belonging to the United States has been sold by or under his authority since the 1st instant, and at what rates; also, the name of the agent or agents through whom such sales were effected, and what rate of commission has been authorized by the Department for selling the same.

The SPEAKER. This being a call for executive information, unanimous consent is necessary for its consideration on this day.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC HONORS TO TRAITORS.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution, on which he called the previous question:

Whereas it has been publicly declared by the supreme executive authority of this nation, in accordance with the dictates of sound wisdom, the just instincts of humanity, and the undoubted sentiment of the people of the loyal States, that treason should be made odious, and traitors not only disgraced, but impoverished; and whereas it is represented that while no traitor who has survived the chances of the battle-field and escaped the retribution due to his crimes at the hands of the loyal soldiers of the North, has been otherwise punished than by the award of public honors or the remission of disabilities to qualify him for the enjoyment thereof, the memories of the traitor dead have been hallowed and consecrated by local public entertainments and treasonable utterances in honor of their crime, which have not only been tolerated by the national authorities, but in some instances approved by closing the public offices on the occasion of floral processions to their graves, while the privilege of paying like honors to the martyred dead of the armies of the Union who perished in the holy work of punishing the treason of those who are thus honored, and restoring the Union of our fathers, has been denied to the loyal people of those communities by the local authorities, with the connivance or consent of the military or civil agents of this Government; and whereas the encouragement or toleration of such enormities is of pernicious and dangerous example, insulting to the living soldiers of the Republic, as well as to the memories of the dead, and calculated to make loyalty odious and treason honorable, and to obstruct, if not entirely prevent, the growth of such a feeling as is essential to any cordial or permanent reunion of these States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President be requested to inform this House whether any of the military or civil employes of this Government, within the State of Georgia or any of the other rebel States, have in any way countenanced or assisted in the rendition of public honors to any of the traitors, either living or dead, who have been waging a parricidal war against this Government, in commemoration of their great crime, either by closing their offices on such occasions or making other favorable public demonstrations in connection therewith; and further, whether the privilege of doing like honors to loyalty at the graves of the Union soldiers who have perished far from their homes and kindred has been, in any instance, obstructed or denied by the rebel authorities, with the concurrence or acquiescence of the officers of this Government.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I raise the point of order that this resolution, being a call for executive information, must lie over under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. That motion cannot be made during the morning hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When may it be made?

The SPEAKER. When the morning hour has expired.

DISPENSING WITH EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. THAYER submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the evening sessions of the House be dispensed with until otherwise ordered.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. THAYER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution, and demanded the previous question on its adoption:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish to this House a report showing the amount of funds received by the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, from its organization to the 1st day of April, 1866; from what sources the same were derived, and to what general purpose appropriated; the amount (or value) of subsistence stores received and expended within said period; the value of quartermaster's property received prior to and amount remaining on hand on said 1st April; the estimated cost of transportation furnished on requisitions or orders from said bureau to said date, specifying what share of the same was for refugees, for freedmen, and for officers, soldiers, and civilians connected with said bureau; the amount of land included in the Government farms, so called, in charge of said bureau in the year 1865, and the value of the crops raised thereon; the number of buildings occupied by said bureau on the 1st day of September, 1865, and the amount of rent claimed for all lands and buildings previously occupied, up to April 1, 1866, by the owners or pretended owners thereof; the value of personal property, if any, seized and applied to the uses of the bureau in any of the rebellious States; the number of officers of the Army or volunteers of each grade who had been or were on duty in said bureau previous to said 1st of April, and the gross amount of pay and allowances, as nearly as the same can be readily ascertained, to which such officers were entitled while thus on duty, and the amount of estimates of quartermasters' funds required by quartermasters on duty in said bureau for the use thereof, up to said April 1, and the amount transferred on said estimates.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. STEVENS submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to bring in a bill to double the pensions caused by the casualties of war with the so-called confederate States.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that a bill passed this House a few days since and is now awaiting the action of the Senate. I think, perhaps, it will meet the views of the gentleman. This also is a resolution of instruction.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not understand that any bill has passed the House to meet the object I have in view.

Mr. TAYLOR. It grades the disabilities.

Mr. STEVENS. My idea is that all these pensions should be doubled; and that is the idea contained in the resolution.

Mr. TAYLOR. I suggest, then, that the gentleman make the resolution one of inquiry.

Mr. STEVENS. There is no necessity of inquiring into the expediency of doing it. I want to test the sense of the House on the subject.

Mr. PERHAM. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he will not allow the resolution to be one of inquiry.

Mr. STEVENS. If I were sure the committee would report in a couple of weeks I would consent to that modification.

Mr. PERHAM. The committee would be prepared to make some sort of a report in that time.

Mr. STEVENS. I agree to that modification.

Mr. SPALDING. I object to debate.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

GOVERNMENT RAILROAD PROPERTY.

Mr. KELLEY submitted the following resolution, and demanded the previous question on its adoption:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives a schedule of all railroad property which was in the possession of the Government on May 1, 1865; whether held by right of capture or by purchase, and if by purchase, stating the cost. Also what disposition has been made of such property; if sold, whether for cash or credit, and if for credit, under what law or authority, and whether the purchase money has been paid, or what steps have been taken to recover it.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Does not that lie over, if objected to?

The SPEAKER. Being a call for executive information, if objected to, it lies over for one day.

Mr. FARNSWORTH objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection, when it was renewed by Mr. Ross.

MEMPHIS RIOT.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish to this House, if not inconsistent with the public interest, a copy of the report of Major General George Stoneman as to the recent riot at Memphis.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask the gentleman to modify his resolution so as to include all other reports in his possession on the same subject.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I agree to that modification.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REBEL STATES.

Mr. STEVENS introduced a bill to enable the States lately in rebellion to regain their privileges in the Union; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

ABOLITION OF BREVET RANK.

Mr. SCHENCK submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing all laws authorizing brevet rank in the Army of the United States; and providing that all such distinction being abolished, some other mark, badge, recognition, or reward for gallant actions or meritorious conduct shall be substituted instead; and that the committee report by bill or otherwise.

WAR OF 1812.

Mr. SPALDING submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the standing Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into and report, without unnecessary delay, upon the expediency of placing the surviving soldiers of the war of 1812 upon the pension-list.

REPRESENTATION OF SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. GRIDER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That inasmuch as loyal men have been elected by the people of Tennessee as Senators and Representatives in Congress, they should be admitted to seats in the present Congress upon taking the usual oath of office.

Resolved further, That each of the States not now represented in Congress should be allowed representation upon the same terms.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I make the point of order that that goes to the committee on reconstruction.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. Under the order of the House it goes to the joint committee on reconstruction.

Mr. GRIDER. Do I understand that this resolution goes to that committee and is not debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable. The order of the House is, "that all papers which may be offered relative to the representation of the late so-called confederate States of America, or either of them, shall be referred to the joint committee of fifteen without debate."

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is not that committee discharged by the report it has made?

The SPEAKER. The resolution includes all the so-called confederate States.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The committee has reported in full. Does not that end their service? How long do they continue?

Mr. GRIDER. Is it a standing committee or a special committee?

The SPEAKER. It is a special committee.

Mr. GRIDER. And they have made a report.

The SPEAKER. They have reported at various times, and there have been matters referred to them by the House since the last report was made.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is not this the first matter that has been referred to them since that report?

The SPEAKER. It is not. On motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Ross] the address of colored citizens of Chicago was referred to the committee. If the committee had been discharged that would have revived it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Then it is endowed with immortality. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIDER. I want to make one word more of inquiry: whether the rule which refers matters without debate applies to any other special committee of the House?

The SPEAKER. It does not, so far as the recollection of the Chair goes.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency and practicability of so consolidating the district courts of the United States in all States which under the representative apportionment of 1862 are entitled to no more than seven members in the Congress of the United States into one district, and that they have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

STEAMER JENNIE HUBBS.

Mr. KERR introduced a bill to authorize the owners of the steamboat Jennie Hubbs to change the name thereof; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PENSIONS TO PROVOST MARSHALS.

Mr. STILWELL offered the following resolution, and demanded the previous question thereon:

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be, and they are hereby, instructed to report a bill extending the provisions of the pension laws to provost marshals, deputy provost marshals, and enrolling officers who have been disabled while in the line of their duty.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. PERHAM. The committee have that subject under consideration now, and have been considering it for some time. I am not particular about it, but I should prefer not to have this resolution passed.

Mr. STILWELL. I will state that there are a number of cases in our State, as I presume there are in other States, where provost marshals have been killed while in the line of their duty. Hence, I have offered this resolution, instructing the committee to report a bill placing them on the pension-roll, and I would like to take the sense of the House upon it.

Mr. PERHAM. That being the case, I have no objection that the sense of the House shall be taken in regard to it. I will say, however, that the Committee on Pensions have this matter under consideration and will report upon it.

Mr. DUMONT. I hope the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. A resolution that provost marshals and deputy provost marshals shall be placed on the pension-rolls.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is that resolution debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I make the point of order, then, on the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that he make his resolution one of inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I withdraw my objection to debate.

Mr. THAYER. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will modify his resolution so as not to give it the character of an imperative resolution, but to let the committee consider the subject.

Mr. STILWELL. The committee can report a bill and let the House take action on it.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Is the resolution debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. STILWELL. I modify the resolution so as to read "killed or disabled."

Mr. FARQUHAR. I desire to state one fact to the House.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order except by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. We object unless we can have a chance to debate it on this side of the House. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ELDRIDGE and STILWELL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas twenty-three, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SPALDING. I appeal to the gentleman to make his resolution one of inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The gentleman from Indiana declines to do that.

The question was taken on Mr. STILWELL's resolution; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 65, nays 56, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Bidwell, Bromwell, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cullom, Deftres, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Henderson, Hogan, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulbard, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, William Lawrence, Lynch, McClurg, McKee, McRuer, Mercur, Moorhead, Morris, Niblack, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Plants, Price, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Rousseau, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Stevens, Stilwell, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—65.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Beaman, Bergen, Blaine, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Dening, Dixon, Eldridge, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Goodyear, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Higby, Holmes, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Ketcham, George V. Lawrence, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, McCullough, Nicholson, Perham, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Sitgreaves, Spaulding, Strouse, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trimble, Upson, Ward, Windom, and Wright—56.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Anderson, Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brundage, Broomall, Bundy, Coffroth, Conkling, Cook, Culver, Delano, Denison, Driggs, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hayes, Hill, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Ingersoll, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Ladin, Le Blond, Loan, Marshall, McIndoe, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Noel, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Raymond, Schenck, Shanklin, Smith, Starr, Taber, Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, and Winfield—62.

So the resolution was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. FERRY said: I am in favor of the principle of the resolution, but opposed to imperative instruction of committee. I therefore vote "no."

Mr. THAYER said: My colleague, Mr.

MYERS, is unavoidably absent from the House and is paired with my colleague, Mr. JOHNSON.

Before the vote was announced.

Mr. RITTER said: I was absent during the roll-call. If I had been present I should have voted in the negative.

The result of the vote having been announced as above recorded.

Mr. STILWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 568) to repeal section twenty-three of chapter seventy-nine of the acts of the third session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress, relating to passports, when the Speaker signed the same.

NATIONAL VOLUNTEER ARMY.

Mr. JULIAN submitted the following resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing a national military force in lieu of a regular or standing army, to consist of volunteer regiments mustered into the United States service for three years, and raised and organized by the different States in proportion to their population, said committee to report by bill or otherwise.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONFISCATED COTTON.

Mr. BROMWELL submitted the following resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to cause to be laid before this House statements showing the amount of cotton in bales, and the value thereof, which was in the hands of the military authorities at the time of the cessation of hostilities as captured or forfeited cotton, together with all cotton which has since come into the hands of the United States authorities as property of the late so-called confederate States; also the amount of all cotton in any wise coming into the hands of the Federal authorities during the war, and under the care of what officers, and the disposition which has been made of such cotton in each State, both during and since the late war, how sold, to whom and by whom, and on what commission and for what price.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

REPRESENTATIVES FROM TENNESSEE.

Mr. ROSS submitted the following resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Resolved, That the committee on reconstruction be relieved and discharged from the further consideration of the application of Horace Maynard for a seat in this House, and that all papers upon the subject be referred to the Committee of Elections.

The SPEAKER. The application of Horace Maynard is not now before the joint committee on reconstruction. The committee made a report in relation to Representatives from Tennessee, which report was ordered to be printed and recommitted. A motion was made to reconsider the recommitment, which leaves the matter still pending before the House and not before the committee.

Mr. ROSS. Then I will modify my resolution so as to have it embrace all the delegation from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. They are all in the same condition. The subject of the delegation from Tennessee is not before the committee on reconstruction; it is in the House on a motion to reconsider the recommitment, which motion is now pending and can be called up for consideration at any time when the House is not engaged upon any other business.

Mr. ROSS. Will it be in order for me to modify my resolution so as to refer the papers relating to the Representatives from Tennessee to the Committee of Elections?

The SPEAKER. Those papers are connected with the motion to reconsider. The resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSS] is therefore not now in order.

GOVERNMENT SALE AND PURCHASE OF GOLD.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House how much gold belonging to the Government of the United States has been sold since the first day of January, 1866, the date and amount, by whom sold, the compensation allowed for such sales, and the premium received; also whether any gold has been bought for the Treasury since that date, and if so, the amounts and dates of such purchases, the amount of premium paid and who acted as agents in making such purchases; also whether any bonds of the United States have been bought for the Treasury since that date, the dates and amounts of such purchases, the amounts paid for the same, and the character and denomination of said bonds.

Mr. CHANLER. I object; that is a call for executive information.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then I give notice that after the expiration of the morning hour I shall move a suspension of the rules in order to offer this resolution.

DISTRICT PENITENTIARY.

Mr. PAINE introduced a bill to authorize the construction of a penitentiary, jail, and house of correction in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. DONNELLY introduced a bill to amend section forty-one of an act to provide a national currency, &c., approved June 3, 1864; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

AIR-LINE RAILROAD TO NEW YORK.

Mr. WINDOM submitted the following resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Whereas the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company are entirely incompetent or unwilling to afford the necessary facilities to the traveling and business public; and whereas the public have long enough endured the extortions and annoyances imposed by said company: Therefore,

Resolved, That the committee on military and postal railroad from Washington to New York have leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent to give a committee leave to report at any time.

Mr. PHELPS. I object.

ARCHING TIBER CREEK, WASHINGTON.

Mr. LATHAM introduced a joint resolution to provide for completing the arch of Tiber creek through the grounds of the United States Botanical Garden, in Washington city; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

EIGHT-HOUR SYSTEM OF LABOR.

Mr. WHALEY submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be requested to report a bill limiting the hours of labor for the employes in the Government Printing Office to eight hours a day.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The resolution was not agreed to; there being—ayes eight, noes not counted.

Mr. UPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to agree to the resolution; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAX ON NOTES OF STATE BANKS.

Mr. LYNCH, by unanimous consent, presented, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, a report stating that the committee having had under consideration the resolution passed by the House on the 21st instant directing them to inquire into the expediency of exempting the currency of State banks outstanding on the 1st day of July next from the tax of ten per cent. now provided by law until the 1st day of July, 1867, or until some day previous thereto, had concluded to report the same back adversely, deeming it inexpedient to change the existing law upon the subject.

The SPEAKER. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of this subject, and the report will be laid on the table.

Mr. LYNCH, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the petition of certain banks in Maine, asking for the repeal or modification of the ten per cent. tax on their issues; which was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Cook,] my colleague on the select committee upon the conduct of the Provost Marshal General's Bureau, is engaged in taking testimony connected with that investigation. I ask, therefore, that he may have leave to be absent during the sittings of the House.

Leave was granted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORTNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 363) entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions," and had appointed Messrs. LANE of Indiana, VAN WINKLE, and DAVIS a committee of conference on the part of the Senate.

The message also informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (S. No. 339) granting a pension to Benjamin Franklin; and

An act (S. No. 223) to revive and extend the provisions of an act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point upon the Mississippi opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi river, approved February 9, 1853, and for other purposes.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. DAWES presented papers in relation to the contested election of Boyd vs. Kelso; which were referred to the Committee of Elections.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending question was upon the amendment of Mr. MORRIS, as amended on motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, to insert after section thirty-five the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act corn-shellers and wooden ware shall be exempt from internal tax or duty.

Mr. MORRIS. With the consent of the committee, I propose to modify my amendment by inserting the words "corn-shellers, wooden ware" after the word "separators".

in the amendment on page 135, embracing mowers, reapers, and threshing-machines. I understand the Committee of Ways and Means consent to this.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection, provided the words "corn-shellers" be inserted after "threshing-machines" on page 89. I desire that all these may share the same fate.

Mr. MORRIS. I consent to that.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 66. And be it further enacted, That this act shall take effect, where not otherwise provided, on the 1st day of July, 1866, and all provisions of any former act inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed: Provided, however, That no duty imposed by any previous act, which has become due, or of which return has been or ought to be made, shall be remitted or released by this act, but the same shall be collected and paid, and all fines and penalties heretofore incurred shall be enforced and collected, and all offenses heretofore committed shall be punished as if this act had not been passed; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to make all necessary regulations and prescribe all necessary forms and proceedings for the collection of such taxes and the enforcement of such fines and penalties for the execution of the provisions of this act.

Mr. THAYER. I move to insert after the word "be," page 191, line eight, the word "assessed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to go back and amend on page 58, line twelve hundred and twenty-two, after the word "annually," by inserting "exclusive of materials."

Mr. MORRILL. I must object to going back.

Mr. ALLISON. I now call up an amendment which was reserved:

Page 31, section thirty, strike out from line five hundred and thirty-nine to line six hundred and fifty-six, and insert in lieu thereof as follows:

That section thirty be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that in any case where sufficient goods or effects belonging to the party owing the tax and duties imposed by this act cannot be found by the said collector or deputy collector to satisfy the same, such collector or deputy collector is hereby authorized and required to collect the amount thereof from the real estate belonging to the party delinquent by seizure and sale thereof as hereinafter provided; and for that purpose the said collector or deputy collector shall summon the party whose real estate is proposed to be sold that on the first day of the next ensuing term of the United States district or circuit court, held in and for the district in which the real estate proposed to be sold, or the greater part thereof, is situated, that he be and appear before said court and the judge thereof, and show cause, if any he have, why judgment for the amount of said tax and duties should not be rendered against him, and the real estate there named sold to pay the same, together with the fees and costs growing out of the said proceedings. The said summons shall recite the amount of the tax and duties, at what time the same became due and payable, together with a description of the real estate seized and proposed to be sold, and where situate, and shall be served by leaving a copy thereof with the delinquent, or at his usual place of abode with some member of his or her family over the age of fifteen years. If the said delinquent cannot be found, nor have any place of abode within the proper collection district, then the said collector or deputy collector shall cause publication thereof to be made by at least four insertions in a newspaper published nearest the said real estate. The said collector or deputy collector shall, within five days after the service of the summons, or the completion of the publication thereof as aforesaid, transmit the same, with the time and manner of the service thereof properly certified thereon, to the clerk of the said district or circuit court, and upon the receipt thereof the said court shall be possessed of the case, and, unless cause to the contrary be shown by said delinquent, shall render judgment against the said delinquent for the amount of the tax and duties found due by him and unpaid, and decree the sale of said real estate for the payment thereof at the first term of said court, provided the same shall commence not less than twenty days from the service of the summons or the completion of the publication thereof; otherwise, at the second term, unless longer continued for good cause shown. Upon the rendition of a judgment as aforesaid, the clerk of the said court shall issue execution thereon, which shall be a special fiat facias against the real estate therein mentioned in all cases when the delinquent shall have been summoned by publication as aforesaid, and has not appeared in person or by attorney; in all other cases, if the real estate mentioned therein be not sufficient to satisfy the judgment and expenses thereon, the same may be levied on other property, real and personal, of said delinquent. The execution so issued the clerk shall transmit to the said collector or deputy collector, who shall thereupon proceed to sell the said real estate, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the said judgment, fees, and costs, to the highest bidder for cash, at the court-house of the county in which the said real estate is situate, unless another and different place shall be specially designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, first giving twenty days' public notice of the time and place of sale, and the property to be sold, and where situate, by advertisement in a newspaper, if there be one published in said county, and if not, by at least six hand-bills, put up in public places in said county; and upon such sale and the payment of the purchase money shall give to the purchaser a certificate of purchase, which shall set forth the real estate purchased, for whose taxes and duties the same was sold, the name of the purchaser, and the price paid therefor; and if the said real estate be not redeemed in the manner and within the time hereinafter provided, then the said collector or deputy collector shall execute to the said purchaser, upon his surrender of said certificate, a deed to the real estate purchased by him as aforesaid, and in accordance with the laws of the State in which such real estate is situate, upon the subject of sales of real estate under execution, which said deed shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and shall be considered and operate as a conveyance of all the right, title, and interest the party delinquent had in and to the real estate thus sold at the time the lien of the United States attached thereto. Any delinquent, whose estate may be proceeded against as aforesaid, shall have the right to pay the amount due, together with the costs and charges thereon, to the collector or deputy collector at any time prior to the sale thereof, and all further proceedings shall cease from the time of such payment. The owners of any real estate, sold as aforesaid, their heirs, executors, or administrators, or any person having any interest therein or a lien thereon, or any person in their behalf shall be permitted to redeem the land sold as aforesaid, or any particular tract thereof, at any time within one year after the sale thereof upon payment to the purchaser, or, in case he cannot be found in the county in which the land sought to be redeemed is situate, then to the collector, for the use of the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, the amount paid by the said purchaser and interest thereon at the rate of twenty per cent. per annum. It shall be the duty of every collector to keep a record of all proceedings and sales of land made by virtue of this act, whether by himself or his deputies, in which he shall enter the tax for which any such sale was made, the date of the service of the summons, the name of the party assessed, and the date thereof, the date and amount of the judgment, and all costs and fees attending the same, the advertisement and sale, the name of the purchaser, the amount paid, and for what real estate, and all material facts connected therewith, which record shall be certified to by the officer making the sale. It shall be the duty of every deputy making sale as aforesaid to return a true statement thereof to the collector within ten days from the day of sale and to certify the record thereof, and the record required herein to be kept shall be received in any court as prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and shall be by the said collector handed over to his successor in office. When any lands thus sold shall be redeemed as hereinbefore provided, if the redemption money be paid to the purchaser thereof, the said purchaser shall deliver to the person redeeming the same the certificate of purchase aforesaid, upon which he shall acknowledge the receipt of the redemption money, from whom received, and the date thereof. Upon the return of the said certificate receipted as aforesaid to the collector, or upon the receipt of the redemption money by the collector as aforesaid, the said collector shall enter upon said record the facts attending the redemption thereof, and shall within ten days thereafter make out and certify a full copy of the record of such case, and transmit the same, together with the execution aforesaid, to the clerk of the court from which such execution issued, to be there preserved with the papers of the case. Any collector or deputy collector is hereby authorized to proceed as herein specified against the real estate of any delinquent in his district, situate in any other collection district within the State of which his district forms a part, and his proceedings in relation thereto shall be conducted in like manner and with like effect as if the same were had in his proper collection district. Whenever at any sale as aforesaid, no sum is bid for the real estate so offered for sale, or an amount insufficient to satisfy the judgment, costs, and fees, the collector or deputy collector is authorized to purchase the same for the United States, subject to redemption as herein provided; and if not redeemed, shall execute a deed as aforesaid, and deposit the same with the district attorney of the United States for the district in which the proceedings in the case were had. The sale herein authorized may be adjourned by the officer making the same for a period not exceeding five days, if he shall think it advisable to do so. The officer making the sale as aforesaid shall be allowed a fee of ten dollars, which, together with the costs of court and all other costs and charges attending the sale, shall be paid from the proceeds of such sale; and the surplus, if any, after satisfying the judgment, shall be disposed of as is provided in this act for like cases arising from the sale of personal property. In case the real estate authorized to be sold as aforesaid shall consist of several distinct tracts or parcels, the officer making sale thereof shall offer each tract or parcel for sale separately, and shall give to the purchaser a certificate of purchase for each of such tracts or parcels bought by him as aforesaid. If the amount bid for any tract authorized to be sold shall not then and there be paid by the person to whom the same is sold, the officer shall forthwith sell the same again, in the same manner and until the amount for which the same may be sold is paid, and the claim of the United States to lands sold under and by virtue of this section shall be held to have accrued at the time of the seizure thereof.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. DUMONT. I move the following to come in as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to have this act and the acts to which it is amendatory published in at least one German newspaper in each of the States of the Union where such paper may be published.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following amendment:

Page 98, before line twenty-two hundred and twenty-two, insert:

Provided, That any person who shall offer or expose for sale any cigars, cheroots, or cigarettes, whether the articles so offered or exposed are imported or are of foreign or domestic manufacture, shall be deemed the manufacturer thereof, and shall be subject to all the duties, liabilities, and penalties imposed by law in regard to the sale of domestic articles without the use of the proper stamp or stamps denoting the duty or tax paid thereon. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe such regulations for the inspection and valuation of cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, and the collection of the tax thereon, as shall in his judgment be most effective for the prevention of inequalities and frauds in the payment of such tax: Provided, That such regulations shall not be in violation of law. And in addition to other regulations it shall be the duty of the inspector or assessor who appraises any cigars, cigarettes, or cheroots, to examine the manufacturer thereof or his agent, under oath, which oath shall be administered by the inspecting and appraising officer, and reduced to writing, and signed by such manufacturer or his agent, with a view to ascertaining whether such manufacturer has any interest, direct or indirect, in any sale that has been made, or any resale to be made of said cigars, cigarettes, or cheroots, by the concealment of which he seeks to obtain a false, fraudulent, or deceptive appraisement.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. Inadvertently, as the bill now stands, there is an increase of duty on apple and peach brandy. That was not the intention of the committee; and I propose to amend as follows:

Page 161, section thirty-six, line twenty-two hundred and twenty-two, after the word "paid," insert, "Provided, That brandy distilled from grapes, apples, and peaches shall be $150 per gallon: And provided further."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I offer the following amendment—

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. STEVENS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend, on page 126, after line twenty-nine hundred and three, by inserting the following:

That section one hundred and seventy of the act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes, approved June 30, 1864, be amended by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That for the purpose of making provision for the proper distribution of revenue stamps upon the Pacific coast there shall be allowed to the Assistant Treasurer at San Francisco a commission of one per cent. upon all stamps received and sold by him to agents or other parties to sell again.

Mr. STEVENS. I would like to understand—

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The committee do not understand it. I desire to know whether that is—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is out of order. The Clerk will report the amendment again.

The Clerk read the amendment.

The question being taken, there were six votes in the affirmative.

Mr. BIDWELL demanded tellers; and the Chair appointed Messrs. BIDWELL and SPALDING.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes four, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I insist on my motion.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman has no right to insist. I had the floor and was offering an amendment, but yielded to a member of the committee, [Mr. HOOPER.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his amendment to allow the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] to offer his. Technically the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was not before the committee, but it was understood that he yielded for the purpose of permitting the gentleman from Massachusetts to offer his.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know but it is all right already; but I offer my amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Whenever any fraud has been or shall be charged against any person, either in the annual, special, or other lists, or in the monthly, special, or other returns, and the person thus charged shall deny the same and demand a trial, and shall tender to the assessor good and sufficient bail to secure all the deficiency or amount of the fraud charged and costs of suit, all further proceedings shall be suspended by the assessor and collector, and the whole case reported to the United States district attorney for the district, who shall have power to proceed and collect the same in an action of debt or assumpsit, and proceed thereon to final judgment and execution: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to affect the proceedings by indictment or qui tam action.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the Clerk to read what has already passed the committee on this subject at the end of the eighteenth section.

The Clerk read as follows:

And in addition to the other provisions of law, whenever fraud is alleged as to any list or return, and the party charged—

Mr. STEVENS. If it stated whenever any fraud has been or shall be alleged, I would be satisfied. There are several cases suspended now for the purpose of allowing an opportunity to amend this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the amendment made in committee will be so modified.

Mr. STEVENS accordingly withdrew his amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now offer the following amendment:

That section ninety-seven of the act to which this is an amendment be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

I desire to have that section read.

The CHAIRMAN. It cannot be done. It is in the nature of debate, which the House has ordered to stop.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not ask to debate it; only to have the section proposed to be repealed read.

Mr. MORRILL. That would be in the nature of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand any difference between reading a printed page and debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I will modify my amendment so as to read:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the ninety-seventh section of the act of which this is an amendment be, and the same is hereby, repealed, to wit:

“Sec. 97. And be it further enacted, That every person, firm, or corporation, who shall have made any contract prior to the passage of this act, and without other provision therein for the payment of duties imposed by law enacted subsequent thereto, upon articles to be delivered under such contract, is hereby authorized and empowered to add to the price thereof so much money as will be equivalent to the duty so subsequently imposed on said articles, and not previously paid by the vendee, and shall be entitled by virtue hereof to be paid and to sue for and recover the same accordingly: Provided, That where the United States is the purchaser under such prior contract, the certificate of the proper officer of the Department by which the contract was made, showing, according to regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the articles so purchased by the United States, and liable to such subsequent duty, shall be taken and received, so far as the same is applicable, in discharge of such subsequent duties on articles so contracted to be delivered to the United States and actually delivered according to such contract.”

The question was taken on the amendment as modified; and it was disagreed to—ayes twenty-five, noes not counted.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire again to call the attention of the committee to the amendment which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is willing to offer to the fourteenth section, striking out the word “penalties.”

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the word “penalties” wherever it occurs in the sixteenth section as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I offer the following as an additional section to the bill:

Sec. —. Be it further enacted, That in estimating for taxation the value of all manufactures taxable under the provisions of this act, the actual cost to the manufacturer of all manufactured articles which have already been subjected to and paid a revenue tax, and which have entered into the said manufactures, shall be deducted from the taxable value of such manufactures.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, and with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. ANCONA. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe the bill has been read through and that I have a right to make my motion, and whether I have or not I hope gentlemen will no longer persist in offering further amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion is not in order as long as any member desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to offer the following as an additional section:

Sec. —. Be it further enacted, That proprietors of grist and saw mills, doing custom work for tolls, &c., shall not be held to be manufacturers under this act, or the acts to which this is an amendment, unless their receipts for such work exceed $1,000, as provided in the amendment to section seventy-nine by this act.

Mr. ROLLINS. In what part of the bill can the gentleman get in that amendment at this stage? The bill has been read through.

Mr. ANCONA. I offer it as an additional section.

The question was taken on Mr. ANCONA's amendment, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, and with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 518, to amend an act entitled “An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,” approved June 30, 1864, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MORRILL obtained the floor.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I trust the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will yield to me for a moment, to offer an amendment in pursuance to a general understanding which was agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL. If there was such an understanding, of course I will yield; but I regret that I am obliged to do so.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I offer the following to come in as an additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That all assessors, collectors, and revenue agents provided for by this act, or the several acts of which this act is amendatory, shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the advice and consent of the Senate shall be given before any such officer shall be removed from office, unless such removal shall be for malfeasance in office during the recess of Congress.

The SPEAKER. That amendment will be regarded as pending.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole on motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK] in relation to the tax on cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, so that if his amendment is not concurred in the bill in that respect will remain as perfected in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] desires to offer his amendment so as to have it acted upon under this rule, to be found on page 65 of Barclay's Digest:

“If the committee [of the whole] shall amend a clause, and subsequently strike out the clause as amended, the first amendment thereby falls, and cannot be reported to the House and voted on. So, too, if the committee shall amend a bill ever so much”—

And the same rule applies to a section or clause of a bill—

“and subsequently adopt a substitute therefor, the bill is to be reported to the House with but a single amendment, namely, the substitute; and the House has only to choose between the original bill and substitute.”

If, therefore, the amendment adopted in regard to cigars, &c., by the Committee of the Whole on motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] should be voted down, then all the amendments which intervened would fall, and the section would stand in that respect as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. MORRILL. What I desire is to offer an amendment to be voted on in case the amendment moved by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] should be voted down. The amendment I propose is as follows:

On cigarettes, or small cigars, made of tobacco, inclosed in a wrapper or binder, and not over three and a half inches in length, and cigars made with twisted heads, the market value of which (tax included) is not over eight dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand; when the market value is over eight dollars and not over twelve dollars per thousand, (tax included,) and on cheroots, and cigars known as short-sixes, and on any cigars, the market value of which (tax included) is not over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand.

On all other cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, made wholly of tobacco, or of any substitute therefor, a tax of ten dollars per thousand.

The SPEAKER. That amendment will be regarded as pending, to be voted upon should the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole be voted down.

Mr. MORRILL. And I offer the following amendment for a similar purpose in relation to the articles therein named:

On reapers, mowers, threshing-machines, scales, pumps, garden engines, hydraulic rams, and wooden-ware, a tax of three per cent. ad valorem.

The SPEAKER. That amendment will be regarded as pending, to be voted upon should the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole be voted down.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to ask the Chair a question, in order to see if I understand the position of the amendment in relation to cigars, cheroots, &c. An amendment upon my motion was adopted in Committee of the Whole and has been reported to the House. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] now moves an amendment in place of the one adopted on my motion. Which question will be first taken, on his amendment or mine?

The SPEAKER. The House, while in Committee of the Whole, considered the clause in relation to cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] moved an amendment in the nature of a substitute for that clause. Pending that motion the Committee of the Whole proceeded to perfect the clause upon the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means, and perhaps on motion of other members. After the clause had been perfected the substitute moved by the gentleman from Ohio was adopted, striking out the clause as perfected. Now, should the amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole, on motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK], be voted down in the House, under the rule which has just been read the clause would be left to stand as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, and not as perfected in Committee of the Whole before the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio was adopted.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then, if I understand the Chair, the whole matter may be simplified by the friends of this interest in the West voting down the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and voting to sustain the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first taken upon the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio. Should that be adopted, no further question will be taken. But if the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio should be voted down, then the question will be upon the proposition of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

Mr. STEVENS. Then, if the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] should be sustained, the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] would be out of the question.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In pursuance of the agreement made in Committee of the Whole, I offer the following amendment:

In section sixty-five strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" where they first occur and insert in lieu thereof the word "President;" after the word "authorized," in the second line, insert the word "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;" strike out "his" before "Department" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the Treasury;" so that the clause will read:

That the President is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an officer in the Treasury Department who shall be styled "Special Commissioner of the Revenue," whose office shall terminate in four years from the passage of this act.

Mr. ROSS. I desire to ask the consent of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to have a vote by yeas and nays on two amendments which were offered, but not agreed to, in Committee of the Whole: one amendment with reference to the drawback on cotton goods, and the other relating to the tax on whisky.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot consent to that. I now demand the previous question on the bill and pending amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to occupy much time with any further remarks upon this bill; and I shall ask a division on those amendments only which I deem of vital consequence; and even upon those I do not propose to ask the yeas and nays if upon a fair division there shall be a decided majority one way or the other.

There are some points in reference to which I think the House, upon a "sober second thought," will come to the conclusion not to concur with the Committee of the Whole. One of these was in relation to the right of gas companies to charge over the amount of the tax to consumers. They have this right under the existing law. At the time the provision in the present law was adopted, it was very successfully defended by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I find, by various letters which I have received from different parts of the country, that the amendment to the bill, if allowed to remain as reported from the Committee of the Whole, will be very oppressive upon many gas companies. I will read what is said by the president of the Gas Company at Covington, Kentucky:

"Our company has never been able at any time to declare more than four per cent. dividends on the capital actually invested in the construction of the gas works. The price to be charged for gas is fixed by legislative charter at three dollars per thousand feet for private consumers and $1 50 per thousand feet for public lumps. The cost of manufacturing gas for the year 1865 was $2 20 per thousand feet, as shown by the secretary's report for that year; so that the stockholders derive but a very small profit, without a direct tax being imposed on gas companies as proposed by the action of Congress. They are indirectly taxed fully as much as other manufacturers."

I have here also a communication from the Pittsburg Gas Company, by which it appears that they are obliged by their charter to furnish gas to private consumers at a price not exceeding $1 60 per thousand feet; that they are compelled to furnish to the city twelve million five hundred thousand cubic feet free of charge, and all over that quantity at seventy-five cents per thousand feet; and that the revenue tax amounts to fifty-six per cent. on the company's net receipts. I will say, also, in relation to this article, that it is a manufacture; and I see no reason why the parties should be restricted as to their prices. The public can consume the gas or not, as they please. I do not for myself see why we should not leave these parties in precisely the same condition in which they would be without the tax being levied upon them.

The next question upon which I shall ask a separate vote is the paragraph in relation to miners; for I see no reason why those persons engaged in a profitable branch of business should be exempted from taxation, while parties engaged in other branches of industry far less profitable are taxed.

Another question is the one in relation to reapers, threshing-machines, and mowers. Certainly it seems to me that if we are about to exempt any agricultural implements it should be those that are daily used by the common laboring man, not those used by men of large means, owning land in large parcels, and with sufficient capital to invest in expensive machinery. I trust, therefore, that the House will consent that the articles I have named shall be subjected to a tax of three per cent., and not be entirely exempt.

We have passed through the bill, and in our progress have made amendments which reduce the revenue in every direction. It may not attract much attention here, but it will be sensibly felt and known at the Treasury Department at the end of another year.

There was a provision struck out on motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] that journeymen cigar-makers should make returns once a month of the cigars which they manufactured. Unless that provision is allowed to remain you will strike at a vital part of the law. That return is the only absolute check we have against fraud in the manufacture of cigars. I trust when we reach that portion of the bill the House will vote unanimously to retain it.

We now come, Mr. Speaker, to the subject of tobacco. On that subject I am aware there is a considerable sensitiveness in some portions of the House in relation to the proper tax on smoking-tobacco and cigars. I desire to say to the House the law as it has heretofore stood has made too great a difference in favor of smoking-tobacco as against cigars, yet the Committee of the Whole have gone still further in the same direction and reduced the rate upon smoking-tobacco so that the disparity will be largely increased. The tax is now thirty-five cents per pound, and only ten is proposed. I trust we shall not allow anything of that kind to prevail. Leave the rate at twenty cents per pound as proposed by the Committee of the Whole and you will satisfy the trade and get some revenue—but not otherwise.

I am satisfied gentlemen from all parts of the country are suffering under a delusion as to the point of the grief in this whole matter. The real point of suffering is the insufficient duty on the low-priced cigars imported, and until we reach that there will be no remedy for the growers of tobacco or the manufacturers of tobacco or cigars.

Mr. SCHENCK. Our people do not apprehend there is any advantage in paying ten dollars a thousand on cheap cigars when only ten dollars is paid on high-price cigars.

Mr. MORRILL. The argument or suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio is without any real foundation, since by one of the amendments to the existing laws reported by the Committee of Ways and Means we have provided a rate of two dollars a thousand only on all that description of cigars which can be made out of tobacco raised in that part of the country from which the gentleman comes.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask the gentleman whether he deems it just that a cigar worth twenty dollars a thousand should pay the same tax as a cigar worth $100 a thousand.

Mr. MORRILL. It is just when the law provides for it, and when it is, perhaps, the only mode by which the tax can be enforced. But that is not the question here, however, at all.

I will now read a resolution passed by these cigar-makers since the action of the Committee of the Whole—men residing in places where low-price tobacco only is produced and manufactured:

"Resolved, That the existing law does discriminate largely against us, as will be seen by examining the rates per pound of existing tax on each of these articles named, namely: on one thousand cigars, or say fifteen pounds, the tax is ten dollars; on fifteen pounds of chewing-tobacco, at forty cents, the tax is six dollars; while on fifteen pounds of smoking-tobacco, at thirty-five cents, the tax is only $5 25, and if the tax on smoking-tobacco is further reduced, as proposed, to only ten cents per pound, the tax on fifteen pounds of the article will be only $1 50, and is a palpable injustice to the interests of our trade."

I am fully persuaded, if the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole shall be approved, we shall reduce the article of tobacco in every form to but an insignificant figure in the returns of revenue. I trust the amendments made by the Committee of the Whole will be rejected. I think the amendments of the Committee of Ways and Means, with the further amendments of the Committee of the Whole, ought to satisfy all parties, and I trust they will be assented to as just and proper on all sides of the House.

I come next to the three hundred and ninety-fifth amendment, to insert on page 124 "cordage and rigging." While cordage has some claim to exemption, so far as it enters into ship-building, if we allow the amendment to pass, as it now stands, we do not know how much would be included. It is too comprehensive and uncertain, and therefore I hope will be voted down.

Mr. Speaker, we have now, after a very faithful attention on the part of members, waded through this long bill taxing us severely now, but destined to somewhat relieve our people. I trust within a few years we shall dismiss as no longer necessary the most part of the provisions of the present bill. I hope in the course of two or three years at least we shall be able to dispense with the tax on the major part of manufactures. I congratulate the House on the near approach to the end of a weary journey, and upon their leaving the bill in as acceptable a shape as it is now, or as it is fair to suppose it will ultimately assume when it passes this House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the amendments made in committee. If there is no objection the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross except those upon which a separate vote is desired.

The first amendment upon which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. MORRILL was to strike out the following proviso on page 15:

Provided, That no appeal shall be allowed to any party after he shall have been duly assessed, and the annual list containing the assessment has been transmitted to the collector of the district.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. MORRILL was to strike out the following paragraph on page 65:

47. Miners shall pay ten dollars. Every person, firm, or company, who shall employ others in the business of mining for coal, or for gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, zinc, spelter, or other minerals, not having paid the tax therefor, as a manufacturer, and no other, shall be regarded as a miner under this act: Provided, That this shall not apply to any miner whose receipts as such shall not exceed, annually, $1,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, the House did not understand the question.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The report of the committee was not confirmed by the vote of the House.

The SPEAKER. It evidently was not by a large majority. The gentleman can move to reconsider.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to strike out the section.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question being taken on the latter motion, there were—ayes 59, noes 40.

Mr. BIDWELL demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BIDWELL. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. BIDWELL. I demand tellers on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Tellers were again refused.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. MORRILL was to insert after the word "correct" on page 80, line seventeen hundred and seventy, the following:

Provided, That journeyman cigar-makers and apprentices who work for others shall not be included in this provision.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 47, noes 46.

Mr. MORRILL demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 63, nays 60, not voting 60; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Baker, Beaman, Bergen, Bromwell, Buckland, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Deftrees, Delano, Dumont, Eldridge, Farquhar, Ferry, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Marshall, McClurg, McCullough, McKee, Mercer Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Stilwell, Strouse, Trimble, Burt Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wright—63.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Blaine, Conkling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eckley, Eliot, Garfield, Hale, Hart, Henderson, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, James Humphrey, Ketcham, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, McKuer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Sloan, Spalding, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Ward, William B. Washburn, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—60.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Barker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Coffroth, Culver, Denison, Driggs, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Thomas, Thornton, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, and Winfield—60.

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. O'NEILL stated that his colleague, Mr. MYERS, was absent on account of sickness in his family. If he had been present he would have voted "ay."

The result was announced as above recorded.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. MORRILL was to strike out on page 90, line two thousand and twelve, the words "not otherwise provided for."

Mr. MORRILL. That was stricken out by mistake. I hope it will be allowed to remain.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The next amendment reserved by Mr. MORRILL was on page 84, lines eighteen hundred and sixty-two, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, and eighteen hundred and sixty-four, to strike out the following:

And gas companies are hereby authorized to add the tax imposed by law to the price per thousand cubic feet on gas sold.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes seventy-three, noes not counted.

The next amendment reserved by Mr. MORRILL was to strike out on page 89, line two thousand and one, the words "reapers, mowers, threshing-machines, corn-shellers, woodenware."

Mr. ROSS. Does that exempt or subject them to taxation?

The SPEAKER. If it is stricken out it exempts them from the tax of three per cent.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 75, noes 40.

Mr. MORRILL demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 63, nays 53, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Baker, Beaman, Bromwell, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Deftrees, Delano, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Goodyear, Grider, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Ingersoll, Julian, Ketcham, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, Mercer, Morris, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Paine, Plants, Price Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ross, Sawyer, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Stilwell, Strouse, Trimble, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Windom—68.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, James M. Ashley, Banks, Baxter, Bidwell, Conkling, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Eliot, Garfield, Hale, Aaron Harding, Henderson, Higby, Hogan, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, James Humphrey, Kelley, Kerr, Marston, McKee, McKuer, Moorhead, Morrill, O'Neill, Patterson, Perham, Pike, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Spalding, Stevens, Taylor, Thayer, Upson, William B. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Wright—53.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Barker, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Chanler, Coffroth, Culver, Denison, Driggs, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hayes, Hill, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Lufkin, Latham, Le Blond, Lynch, McClurg, McIndoe, Miller, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Noel, Phelps, Pomeroy, Raymond, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Smith, Starr, Taber, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, and Winfield—62.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to have the unanimous consent of the House to have one article placed on the free list. I accidentally omitted it this morning. If there is any objection to it, I will withdraw it. It is to insert in the free list the words "bunting, and flags and banners made of bunting of domestic manufacture."

Mr. FARQUHAR. I object.

FREEDMEN'S AFFAIRS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 21st instant, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of War, with accompanying papers, in reference to the operations of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 25, 1866.

The message, with the accompanying papers, was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL SERVICE WITH BRAZIL.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Postmaster General, made in answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 14th instant, calling for information relative to the proposed mail steamship service between the United States and Brazil.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 24, 1866.

The message, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I withdraw my objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] I did not understand what the amendment was.

Mr. MORRILL. I modify the amendment so as to read, "bunting and flags of the United States and banners made of domestic manufacture."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. There is a verbal amendment necessary. The committee having placed "brooms" on the free list, I move to strike out the word "brooms" where it occurs on page 89, line two thousand and two.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment upon which a separate vote had been demanded by Mr. MORRILL was the following, to strike out the following clauses:

- On cigarettes, or small cigars, made of tobacco, inclosed in a wrapper or binder, and not over three and a half inches in length, the market value of which (tax included) is not over six dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand; when the market value is over six dollars and not over ten dollars per thousand, (tax included), and on cheroots, and cigars known as short-sixes, and on any cigars made with or without pasted or twisted heads, the market value of which (tax included) is not over ten dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand.

On all other cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, made wholly of tobacco, or of any substitute therefor, a tax of ten dollars per thousand.

And insert in lieu thereof as follows:

On cigarettes, or small cigars, made of tobacco, inclosed in a wrapper or binder, and not over three and a half inches in length, and on cigars made with twisted heads, and on cheroots and on cigars known as short-sixes, the market value of which is not over eight dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand.

On all other cigarettes and cigars, the market value of which is over eight dollars and not over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand.

On all other cigarettes and cigars a tax of four dollars per thousand, and in addition forty per cent. ad valorem on the value beyond twelve dollars per thousand, to be assessed on the excess beyond twelve dollars per thousand.

Mr. TAYLOR demanded the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 54, noes 40.

Mr. PAINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment upon which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. MORRILL was in regard to smoking tobacco, to amend the clause so that it will read as follows:

On smoking tobacco of all kinds, not sweetened nor stemmed nor butted, including that made of stems, or in part of stems, and imitations thereof, a tax of ten cents per pound.

The question was taken; and there were, upon a division—ayes 37, noes 62.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. SCHENCK called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 54, nays 67, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Baker, Bidwell, Blaine, Bromwell, Buckland, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Deftrees, Delano, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Garfield, Grider, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hogan, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Ingersoll, Kerr, William Lawrence, Loan, Marshall, McCullough, McKee, Mercer, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Plants, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Schock, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Stilwell, Strouse, Trimble, Welker, Whaley, and Wright—54.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Bergen, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Eliot, Ferry, Goodyear, Hale, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, James Humphrey, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, Longyear, Marvin, McKuer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, William B. Washburn, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—67.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Coffroth, Culver, Denison, Driggs, Eckley, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hayes, Hill, Hooper, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Lufkin, Latham, Le Blond, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, McIndoe, Miller, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Noel, Phelps, Pomeroy, Raymond, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Smith, Starr, Taber, Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, and Winfield—62.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment upon which Mr. MORRILL demanded a separate vote was to insert the words "cordage and rigging for vessels" after the word "sails," in the following clause in the free list: "sails, tents, shades, awnings, and bags made by sewing or pasting."

The question was taken; and there were, upon a division—ayes 38, noes 64.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. BLAINE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BLAINE and THAYER were appointed.

Mr. PIKE. I understand that the objection of the Committee of Ways and Means is to the word "rigging." I therefore ask that the word "rigging" be stricken out by unanimous consent.

Mr. THAYER. I object; I think there is as much objection to placing cordage on the free list as there is to placing rigging on that list.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 61.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment upon which Mr. MORRILL had demanded a separate vote was the following offered by Mr. WILLIAMS, in section sixty-five to strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury," in the first sentence, and insert the word "President;" insert the words "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate" after the word "authorized;" and strike out the word "his" and insert "the Treasury;" so that the sentence will read:

That the President is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an officer in the Treasury Department who shall be styled "Special Commissioner of the Revenue," whose office shall terminate in four years from the passage of this act.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 68, noes 40.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. NIBLACK called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 46, nays 73, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Baker, Beaman, Bromwell, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Julian, Kelley, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, McClurg, McKee, Mercer, Moorhead, Orth, Paine, Perham, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Sawyer, Schenck, Sloan, Stevens, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Welker, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—46.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ancona, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Bergen, Chanler, Conkling, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Dumont, Eldridge, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Goodyear, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Ingersoll, Kerr, Ketcham, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McCullough, McRuer, Morrill, Morris, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Schofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stilwell, Taylor, Thayer, Trimble, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Woodbridge, and Wright—73.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Barker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Coffroth, Culver, Deffrees, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hayes, Hill, Hogan, Asahel W. Hubbard, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kuykendall, Laffin, Le Blond, Lynch, McIndoe, Miller, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Noell, Pomeroy, Raymond, John H. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Smith, Starr, Strouse, Taber, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Windom, and Winfield—64.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the roll-call.

Mr. RADFORD said: My colleague, Mr. WINFIELD, is still detained from the House by indisposition. If he were here he would vote in the negative.

The next amendment was the following, offered by Mr. COBB, on which he demanded a separate vote to strike out of section sixty-five the following:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to appoint an officer in his Department who shall be styled "Special Commissioner of the Revenue," whose office shall terminate in four years from the passage of this act. It shall be the duty of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue to inquire into all the sources of national revenue and the best methods of collecting the revenue; the relations of foreign trade to domestic industry; the mutual adjustment of the systems of taxation by customs and excise, with the view of insuring the requisite revenue with the least disturbance or inconvenience to the progress of industry and the development of the resources of the country; and to inquire from time to time, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, into the manner in which officers charged with the administration and collection of the revenues perform their duties. And the said Special Commissioner of the Revenue shall from time to time report, through the Secretary of the Treasury, to Congress, either in the form of a bill or otherwise, such modifications of the rates of taxation or of the methods of collecting the revenues, and such other facts pertaining to the trade, industry, commerce, or taxation of the country as he may find, by actual observation of the operation of the law, to be conducive to the public interest; and in order to enable the Special Commissioner of the Revenue to properly conduct his investigations, he is hereby empowered to examine the books, papers, and accounts of any officer of the revenue, to administer oaths, examine and summon witnesses, and take testimony; and each and every such person falsely swearing or affirming shall be subject to the penalties and disabilities prescribed by law for the punishment of corrupt and willful perjury; and all officers of the Government are hereby required to extend to the said Commissioner all reasonable facilities for the collection of information pertinent to the duties of his office. And the said Special Commissioner shall be paid an annual salary of $4,000 and the traveling expenses necessarily incurred while in the discharge of his duty; and all letters and documents to and from the Special Commissioner relating to the duties and business of his office shall be transmitted by mail free of postage. And.

So that the section, as amended, will read:

SEC. 65. And be it further enacted, That section nineteen of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864," approved March 3, 1865, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

On agreeing to the amendment there were—ayes 38, noes 72.

Mr. FARNSWORTH called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 51, nays 75, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Baker, Beaman, Bromwell, Buckland, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Higby, Holmes, Demas Hubbard, Julian, Kelley, William Lawrence, Loan, Marshall, McClurg, McKee, Mercer, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Sawyer, Shellabarger, Sloan, Stevens, Taylor, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Ward, Welker, Williams, and James F. Wilson—51.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Bergen, Bidwell, Blaine, Reader W. Clarke, Conkling, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deffrees, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Dumont, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Goodyear, Grider, Hale, Hart, Henderson, Hogan, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Ingersoll, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, McCullough, McRuer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Patterson, Phelps, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Schofield, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stilwell, Strouse, Thayer, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Woodbridge, and Wright—75.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Coffroth, Culver, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hayes, Hill, Hotchkiss, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Laffin, Le Blond, Lynch, McIndoe, Miller, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Noell, Pomeroy, Raymond, Rogers, Rousseau, Schenck, Shanklin, Smith, Starr, Taber, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, and Winfield—57.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was the following, on which a separate vote had been demanded by Mr. ALLISON:

On page 14, at the end of line one hundred and twenty-two, insert the following:

When the assessor is required or compelled to travel to make examinations as provided in this section he shall be allowed mileage and his necessary and proper traveling expenses. The costs for the attendance and mileage of witnesses shall be taxed by the assessor and paid by the delinquent parties, or otherwise by the collector of the district on certificate of the assessor, at the rate usually allowed in said district for witnesses in district courts of the United States.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next amendment was the following, on which a separate vote had been demanded by Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts:

In section twenty-two, at the commencement of line eleven, insert "and all bonded warehouses and."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The next amendment was the following, on which a separate vote had been demanded by Mr. PRICE:

Amend the paragraph relating to the one hundred and eighteenth section of the present law by adding the following:

Provided further, That the list of incomes in the offices of the assessor and collector shall be open to the inspection of the public; but neither the assessor nor collector shall furnish such list or any portion thereof for publication, nor permit the same to be copied for publication.

On agreeing to the amendment there were—ayes 53, noes 46.

Mr. SLOAN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 55, nays 66, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Bidwell, Buckland, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Darling, Davis, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Goodyear, Hale, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James Humphrey, Kelley, Kerr, Marston, Marvin, McCullough, McRuer, Mercer, Morris, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Ross, Sitgreaves, Stilwell, Strouse, Taylor, Thayer, Trimble, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, and Wright—55.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Blaine, Bromwell, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Dawes, Dawson, Deffrees, Dixon, Donnelly, Dumont, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Grider, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, James M. Humphrey, Julian, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Marshall, McClurg, McKee, Moorhead, Morrill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Price, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Schofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—66.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Coffroth, Cullom, Culver, Denison, Driggs, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hayes, Hill, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Ingersoll, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Ketcham, Laffin, Le Blond, Lynch, McIndoe, Miller, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Noell, Plants, Pomeroy, Raymond, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Smith, Starr, Taber, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Winfield—62.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was disagreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was asked was the following, moved by Mr. FARNSWORTH:

And be it further enacted, That all assessors, collectors, and revenue agents provided for by this act, or the several acts to which this act is amendatory, shall be appointed by the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the advice and consent of the Senate shall be given before any such officer shall be removed from office, unless such removal shall be for malfeasance in office during the recess of Congress.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 66, not voting 60; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Baxter, Beaman, Bromwell, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Donnelly, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Henderson, Hogan, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, McClurg, McKee, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Price, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Sawyer, Schenck, Schofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Stevens, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Ward, Welker, Williams, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—57.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Bergen, Bidwell, Blaine, Buckland, Chanler, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deffrees, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Dumont, Eckley, Eldridge, Eliot, Farquhar, Goodyear, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McCullough, McKuer, Niblack, Nicholson, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Ritter, Ross, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stilwell, Strouse, Taylor, Thayer, Trimble, Burt Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, and Wright—66.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Coffroth, Culver, Deming, Denison, Driggs, Ferry, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hayes, Higby, Hill, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Laffin, Le Blond, McIndoe, Miller, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Noell, Plants, Pomeroy, Raymond, Rogers, Rollins, Rousseau, Shanklin, Smith, Starr, Taber, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Stephen F. Wilson, and Winfield—60.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The remaining amendments of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union were then concurred in en masse.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes thirteen; not a sufficient number.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ELDRIDGE and GARFIELD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-five.

So (more than one fifth of those present having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 110, nays 11, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ancona, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Blaine, Bromwell, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deftrees, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Goodyear, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Henderson, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, James Humphrey, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McCullough, McKee, McKuer, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Nicholson, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Price, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stevens, Stilwell, Strouse, Taylor, Thayer, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Williams, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—110.

NAYS—Messrs. Bergen, Chanler, Eldridge, Gridler, Aaron Harding, Marshall, Niblack, Ritter, Ross, Trimble, and Wright—11.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Coffroth, Culver, Deming, Denison, Driggs, Eliot, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hayes, Higby, Hill, James M. Humphrey, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Laffin, Le Blond, McIndoe, Miller, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Noell, Plants, Pomeroy, Raymond, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Taber, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, and Winfield—62.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend the title by inserting after the word "bill" the words "to reduce internal taxation and;" so that it will read:

A bill to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and the title amended; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST ROAD IN DELAWARE.

Mr. NICHOLSON, by unanimous consent, 39TH CONG. 1ST SESS.—No. 180.

introduced a bill to establish a post road in the State of Delaware; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

MAJOR BREWSTER.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and accompanying papers of Major Brewster, asking for relief.

ABELARD GUTHRIE.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, the papers in the case of Abelard Guthrie were withdrawn from the files of the House and referred to the Committee of Claims.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MARSHALL. I desired to present some remarks before the passage of the tax bill. I ask leave to print them.

No objection being made, leave was accordingly granted.

[His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

DISBURSING AND ACCOUNTING OFFICERS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill concerning the powers and duties of disbursing and accounting officers of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MARY C. HAMILTON.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania. An adverse report was made by mistake on Senate bill No. 56, granting a pension to Mary C. Hamilton. I ask unanimous consent to have it recommitted.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

CIRCUIT COURT OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to report back, from the Committee on the Judiciary, Senate bill No. 184, to define more clearly the jurisdiction and powers of the circuit court of the District of Columbia.

No objection was made.

Mr. THAYER. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of Wiley Jones, a colored citizen of Winton, North Carolina, asking compensation for a horse, ox, bull, hogs, chickens, and turkeys, carried off by the Union Army during the war.

By Mr. BANKS: The memorial of J. W. Osgood, and 30 others, mechanics and working men, in approval of a former Administration of the Government reducing the hours of labor, and asking the passage of a law fixing a day's work at eight hours.

By Mr. BLAINE: The petition of temporary clerks employed in the office of the Quartermaster General, asking an appropriation to make their salaries equal to those of clerks of the first class.

By Mr. NICHOLSON: A petition of citizens of Lebanon and Magnolia, Delaware, for the establishment of a certain post office and post road.

By Mr. PHILIPS: The petition of letter carriers of Baltimore, for increase of compensation.

By Mr. RADFORD: The petition of Captain E. Vanwart.

By Mr. SCHENCK: The memorial of William A. Howard, late lieutenant colonel marine artillery and colonel thirteenth New York heavy artillery, praying for allowance of arrears of pay stopped on account of informal muster.

Also, the petition of colored soldiers of Tennessee, for same bounties as were paid to white troops.

By Mr. WELKER: The petition of William F. Ford, and 22 others, pensioners of Medina, Ohio, asking for an increase in their pensions.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 29, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Mr. President, no man of my age has suffered more than I have from newspaper assaults and from reporters from this city. From 1855 till now I have been the subject of constant assault from the Democratic papers throughout the country from one extreme to the other. For the last month I have been the subject of assault from the papers of my own party; and in their assaults they have out-Heroded Herod; they have gone beyond their illustrious predecessors. On Sabbath morning my attention was called to an imputation, conveyed by innuendo and indirection, in the Boston Commonwealth, purporting to come from some writer in this city. I immediately telegraphed to the editor of that paper for the name of the author, and yesterday wrote to him on the same subject. As yet I have not learned the name of the author. When I obtain his name I may again trouble the Senate, and will adopt such a course as, in my judgment, the dignity of the Senate, the fair fame of my State, and my own self-respect demand. For the present, I content myself by saying to my fellow-Senators and to the country that the imputation contained in that paper is without the slightest foundation; it is a baseless calumny.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the petition of J. Thorn Smith, of Washington, in which he asks Congress to present to the States for their approval amendments to the Constitution of the United States, namely, paragraph first, section two, article one, after the word "Legislature," insert, "provided, that no citizen of the United States shall be disqualified as such elector on account of race or color;" secondly, paragraph one, section four, article four, after the word "Government," insert "to every inhabitant thereof between the ages of five and twenty-one years, the privilege of a free, common English education;" and third, so to amend article twelve of the amendments to the Constitution as to elect the President and Vice President by a direct vote of the people without distinction of race or color. As this subject is now pending before the Senate, I move that the petition lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I also offer the petition of Edward Jenkins, of Hagerstown, Maryland, in which he sets forth that he was a soldier in the Army of the Union, having volunteered in August, 1863, and served in the Army until he was wounded and discharged for disability; that the Government gave all the soldiers in his regiment $100 bounty, but they withheld it from him because he was at one time a slave, and he asks for a remedy on account of the withholding of that bounty. I ask the reference of this petition to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

It was so referred.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Mary E. Walker, M. D., praying for compensation for services rendered by her to the Government during the late rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GRIMES presented a petition of members of the engineer corps of the Navy of the United States, praying that all engineer officers now ranking or who may hereafter rank with commissioned officers of the line, may be commissioned, and that first assistant engineers may rank with lieutenants and second assistant engineers with masters; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON. I present a memorial from F. P. Salas, who represents himself to be a subject of Spain, in which he states that many years ago, upon a shipment consigned to him from Havana, a general cargo, he paid the duties then exacted to the amount of $2,924, and that he was afterward called upon, after the lapse of seven or eight years, to pay the further sum of $624 24, and he asks to be relieved from the payment of that sum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator state the petitioner to be a subject of the kingdom of Spain?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule and practice of the Senate, a petition from a foreigner cannot be received.

Mr. JOHNSON. The petitioner does state that he is a subject of Spain, but he was told by the Secretary of the Treasury that there was no relief for him unless an act of Congress should be passed. I suppose that although he is a subject of Spain, as the duties exacted were exacted upon an importation under the revenue laws of the United States, his memorial praying for relief may properly be presented. If the rule is otherwise, I will send it to the State Department and have it presented in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair believes the uniform practice of the Senate to be as he has stated.

Mr. SUMNER. May I call the attention of the Chair to a very important case that occurred, now many years ago, on the presentation of a petition from the authors of England in favor of an international copyright?

Mr. JOHNSON. That was received.

Mr. SUMNER. It was presented by Mr. Clay, and explained and maintained by him, I think, in a speech of some length. It was signed by nearly all the authors of England, and, according to my recollection, at the time there was no objection to it on the ground that they were foreigners. I merely call attention to it as a precedent.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should suppose such a petition could be presented as a matter of course, unless there be some positive rule on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will have the Journal of two years since read in a moment. It has been sent for.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will not ask that business be delayed by this matter. It can be passed over for the present, until other business is acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be laid aside for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently said: With the permission of the Senate the Chair will read, in connection with the petition introduced by the Senator from Maryland, from the Journal of Monday, January 26, 1863:

"Mr. FOSTER presented a letter signed by certain British subjects, citizens and residents of England, requesting the aid of the people and the Government of the United States for the purpose of facilitating emigration to the United States, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

"The VICE PRESIDENT decided that the communication being signed by the subjects of a foreign Government, it was not in order to present it to the Senate."

Mr. JOHNSON. I am not sure whether that would apply to the case which I propose to present. This gentleman was the consignee, as he states in his memorial, of a cargo shipped at Havana, for which he paid the duties, as consignee, that were then exacted. After an interval of some six or seven years the revenue officers discovered, as they supposed, and no doubt correctly, that they had not charged him the amount of the duties that the cargo was liable for, and made him pay the difference between what he had paid and what he ought to have been charged with, $624. He states that he was the consignee of a mixed cargo, which is now scattered. He has applied to the Treasury Department, having paid the additional duty, and the Secretary tells him that he can grant him no relief without an act of Congress. It is a claim, therefore, rather on the Treasury than on the Government, for the fund—money which he says the Government has illegally received. The Chair will, however, decide whether it falls within the principle of that decision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, it does. It would certainly be the desire of the Chair to entertain the largest liberty in regard to the reception of petitions, both from natives and foreigners, but the Chair feels bound by that decision.

Mr. JOHNSON. Was that before or after the case referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is since, three years ago. There are many other cases, in the opinion of the Chair. The Vice President, at that time, suggested that it was the uniform practice, and that the rule had often been enforced.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask the consent of the Senate to introduce a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Previous to passing from this subject, the Chair would certainly prefer that it should be decided by the Senate, if there be any question about it. The Chair is very desirous that no petition to the body should be ruled out in consequence of any opinion of his that is not perfectly well established by former precedents. No motion being made on the subject, the Chair will receive the bill of the Senator from California.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONNESS. I will state in connection with the bill which I am about to present, in order that it may be read a first and second time and then laid upon the table and printed, that it is a bill relating to the quieting of titles to lands in California, a subject of great importance to us and upon which there have been several bills already presented. This one, I wish to observe, has been prepared by the surveyor general of California, and therefore I am not prepared to indorse it, but I wish it introduced and printed.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce the bill (S. No. 343) to quiet land titles in California; which was read twice by its title, laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. By request, I ask leave to introduce a bill without previous notice.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 344) donating public lands to the several States which may provide agricultural colleges for the education of persons of African descent; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GRIMES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 345) to amend section seven of the naval appropriation bill, approved March 3, 1845; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, it was Ordered, That Mary K. Smith have leave to withdraw her petition and other papers praying for a pension from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. HENDRICKS, it was Ordered, That the petition and other papers in relation to the claim of Philip Lansdale, surgeon United States Navy, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom were referred the petition and other papers of the heirs of John Denman and George Townley, praying for compensation for cattle furnished to the American Army during the revolutionary war, submitted an adverse report thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

IRA B. CURTIS.

Mr. DAVIS. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Decatur, Illinois, praying that a pension be granted to Ira B. Curtis, to report a bill for his relief. As this report has been postponed to the present time, when it should have been made before, I ask for the present consideration of the bill, as the matter is a very plain one.

By unanimous consent the bill (S. No. 342) for the benefit of Ira B. Curtis, was read three times and passed. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place Ira B. Curtis on the pension-roll as a surgeon wholly disabled in the service, at the rate of seventeen dollars per month, commencing February 28, 1866.

REFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have been requested by a citizen of the District to ask that the bill (H. R. No. 601) to grade East Capitol street and establish Lincoln square, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, be taken from that committee and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which it properly belongs. The chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds [Mr. BROWN] is absent, and I make the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE AT WINONA.

Mr. NORTON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 263.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 263) to authorize the Winona and St. Peter's Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi river and to establish a post route.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been reported to the Senate, and the question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] moved an amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole to the second section of the bill, which will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was after the word "act" in the twenty-first line of the second section to strike out the following words: "may, at the option of the company building the same, be built as a draw-bridge, with a pivot or other form of draw, or with unbroken or continuous spans; provided, that if the said bridge," in line twenty-five to strike out the word "it" and insert the word "and;" and also to strike out the proviso beginning at the thirty-second line in the following words:

And provided also, That if any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a draw-bridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point, and with spans of not less than one hundred and sixty feet in length in the clear between piers on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining spans to the draw shall not be less than two hundred and fifty feet; and said spans shall not be less than thirty feet above low-water mark, and not less than ten above extreme high-water mark, nearing to the bottom chord of the bridge, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly upon reasonable signal for the passage of boats whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under the permanent spans of said bridge, except when trains are passing over the same; but in no case shall unnecessary delay occur in opening the said draws after the passage of trains.

So that the section will read:

That any bridge built under the provisions of this act shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans, and shall not be of less elevation in any case than fifty feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the bottom chord of the bridge, nor shall the spans of said bridge be less than two hundred and fifty feet in length, and the span over the main channel of the river shall be three hundred feet in length, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river.

Mr. NORTON. I do not desire to open the discussion upon this subject again, as the matter was thoroughly discussed on the bill for the construction of bridges at Quincy and at Hannibal; and unless the Senator from Missouri can give some reason to the Senate why a discrimination should be made against this bridge, I can see no good reason why the amendment should be adopted. The provision proposed to be stricken out is identical with the provision in the bill authorizing the construction of bridges at Quincy and at Hannibal. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HENDERSON. Lest the Senate may have forgotten the purport of this amendment, I will restate that it is simply an amendment which will compel the bridges, if built over the Mississippi river at all, to be built with continuous spans fifty feet above the surface of the water. If the amendment is not adopted, bridges may be built on the river with pivots and draws. My object in offering this amendment to this bill is to have a test vote in the Senate on the subject. I desire that a commission shall be sent out to examine into this matter of bridging the river; and if they report that the river cannot be bridged with these high bridges I shall be willing at the next session of Congress to let the low bridges be built; but I think we ought to examine more critically and more carefully into this matter. As I stated the other day, a proposition is now pending in the Senate, authorized by the Committee on Commerce to be attached to one of the appropriation bills, as I understand, to appoint a board of engineers to go and examine the river and report as to the proper kind of bridges to be constructed.

It is perfectly certain that between this time and the beginning of our next session no bridges can be built on the Mississippi river. The water is now very high; the Mississippi river is remarkably high for this season of the year, and the June rise is yet to come; so that I apprehend nothing can be done toward the construction of bridges on that river during the summer or at any time previous to our meeting next fall. Hence I should like to have a test vote on the subject to determine whether the Senate will take the whole judgment of this matter upon themselves or whether they will leave it to a board of engineers to determine.

Of course, if we bridge at one point we have got to bridge at another, and in the course of a few years you will find a bridge at almost every town on the Mississippi river. How far this will be an obstruction to commerce is a matter that ought to be considered by this body. It is a matter of very great consequence, in my opinion, and one to which we have not given the consideration to which it is entitled. That is true, and as no harm can be done by the adoption of this amendment at present, as it will not obstruct the building of any bridge that can be built and within the time within which it can be built, I should like very much that it should be adopted. I do not desire to detain the Senate.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Senate will remember that the bills for the other two bridges which have been authorized by previous legislation here, the one at Hannibal and the one at Quincy, were in the alternative, authorizing a bridge either with a draw or with a continuous span. Now, while I agree very much with what the Senator from Missouri has said in regard to the bridging of the Mississippi river, I see no reason why there should be any discrimination against this bridge at Winona. It has been hinted that the legislation already passed here will not meet with success in the other House. Then let this bill go into the same basket and fail with them, and the whole legislation on the subject of bridges depend on the report of the commission of engineers that may be authorized; but I can see no reason why the Senate should discriminate against this bridge and change the alternative allowed in the other cases to positive legislation compelling the company to build a bridge of a continuous span.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will state that I do not wish to discriminate against this measure; but I failed to have a vote on the yeas and nays in the Senate upon the proposition of building draw-bridges on the other bill; it was overlooked when the bill was reported to the Senate. I will state to the Senator from Minnesota that the bill as we passed it in this body I am satisfied will not pass the House of Representatives. I am pretty well satisfied of that. It will come back to be acted upon in this body. There is but little doubt about that. The probability is that it will not be passed at all; that nothing more than the proposition made by the Senator from Minnesota himself to have a survey of the Mississippi river and a report to us at the next session will be agreed to at this session—nothing better or nothing worse than that. I am perfectly sure that he need have no fears about the bill in its present shape going through the House of Representatives. I do not believe that it will. If it is passed at all, it will be passed with amendments which will bring it back; and then I desire to have the very same vote upon that proposition that I have offered here. That is all I desire.

Mr. GRIMES. If this was a question solely as to the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi river where it bounds the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota I should have nothing to say on the subject, but I understand the Senator from Missouri to say that he desires this to be a test vote on this question as to whether the Mississippi shall be bridged at all or not.

Mr. HENDERSON. No.

Mr. GRIMES. It virtually amounts to that. The Senator insists that these bridges shall be erected fifty feet above high water-mark, as I understand his proposition. It is very probable that such bridges can be well built across the Ohio river and across many streams where the bluffs approach near to the river, but on the Mississippi river, where there are six or eight miles in extent of low bottom lands, and the rise and fall of the river does not exceed twelve feet, the water then spreading all over these bottoms, the construction of such bridges as the Senator from Missouri proposes will be attended with immense expense; much more money than many railroad companies can afford to expend, even if they can be constructed at all.

Then, again, nearly all of these bridges are proposed to be thrown across the Mississippi river where there are towns already built, or partially built, upon the low bottom lands; and the construction of such a bridge with embankments of that height in these towns, or in most of them, all except in the town of Quincy—I do not know where the bridge is proposed to be built there—would be ruinous to the towns, and the commerce of the country would receive no corresponding advantage. I cannot conceive why it is not possible to build draw-bridges on the Mississippi river that shall not obstruct navigation as well as you can build them upon other streams. Gentlemen say that in a short time bridges will be thrown across the Mississippi river every few miles. They never will be thrown across the river except where the railroads terminate. We know that capitalists are not in the habit of building railroads very close together. Perhaps in time there may be bridges across the Mississippi river once in fifty miles. The obstruction that they will afford to the navigation of steamboats up and down the river will be merely a detention of fifteen minutes when they approach a bridge. Will that furnish any such obstruction as would justify us in refusing to all the commerce of those States that desire to pass eastward or westward an opportunity to cross the river?

I do not know anything in regard to the particular location where it is proposed to build this bridge, nor do I know whether it is proposed by these companies to go on at present and construct their bridge; but I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri that he is altogether mistaken as to some of the other railroad companies and bridges that are proposed to be constructed if he includes them in the same category with the one now under consideration. I know that it is proposed to build some of these bridges this summer. I know that the water has fallen and is low, and that they now can go on upon the upper Mississippi river and construct the bridges.

Mr. HENDERSON. Oh, no; the water has risen.

Mr. GRIMES. Then it has risen in three days. I know it has been high. The June freshet of which the Senator speaks is a June freshet on the lower Mississippi, but we have our rise in the month of May, which has already gone by, and I suppose it has gone by in Minnesota some two or three weeks already, and the water is low. I do not know whether this company is prepared to go on and build this bridge, but I know that they are prepared to go on and build the bridges across the Mississippi river below, and the postponement of this subject for twelve months will be of very considerable detriment.

Mr. POMEROY. I know of no reason why a river should not be bridged any more than why a mountain should not be cut down to make room for a railroad. The currents of commerce and emigration are as thorough by way of railroads as by way of rivers. It is the river that is the obstruction to the railroad, just as much as the mountain is. When the Pacific railroad bill was before the Senate it was thought that the Missouri river should be bridged, and I have in my hand the provision of law for bridging the Missouri river, which is by far a more difficult river to bridge than the Mississippi. It is a more rapid stream; it is a longer and larger stream above its junction with the Mississippi. I will read the provision of the law in regard to bridging the Missouri river contained in the ninth section of the act of July 2, 1864:

"That to enable any one of said corporations to make convenient and necessary connections with other roads, it is hereby authorized to establish and maintain all necessary ferries upon and across the Missouri river and other rivers which its road may pass in its course; and authority is hereby given said corporation to construct bridges over said Missouri river and all other rivers for the convenience of said road: Provided, That any bridge or bridges it may construct over the Missouri river or any other navigable river on the line of said road shall be constructed with suitable and proper draws for the passage of steamboats, and shall be built, kept, and maintained, at the expense of said company, in such manner as not to impair the usefulness of said rivers for navigation to any greater extent than such structures of the most approved character necessarily do."

That is the kind of charter to give a railroad company—not tie them up to draws of any specific character, but simply require them in the law to put in a draw of such a character that it shall not obstruct the navigation any more than such draws necessarily do. It is admitted that they obstruct navigation to some extent, but it is the public interest that is promoted by it. That is the reason why we allow these draw-bridges. The Mississippi river affords no such obstacles to bridging as the Missouri does, and we have already a provision of this kind for bridging the Missouri, and I know not why we should not be as liberal on the Mississippi. I am for bridging it at every point where the public interest requires, wherever a railroad crosses it, and to have bridges of such a character that the companies can build them and maintain them. To require the building of bridges of four hundred feet span, embarrassing the companies, making them forever unsafe, is neither for the public interest nor for the interest of the companies. A bridge of suitable character should never be more than two hundred feet span, and the draw that turns, if it is constructed after that pattern, should never be over three hundred feet, that is, one hundred and fifty feet between the points. You cannot turn one over three hundred feet long. There is not one in existence that turns over three hundred feet, and yet we have undertaken to legislate, in two distinctive bills before Congress, to make the draw itself three hundred feet, so that the bridge would have to be six hundred feet, if it turned round.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, one hundred and sixty feet on each side of the pivot.

Mr. POMEROY. I am not talking about this bill, but I am talking of the bill we passed for bridging the Ohio river at Steubenville. But a space of one hundred and sixty feet on each side of the pivot makes the draw three hundred and twenty feet. That is altogether too long. The time is coming, and I think has already come, when the commerce of the rivers must give way to some extent and be discommodated by the commerce of railroads. They take the great bulk of the travel and business of the country now, and it is as much our duty to provide for this class of commerce that goes across the country as it is to keep the river clear. The river, to be sure, is a natural channel, but it has no more claims on Congress or the country or mankind than these artificial channels have; and to embarrass a company with such a kind of bridge that they cannot build it, and that is not good for anything when it is built, is such unfriendly legislation that we ought not to encourage it. We should extend the greatest possible facilities for bridging these streams everywhere; and the only provision of law I want on the subject is precisely that contained in the Pacific railroad act. Let the companies themselves judge of the character of the structure. Let them be allowed to build it where they have to cross a stream, and only require them not to obstruct the navigation of the river more than such structures necessarily do. That is the language of the law in regard to bridging the Missouri river.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Mr. President, my impression is that all these bridges on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers should be built without a draw. When we wanted to build a bridge at Louisville, Congress required it to be ninety feet above low-water mark. We applied to Congress for liberty to build it with draws, and that privilege was granted at the last session. I put the matter immediately into the hands of an engineer to ascertain the difference between the cost of a bridge with and a bridge without draws, and the advantages of the two methods. My engineer reported to me that it would be cheaper and better to build it without draws. I have great confidence in his judgment; I have built several bridges of his drafting.

Mr. POMEROY. What was the length of draw required in the law? That was the obstacle.

Mr. HENDERSON. One hundred and fifty feet in the Ohio bridges.

Mr. POMEROY. But the bridge would have to be twice that length and that would make it three hundred feet.

Mr. HENDERSON. But there is a pivot pier in the center of it. The passage way is only one hundred and fifty feet. The pivot rests on a small pier.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I became convinced that it was not best for the Jeffersonville railroad and the Louisville and Nashville railroad to build a bridge at Louisville at present. Congress required it to be ninety feet above low-water mark. At the falls the highest rise of the water is forty-four feet. It rose to that extreme height only three times in the memory of the oldest citizens there, in 1792, in 1831, and in 1847. Of course, if you build bridges sixty feet above high-water mark, they must be some height above the bank of the river, and you must have an embankment on each side for nearly half a mile in order to get the proper elevation of the bank and then carry the bridge of the proper height to the center of the river.

My conclusion is that a proper continuous-span bridge can be built as cheaply as a safe bridge with draws, and that it is much better for the company because vessels descending the river will get on to a draw-bridge in some way or other and the companies will have suits continually with the owners of boats and the owners of cargoes. If you build a continuous-span bridge of such a height that vessels can pass under it from above and from below you get clear of nearly all difficulties of litigation and all difficulties from negligence, some watchman not being in his place—and it is almost impossible to keep them in place at all times—and as the boats run through the night there is great difficulty from this cause.

I think the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri as to an investigation by engineers to ascertain whether the bridges across the Mississippi river should be draw-bridges or continuous-span bridges is very proper. I think every bridge engineer will tell you that he can make the one bridge just as well as he can make the other. It is in the power of a good builder to make a good job of either kind of bridge; but draw-bridges do not keep up like continuous-span bridges, and even if a continuous-span bridge should cost a little more than the other, in my judgment that expense is compensated by saving after-troubles which the draw-bridge would entail upon the company. If we had had a charter allowing us to build the Louisville bridge fifty feet above high-water mark I think it is likely we should be at work now, or if the law had allowed us to build it seventy feet above low-water mark we should certainly be at work this summer building the bridge. I have not asked Congress to modify that law because I left instructions for the prosecution of the investigation and the obtaining of estimates of the cost of the two kinds of bridges and an examination of the ground, so that we should know certainly what expense would be required whichever mode we took. We have a bridge with a draw at Nashville, and we have had multitudes of suits growing out of it, and are having them every year. In high stages of the water vessels are frequently no longer under the power of steam; and they run against the piers, and the owners of the boats seek to hold the company liable.

I rather think that experience and investigation are in favor of continuous-span bridges. My own opinion has changed since I had the estimates made in relation to the bridge at Louisville, and changed very materially, and I am satisfied that a skillful engineer who takes the whole subject into consideration, as well cost now as trouble, vexation, and cost in the future, will decide in favor of continuous-span bridges.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is House bill No. 11, to facilitate commercial, postal, and military communication among the several States, upon which the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] is entitled to the floor.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the Senate will postpone the consideration of the order of the day and take up House joint resolution No. 127, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator make that motion?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the present and all prior orders be postponed, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House resolution to amend the Constitution.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask that the unfinished business, which comes up at this hour, be postponed to and made the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock. Of course, I do not wish to antagonize it with the motion of my colleague.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move that as an amendment to the motion?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, then, will put the whole question as one motion. It is moved that the present and all prior orders be postponed, and that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the House resolution indicated by the Senator from Michigan, and that the present order be postponed until to-morrow at one o'clock and made the special order at that time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I believe there was a special order for to-day at one o'clock, made sometime last week—the Colorado bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is true.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I did not know that the bill of which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHANDLER] has charge was the unfinished business upon the adjournment of the Senate yesterday afternoon. I thought it was laid aside and the Senate proceeded to other business, and therefore it was not the business before the Senate at its adjournment, and that the special order naturally came up this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands, the Senator from Maine was broken off in his speech by a motion to go into executive session. Some other and informal business was received by the unanimous consent of the Senate, but that bill was the unfinished business of yesterday, and that, by the rule of the Senate, takes precedence of a special order assigned for the same hour; so that the unfinished business of yesterday, House bill No. 11, is in order at the present time. The Senator from Michigan moves to postpone that bill until to-morrow at one o'clock, and to make it the special order for that time, and to proceed with the House resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The special order, I believe, was fixed by a two-thirds vote; can it be overridden by a majority vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not presented in that form precisely.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is the effect of the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By the rule of the Senate, the unfinished business takes precedence of a special order fixed for the same time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am aware of that fact. I have no objection to taking the vote on postponing the bill which is the unfinished business; but the motion to postpone the special order ought to be a separate vote by itself, because that special order for one o'clock to-day was made by a two-thirds vote of the body. The effect of this motion is to reverse the action agreed upon by a two-thirds vote by a majority vote. Therefore I ask that the question shall be divided, and the vote first taken on the motion to postpone the present order.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Indiana, I apprehend, is discussing a question not before the Senate. The special order is not before the Senate at all, and cannot come up except by unanimous consent. We have under consideration the unfinished business of yesterday. The Senator from Michigan makes a motion to postpone that and all prior orders for the purpose of taking up a particular subject. There can be but one subject before the Senate at a time, and that is now the question.

Mr. CHANDLER. With the consent of my colleague, I will ask that the bill which is the unfinished business be laid over informally, so that he may call up his joint resolution.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then if the proposition of the Senator from Michigan is agreed to, that is, that the unfinished business be postponed by unanimous consent for the present, I presume the special order is before the body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so. Does the Senator from Michigan withdraw his motion to postpone?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir, he does; and I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside informally for the purpose of allowing my colleague to take up the joint resolution he has indicated.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Michigan withdraws the motion, I renew it. I move that the unfinished business of yesterday and all other business be postponed for the purpose of proceeding with the joint resolution indicated by the Senator from Michigan who made the motion.

Mr. HOWARD. I did not intend to be understood as withdrawing my motion to postpone all other business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is still before the body, made by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I ask for a division of the question, that a vote be taken upon the proposition to postpone and then a separate vote on the business that shall occupy the attention of the Senate after that postponement. I make the point that the special order being established by a two-thirds vote, it cannot be postponed by a majority vote to give place to another piece of business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will then renew my motion, that the unfinished business be postponed until to-morrow at two o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Illinois is that the present and all prior orders be postponed, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution from the House of Representatives proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. That is now the motion before the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 127) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the pending question being on the amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON to strike out the third section, in the following words:

SEC. 3. Until the 4th day of July, in the year 1870, all persons who voluntarily adhered to the late insurrection, giving it aid and comfort, shall be excluded from the right to vote for Representatives in Congress and for electors for President and Vice President of the United States.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the vote will be taken on that motion.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is there anything proposed as a substitute for that section?

Mr. CLARK. Your motion precludes that now. You move to strike out, simply.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 43, nays 0; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Cresswell, Davis, Doan, Little, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—43.

NAYS—0.
ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Dixon, McDougall, Sprague, Wright, and Yates—6.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. I now offer a series of amendments to the joint resolution under consideration, which I will send to the Chair.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Take them one section at a time.

Mr. HOWARD. I will state very briefly what they are. I propose to amend section one of the article by adding after the words "section one" the following words, which will of course constitute a part of section one:

All persons born in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the States wherein they reside.

The second amendment—

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us take a vote on the first one.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator had better state all the amendments.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope we shall hear them all.

Mr. HOWARD. The second amendment is to amend the second section by striking out the word "citizens," in the twentieth line, where it occurs, and inserting after the word "male" the words "inhabitants, being citizens of the United States;" and by inserting at the end of that section the words "any such State."

The third section has already been stricken out. Instead of that section, or rather in its place, I offer the following:

SEC. 3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or an elector of President and Vice President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress, or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof; but Congress may, by a vote of two thirds of each House, remove such disability.

The following is to come in as section four:

The obligations of the United States incurred in suppressing insurrection, or in defense of the Union, or for payment of bounties or pensions incident thereto, shall remain inviolate.

Section four, as it now stands, will be changed to section five, and I propose to amend that section as follows: strike out the word "already," in line thirty-four, and also the words "or which may hereafter be incurred," in line thirty-five, and also the words "or of war" in lines thirty-five and thirty-six, and insert the word "rebellion" in lieu thereof; and also strike out the words "loss of involuntary service or labor" in line thirty-seven, and insert "the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations, and claims shall be forever held illegal and void."

After consultation with some of the friends of this measure it has been thought that these amendments will be acceptable to both Houses of Congress and to the country, and I now submit them to the consideration of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question in order is the amendment proposed to the joint resolution by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE.]

Mr. WADE. I ask leave to withdraw that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is still in the power of the mover, and he can withdraw it if he pleases. The amendment is withdrawn. The question now is on the amendments proposed by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is very well known that the majority of the members of this body who favor a proposition of this character have been in very serious deliberation for several days in reference to these amendments, and have held some four or five caucuses on the subject. Perhaps they have come to the conclusion among themselves that the amendments offered are proper to be made, but this is the first intimation that the minority of the body has had of the character of the proposed change in the constitutional amendment. Now, sir, it is nothing but fair, just, and proper that the minority of the Senate should have an opportunity to consider these amendments; and I rise for the purpose of moving that these amendments, together with the original proposition, be printed, so that we may see them before we are called upon to vote on them. Certainly there can be no graver question, no more serious business that can engage the attention of this Senate than a proposed change in the fundamental law.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will say to the Senator that if any gentleman on that side of the Chamber desires that these amendments be laid upon the table and printed, there is no objection to that.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I will defer any further remarks, and make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the amendments be printed and that the further consideration of the joint resolution be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish to give notice of an amendment which at the proper time I intend to offer to Senate bill No. 292, entitled "A bill to provide for restoring to the States lately in insurrection their full political rights." It is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the first section and to insert a section as a substitute which I ask to have printed.

Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. STEWART. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the first section of the bill and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That when any State lately in rebellion shall have ratified the foregoing amendment and shall have modified its constitution and laws in conformity therewith, and shall have further provided that there shall be no denial of the elective franchise to citizens of the United States because of race or color, and that all persons shall be equal before the law, the Senators and Representatives from such State, if found duly elected and qualified, may, after having taken the required oaths of office, be admitted into Congress as such: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be so construed as to require the disfranchisement of any loyal person who is now allowed to vote.

Mr. SUMNER. I simply wish to have that amendment printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print will be entered.

Mr. SUMNER. I also ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill of which no notice has been given, which I desire to have considered in connection with the other measure, as it belongs to this group of reconstruction measures.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 345) to enforce the amendment to the Constitution abolishing slavery by securing the elective franchise to colored citizens; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the bill be printed and laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 459) granting a pension to Anna E. Ward.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills of the Senate with amendments to each, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 184) to define more clearly the jurisdiction and powers of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. No. 237) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha Stevens.

PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. CLARK. I ask that the Senate give me a little time on Friday next for the purpose of disposing of certain private claims, if there be no objection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I shall object to that unless the constitutional amendment is disposed of by that time.

Mr. CLARK. I will state that I will not antagonize them with the constitutional amendment, or a public necessity of that kind, but I should like to have an understanding that I may have an hour or so on Friday next for the consideration of private claims, if there is no other public business of pressing importance in the way.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. COOPER, his Secretary, announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed, on the 26th instant, the following act and joint resolutions:

An act (S. No. 318) to authorize the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Navy;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 74) providing for the acceptance of a collection of plants tendered to the United States by Frederick Pech; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 97) to authorize certain medals to be distributed to veteran soldiers free of postage.

MARTHA STEVENS.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to take up Senate bill No. 237, granting a pension to Mrs. Martha Stevens, which has been returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment. The bill as it passed the Senate gave a pension of twenty dollars a month; the amendment of the House reduces it to seventeen dollars a month, the amount allowed in the case of a first lieutenant.

The amendment was concurred in.

DISTRICT SUPREME COURT.

On motion of Mr. WADE, the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 184) to define more clearly the jurisdiction and powers of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

INTER-STATE INTERCOURSE.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 11.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 11) to facilitate commercial, postal, and military communication among the several States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the Senator from Maine is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORRILL. When I gave way yesterday to a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, I had made up my mind that the Senate had perhaps been troubled with the consideration of this question about as long as it ought to be, and that though I considered it a question of very great importance, I had on one or two occasions done enough to call the attention of the Senate to the subject. I think that after so much I ought, perhaps, to content myself with recording my vote against the measure without trespassing longer upon the Senate; I will therefore make no further remarks.

Mr. CLARK. I move to amend the bill by striking out the word "connections" at the end of line five and the beginning of line six. I make the motion because the word "connections" in that part of the bill is ambiguous. It is explained as meaning a portion of the road; that is, the connections, the side-tracks, of the road; but it may have the meaning of other roads connecting with the road; and to prevent any such construction as that one railroad has a right to run over another road connecting with it, I move to strike out that word "connections," because if it can run over its own road, that means its entire road, the whole road.

Mr. CHANDLER. I see no particular objection to the amendment if the Senator insists upon it, but I can see no necessity for it.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope there will be no amendment to the bill. It has been thoroughly considered in the House of Representatives and in the Senate during several sessions. It is very brief, quite to the purpose, and I do not think it needs amendment. Certainly we cannot afford to strike anything out.

Mr. CLARK. That may be the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts. The bill is truly very brief. The Senator says it does not need amendment. I think on the whole it does need it, and I should be glad to make it more acceptable. That was the occasion of my moving an amendment to it. I think the word "connections" as there used is very objectionable, and I hope that it will be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I propose to amend the bill further—

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the Senator permit me to call his attention to a word in line nine?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member has stated his reason for striking out the word "connections," in lines five and six, and in that the Senate have concurred. It seems to me to be necessary also to strike out the word "connect," in the ninth line, for it goes on to say "and to connect with roads of other States, so as to form continuous lines." How is that to be done?

Mr. CLARK. I do not think it worth while to amend by striking out the words "to connect" there, because if a road can connect with another I am willing that it should do so.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to that either; but suppose it cannot do so by its charter?

Mr. CLARK. I was about proposing this amendment to be added at the close of the bill:

Nor shall it be construed to authorize any railroad to build any new road or connection with any other road, without authority from the State in which such railroad or connection may be proposed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to that. That will do.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that amendment will not prevail. It is well known that the State of New Jersey has refused not only to permit connections to be made, but to permit roads to carry freight or passengers within the State. The object of this bill is to control the commerce passing from one State to another. The State of New Jersey has seen fit to levy a tax upon the transit both of passengers and of freight through the State. She has assumed a power that we believe she does not possess; nor did she believe it, because in the very contract which she made in this railroad monopoly in New Jersey was a stipulation that in a certain event, to wit, in the event of Congress authorizing any other road or route, then the bonus which she was receiving from this corporation should cease and be void. The very object of this bill is to control the commerce passing through any State; if you please, the State of New Jersey or any other State. The Constitution says that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. Now, if the State of New Jersey possesses the power to levy a small tax upon passengers and upon freight passing through the State, she has the power to levy a larger tax. If she can levy ten cents on every passenger going through she can levy ten dollars. We deny the power of a State to tax property in transit or passengers in transit through her borders. Now, sir, if this amendment should prevail, of course it would destroy the object of the bill. I hope it will not prevail.

Mr. CLARK. I did not so understand the object of the bill to be that if this amendment prevailed it would destroy it. The amendment simply is, that this act shall not authorize the building of a new railroad or connection of railroad within a State without its authority. Now, is the object of the bill, and the confessed object of the bill, to authorize anybody to build a railroad within a State without the authority of the State?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is not the intention.

Mr. CLARK. Then the amendment does not destroy the object of the bill. I understood the object of the bill to be to authorize the carrying of the mails and of freight on the railroads which are built, from one State to another. That is a very different thing from the authorization of the building of a railroad. Now, while it is entirely true, under the provisions of the Constitution, that you may regulate commerce between the States, or from State to State, I take it that does not authorize you to build the avenues of commerce. That is a very different matter; and to guard against any such construction of the bill, and to put it in such a shape that it might command some votes, I proposed this amendment. I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate in debating it. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Davis, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane of Kansas, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Riddle, Salisbury, Van Winkle, Willey, and Williams—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Edmunds, Howard, Howe, Morgan, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Conness, Dixon, Doolittle, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Sprague, Trumbull, Wright, and Yates—10.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would ask the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce what was supposed by the committee to be the extent of the authority granted to these companies, which is given in the eighth line of the bill. Each of them is authorized to carry the mail, &c., and all property destined from one State into another State, "and to receive compensation therefor." Is it intended to enlarge the rate of compensation to which they are limited by their respective charters?

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator desire an answer now?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. The facts in the case are briefly these: in 1861 and 1862 the Government was pressed for transportation; it could not transport troops and supplies to a sufficient extent through the State of New Jersey by the Camden and Amboy railroad; that company had not the capacity to do it; and a Government quartermaster impressed another railroad and passed over that road seventeen thousand two hundred and forty-eight men, and six hundred and forty-nine horses, and eight hundred and six thousand pounds of freight, and that company received compensation. The Government, in fact, took the road, because it required that road for its transportation. The Camden and Amboy Railroad Company sued that railroad company, and under a decision of the courts in New Jersey, compelled that company to pay back every dollar of money received for the transportation of Government troops and supplies, when they were actually forced by the Government to carry them. The intention of this bill is to compel any State to permit the traffic of other States to pass through it, if there be an open channel. The State of New Jersey has discriminated in favor of her own citizens. She permits her own citizens to take freight over this road and she will not permit the citizens of other States to do so. It is believed to be an unjust discrimination against the citizens of other States, and against the interests of the commerce of the United States. We intend, in this bill, to open up channels of communication for trade between the several States. That is the intention and meaning of it.

Mr. JOHNSON. With due deference to my friend from Michigan, I think he does not understand the question that I put to him. It is not whether one or the other railroad company is to receive compensation, but it is as to the rate of the compensation. It may be that under this bill any railroad company which may carry passengers, &c., "on their way from any State to another State, and receive compensation therefor," may claim the right to charge just what they please. The question, therefore, which I propounded to the honorable member was, what was to be the rate of compensation; was it intended to free these companies from the rates limited by their charters?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not at all; it does not intend to interfere with them in that respect.

Mr. JOHNSON. So I supposed. Then, to make that plain, I propose to amend the bill by inserting after the word "therefor," in the ninth line, the words "not exceeding the rates allowed by its charter." I think there can be no objection to that.

Mr. CHANDLER. I see no particular objection to that amendment, nor do I see any necessity for it. Of course, these companies cannot charge more than their charters authorize them to charge. The amendment seems to me to be superfluous, and I would rather not have it on the bill, because it is not needed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish the attention of the Senator from Maryland for one moment. I do not understand the force of his amendment exactly. If the State legislation was in the nature of prohibition to a particular company to carry freight or passengers, what would be the rate of compensation in that case? Or, suppose the State had failed to prescribe any rate of compensation, what then would it be?

Mr. JOHNSON. At the rate of similar services. This bill is intended to give the right, and I assume now that Congress has authority to pass the act. I do not propose to argue that question; but, assuming the authority to be in Congress to pass the act, the whole effect of the amendment will be that the road is not to charge more than the same rate it is authorized to charge for similar services, or any services in carrying passengers or carrying freight.

Mr. CHANDLER. The State of New Jersey prohibits any but one road from transporting at all, and of course does not permit any compensation; and I am rather of opinion, on reflection, that the amendment of the Senator from Maryland would have the effect to destroy the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is certainly not my purpose. If I had designed to defeat the bill, I should have tried it by an open warfare and not by a guerrilla warfare. The honorable member might as well apply that suspicion to the member from New Hampshire.

Mr. CLARK. Oh! don't bring me in.

Mr. JOHNSON. "Misery likes company." [Laughter.] All I want to do is to guard against giving to these companies the right to charge whatever they may think proper, and to limit them to a charge in the nature of a quantum meruit. They are all now limited in their tolls, and the whole effect of the amendment is to say that for the duties they are to perform under this act they shall not exceed the rates of compensation fixed by the State law—that is all; not to say that they shall not be compensated. To apply it to the case which the honorable member seems to suppose is the only case to which the bill applies—but that is a great mistake, for it applies to all the roads in the country—the Amboy railroad in New Jersey is authorized to charge a certain rate of tolls for carrying passengers and for carrying freight; any other company there who may be authorized, if it connects with the Amboy road, to carry freight or carry passengers through, are to be limited to the same rate, or if the Amboy road is to take the freight and the passengers from the termination of the connecting road, they shall not be at liberty to charge more than their charters authorize. I assure the honorable member I have not the slightest desire to defeat the bill by any such movement as this.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 17, noes 15.

Mr. CONNESS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Maryland that I presume no objection will be made to his amendment if he will add the words "in all cases where the State laws prescribe the rates."

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. STEWART. I do not see the object of the amendment. Of course we do not say in this law that these companies may charge higher than the rates allowed by their charters; and those laws of course would control in this matter. We have not undertaken to abrogate those laws by any language I can see in this bill. There is nothing in this bill to be so construed.

Mr. JOHNSON. If that is so the honorable member ought to vote for the amendment so as to make it clear and certain.

Mr. STEWART. I think it is clear now.

Mr. JOHNSON. It may be contended, and has been contended, that Congress has the authority of itself to construct roads or to authorize roads already constructed to carry on commerce between the States; and it may therefore be said that when Congress attempts to do that, and authorizes the charging of compensation without saying how the compensation may be regulated, they may charge whatever compensation they may think proper to ask and the public may be willing to submit to. The whole effect of the amendment is to limit them in their charges of compensation to the charges to which they are restricted by their respective charters.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would like to ask the honorable Senator from Maryland whether the charter of the Delaware and Raritan Bay Railroad Company—I believe that is the name—provides rates of toll which it is authorized by law to take.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know. I never saw the charter.

Mr. CRESWELL. I judge it does for the purposes of the several roads of which that road is composed—certainly for local purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill provides, of course, for through transportation. It has no effect to operate upon internal commerce, and ought not to have any, because that belongs to the State; but for through transportation across one State, between two others, it does provide. Now, then, unless the charter of any road which may come within the provisions of this bill does provide rates of compensation, if the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Maryland is adopted the company will be restricted to taking in effect no compensation at all, because it is limited to what is authorized by that particular State, and that particular State does not happen to authorize any. If I understand the regulations in New Jersey, this particular line of road which it is sought to open to inter-State commerce has no lawful authority at all for any price to carry through passengers and through freight, and it is desired to give that lawful authority and to allow it to receive a reasonable compensation. I am very much afraid, indeed—I dare say it is not the object of it—that the adoption of this amendment would be the substantial defeat of the object which it is desirable to accomplish.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Cresswell, Davis, Fessenden, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Morrill, Norton, Riddle, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, and Willey—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Edmunds, Grimes, Howard, Howe, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cragin, Dixon, Doolittle, Kirkwood, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nesmith, Sprague, Trumbull, Williams, Wright, and Yates—13.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. CRESWELL. I renew the motion which I made, and which was acted on yesterday in committee, when the Senate was not at all full, which I deem important to this bill. It is to insert as a new section:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The only object of this amendment is to retain in the future the entire control over this system of legislation. We are about entering on a new field; we are not apprised as to what may be the precise results of this kind of legislation, how it may affect commerce, how it may affect the great railroad and transporting interest of the country, and this amendment simply proposes to retain in the hands of Congress as against any interest, vested or otherwise, which may be created by this bill, the right hereafter to control it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not the slightest objection to the Senator's amendment. I do not think it has any effect one way or the other; but I have no objection to it. Congress has the power which this amendment calls for, any way.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read the third time?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the bill read as it now stands amended.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Whereas the Constitution of the United States confers upon Congress in express terms the power to regulate commerce among the several States, to establish post roads, and to raise and support armies:

Therefore, Be it enacted, &c., That every railroad company in the United States, whose road is operated by steam, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to carry upon and over its road, boats, bridges, and ferries, all passengers, troops, Government supplies, mails, freight, and property on their way from any State to another State, and to receive compensation therefor, and to connect with roads of other States so as to form continuous lines for the transportation of the same to the place of destination: Provided, That this act shall not affect any stipulation between the Government of the United States and any railroad company for transportation or fares without compensation, nor impair or change the conditions imposed by the terms of any act granting lands to any such company to aid in the construction of its road; nor shall it be construed to authorize any railroad company to build any new road or connection with any other road without authority from the State in which such railroad or connection may be proposed.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not see any object whatever in passing this bill as it now stands. I have been disposed to vote for the bill, and will do so yet, but I cannot for the life of me see now what power it would confer upon any railroad company. As I understand it now, the companies will have such power as the States give them, and no more. I really do not see any object in passing the bill in that shape. If Senators can show me that this bill confers upon any existing corporation any right that it does not have under the State charter, I should like to know what it is. I am familiar with railroad charters and railroad laws, and I want additional powers, if possible, conferred on certain railroad companies, so as to expedite the transportation of supplies and goods from one part of the country to another. I am very much in favor of the object of the bill, but it seems to me that it has been so garbled and destroyed that it is now of no account.

Mr. MORRILL. The bill is undoubtedly shorn of one of its features, which was the objectionable feature to me. A company cannot do what was undertaken to be done by the bill originally without the consent of the State authorities. That was the chief objection to the bill in my mind. It can do now all that it could have done before with the consent of the States. That is all there is of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Could they not do this at any rate without this bill?

Mr. MORRILL. Without the consent of the States, of course there was no authority in the General Government by which the thing could be done at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator has examined the bill, and I ask him what power it gives to any railroad corporation not conferred by the charter of the State.

Mr. MORRILL. As against the State?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, and against anybody.

Mr. MORRILL. As against the State, none at all.

Mr. CLARK. I cannot say what was designed by the framers of the bill; but it seems to me that the bill now secures all that its friends say that it was intended to secure, that is, the right to carry freight, passengers, troops, Government supplies, mails, &c., over the road. That it does now. The amendment which was adopted on my motion simply provides that you shall not enter into a State and build a new road or a new connection without the consent of the State. I understood the object of the bill outside to be to authorize some railroad in New Jersey to carry freight, mails, and supplies which now was prohibited from carrying them. If there is any force in such legislation, this bill now authorizes them to do that just as much as before the amendment was put there. The amendment has not touched the main features of the bill; it has simply put on it a guard that you shall not build a new road in any State without getting the consent of the State. It seems to me it has power enough, though some of its friends seem to think it has not.

Mr. SHERMAN. What I desire, what the people of the country desire, is some power in the General Government to prevent a State from lying in the path of a great public improvement demanded by the United States. I can state a case. Ohio is an agricultural State; the chief value of its products depends upon getting a market on the sea-board in the New England and middle States. By the policy of the State of Pennsylvania all the railroad power of that State is concentrated in one great corporation, with an annual income now of from fifteen to seventeen million dollars. The State of Ohio has thrown open its territory, and all the western States have thrown open their territory, to the building of vast nets of railway, intended to benefit the West and the East also. The great State of Pennsylvania, stretching from Lake Erie almost to the southern border of Ohio, lies there in the way, controlling and preventing the commerce of this great country from going to the sea-board. We had almost a little war there at Erie about the connection of two railroads, until finally, I think, somebody in Pennsylvania was either bought off or coaxed off and a connection was made which enabled us to pass along the lake shore to the State of New York. Recently an effort has been successful in the courts of Pennsylvania to prevent a corporation from building a new line of railway through that State, and now the great corporation of Pennsylvania to which I refer is engaged in preventing a connection between Washington city, the capital of the country, and the great West. A line of railroad was chartered at one time from Pittsburg through Connellsville to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, which would shorten the distance between this city and Pittsburg for every one traveling to the West perhaps one hundred miles, or it may be less than that; but this corporation lies in the way of this improvement and prevents its construction.

Now, I believe there is power in this Government somewhere, under the authority to regulate commerce, or the authority to regulate the postal service, or in some of the great powers conferred upon Congress, to prevent a State from lying thus in the way of the commerce of this country. It is manifest that this bill in its present shape, which requires the consent of the State to the construction of any work through that State, utterly defeats the object of the framers of the bill. It will be ineffective; it will only deceive the public; it will only deceive the friends of the bill. I do not see, therefore, any object in passing it. If, however, the friends of the bill think there is any virtue in it, I am still willing to vote with them for it; but I cannot myself see any, because the amendment that has been adopted requiring the consent of the State to any authority exercised within the limits of the State, by any railroad company, destroys any virtue there is in the bill.

Mr. CLARK. My amendment does not go that length. It simply provides that a new road or new connection shall not be built without the consent of the State.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then the object which I have in view and which the people of Ohio have in view in supporting this bill is confessedly defeated; that is, there is no way to aid any corporation or any individual in opening new channels of intercourse from the West to the East.

Mr. GRIMES. Do I understand the Senator to say that he wants Congress to confer on corporations the power to build railroads?

Mr. SHERMAN. If I had my way I would organize a corporation under an act of Congress to build a line of railway in the most direct possible manner from the city of Washington to the city of New York, and from the city of Washington to the West, and as many of them as are necessary for military purposes.

Mr. GRIMES. If my opinion was that it would be to the advantage of the public and my own individual advantage to build a road in the State of Ohio within ten miles of and parallel with the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne, and Chicago railroad, ought the Government to do it? Where is the line to be drawn between the case the Senator puts and the one I put?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Government of the United States would only be justified in building railroads or exercising extraordinary authority under the military and postal powers in cases where it was manifest that the States prevented the building of railroads. In the State of Ohio the case put by the Senator occurs. Anywhere within that State any five men may build a railroad if they will risk the investment.

Mr. COWAN. And buy the right of way.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; we give them power to condemn if necessary, and we do not restrain them except by their own self-interest; and what has been the result? In the State of Ohio we have a network of railways running in all directions through that State, many parallel to each other. I do not think there is a county in the State of Ohio that is not now supplied with one or more railroads, checking the State all over. It is true some of the investments are very poor; but still we have the railroads, and they are of vast public service; but when they come to our eastern border we are there met by three great corporations, each of them of mammoth proportions, that refuse to let the products of the West go to a cheap market in the East without some unreasonable restriction. Take the case of the Pennsylvania Central railroad, the corporation to which I have already alluded. There are three lines of railroads concentrating at Pittsburg, running through the State of Ohio, one from Cleveland, one from Chicago, one from Cincinnati, and a great number of feeders running into these three roads. In this way the travel and the produce of any part of Ohio can readily reach Pittsburg; but how is the vast produce concentrated at this one important point to get from Pittsburg to Philadelphia, or any other market? Only over the Pennsylvania Central railroad; there is no other way for the vast commerce of the great West concentrated there to reach the eastern market; and that company has now an annual income of $17,000,000. They compel the products of every portion of the West which reach Pittsburg to go over their road; and they will not allow anybody else to build a railroad running from Pittsburg northwardly to get to New York or southwardly to get to Baltimore. They control, in a great measure, the legislation of Pennsylvania, and they lie right in the path of the commerce of this country.

It seems to me that since we have exercised some pretty strong powers, the time has arrived when, if we can, we should find in the Constitution some power to redress this evil. Every portion of this country labors under the evils growing out of this system. In New England they have to pay higher prices for the produce they consume. In New York they are crippled also, because the city of New York lies in a little peninsula stretching down south of the great body of the State of New York, and the recent action of this company in the State of Pennsylvania has prevented the construction of a new line of railway along the northern border of the State of Pennsylvania to reach the city of New York. The city of Baltimore is cut off from connection with us, and with the western portion of the State of Pennsylvania; and this corporation compels the Baltimore and Ohio railroad to creep down along and over the most difficult mountains in the United States to reach Wheeling and the southern part of the State of Ohio, while it has been considered, I believe, for more than a hundred years, since the time of Washington, that the natural outlet for the commerce of the West to the East is through the gap of mountains from Pittsburg to Cumberland. That was the route that was traveled by Washington in his early adventures to the West. It was the great line of travel long before any one of these railroads was made; it was the line of the old Pennsylvania wagons; it was the line of the old Cumberland road which I traveled in a stage and crossed the mountains before this railroad was built. And yet that line pointed out by nature is blocked up by a corporation.

It seems to me that if there is any power in the Government to prevent this, it ought to be exercised. I do not think the passage of this bill will do any good now, because it has been so cut up; and if, as my friend from Maine has urged in his argument, there is no power in the General Government to control or regulate the building of a railroad within a State, as a matter of course we shall have to submit to it until the people of the great State of Pennsylvania rise up in rebellion against the authority of this corporation.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President, I think the apprehensions of the honorable Senator from Ohio in regard to the action of Pennsylvania in this behalf are entirely unfounded. It is true that she has one great railroad, and has been very careful of it and very liberal toward it, and would be very unwilling to bring it in competition with another before the proper time; but when the time comes that the trade and travel of the country demand another outlet, it will be made and be made promptly.

I am opposed to this bill. Mr. President, because I think it is clearly a usurpation of power on the part of the General Government which it does not possess. If we can enlarge the chartered powers of a railroad lying within a State, we can diminish those powers. If we have any power over them whatever, we have all; or, at least, I know nowhere where there is to be found any limit. But there is a mischief, and a mischief which existed at the framing of the Constitution, and which was provided for, not affirmatively, by clothing this Government with the power to charter railroads, but in a negative way. What is the mischief alleged here? It is that certain States levy taxes to put into their State treasury through the medium of their railroads, and they levy these taxes upon the inter-State travel and trade. That is the mischief, as I understand, which is complained of. I am not certain that the mischief has risen to that height which would render it proper that we should interfere, but I am rather inclined to think that I would vote for a bill which would prevent a State from committing that mischief.

Under the original Articles of Confederation the citizens of all the States were only in the several States to be subjected to such burdens, themselves and their trade and travel, as the citizens of the State within which they were at the time were subjected to. That was found to be mischievous, because the citizens of a State lying, as Pennsylvania does, across the line of principal travel from the East to the West, or lying, as the State of Maryland or the State of New Jersey does, between the northern and southern travel, might well afford to pay this tax, provided all the strangers who passed through their State were obliged to pay it too; and I think it was the defective nature of that provision which gave rise to the present power of the Constitution given to the General Government to regulate commerce. But certainly that power does not extend so far as to enable Congress, in despite of the States and against their will, to make ways of commerce. However much it might operate upon common carriers and upon the right of the States to impose improper burdens upon trade and travel, it cannot extend to the chartered powers of turnpike and railway companies, because to say that it does is to say that the whole is vested in us; and, Mr. President, I know of no greater mischief that could happen this country than to bring all the railroad companies in the country here to have their charters either enlarged or diminished. I do not know anything which would be more likely to undermine the virtue of Congress and sap the very foundations of our institutions than to bring all the capital of the country here to buy special privileges from us and combine together to get them.

Mr. HOWE. I know of one thing that would be, in my judgment, a little more injurious than that. That might hurt, but not so bad, I think, as it would hurt to concede the power to any one State of this Union to actually prohibit commerce from passing through its limits from one State to another. The power which the opponents of this bill concede to the State of New Jersey is a power to throw a gate across one or two or all of its highways, and to say that commerce between the States on either side of it shall not pass over those highways. If New Jersey has that power, Ohio has it, and Ohio may at the very next session of her Legislature, or her railway companies themselves may, if they see fit to do it in the interests of Ohio agriculture, stop every pound of freight from passing through that State, or may levy a toll upon it, in the interest of her production, which would be ruinous to the agriculture of the country. Ohio can at the very next session of her Legislature impose such restrictions upon the railways of that State as would inevitably not only starve the East to death, but would suffocate the West, would just block up the product of the Northwest where it is raised, and would leave the East, where it is consumed, without it, and I think that would be a little more injurious than the corruption which would follow from assuming the simple jurisdiction that is asked for here, which is no more in the world than just to say, by the authority of the nation in the interests of commerce, that these bars put up by the State of New Jersey over one of its highways shall be let down. That is all. It is not to build any railway nor to add any new privileges nor make any new corporation.

Mr. COWAN. There is power to correct the evil of which the honorable Senator complains, to a great extent, but this bill does not correct it. This bill does not prevent the States from levying taxes upon the trade and travel of other States. It steps aside, away from the mischief, and undertakes simply to say to all roads, "Your power shall be enlarged so as to enable you to do things which you are not authorized to do by the terms of your original creation." It does not forbid the State of New Jersey from levying taxes to go into her State treasury through the medium of the Camden and Amboy railroad. It does not prevent the State of Pennsylvania from requiring a foreign corporation to pay so much annually for leave to go through the State. It does not forbid the Baltimore and Ohio railroad from levying a tax upon its passengers to go into the coffers of Maryland. It leaves the mischief untouched; but it attempts, in violation, I think, of all State authority and all State right, and without any reason, to enlarge the charter of the Delaware and Raritan Bay Railroad Company through New Jersey, because that is the point of it; and it is upon that charter that it is to operate.

But, Mr. President, there is another thing to be taken into the account. Who has suffered from this "monopoly" in New Jersey, pray? Nobody. The people of the world never before traveled as comfortably, as rapidly, and with the same certainty as they do now across New Jersey upon the Camden and Amboy road. It is a good road, and flourishing, and ought to be, and New Jersey ought to be proud of it. She has fostered it and given it privileges which she has refused to other companies, and it is owing to that very fact, perhaps, that she has it to-day. Now, other companies want to enjoy the fruits of its prosperity and success; and because New Jersey refuses to allow them to do so, in violation of her own compact with her own company, her own creation, we are appealed to to do it. It is not to remove the actual mischief, the mischief which exists as against the Constitution, and which has not been felt, and as against which I believe nobody has as yet sought relief, but it is to confer special power not granted by New Jersey upon one of her own corporations.

With regard to Pennsylvania, who has found difficulty in coming across the Alleghenies by the Pennsylvania Central road? There is hardly upon this continent or upon any other such a road as that; a road upon which a man can travel with the same speed, the same certainty, and at less cost. What might be if there were more of them, and what might be if they were upon more direct lines, is another thing. But, Mr. President, it requires an enormous amount of capital to build a railroad through the mountains, much more than it does over the almost level plains of Ohio. Pennsylvania does not feel herself warranted in creating companies with a large amount of capital to embark in enterprises until she is satisfied herself that they will pay; and the moment that is done, new avenues will be opened; but certainly no one can complain now of the want of avenues to pass through Pennsylvania in any direction almost. As I said before, they may not be direct; I may not be able to get home as directly as I could by an air line; but I know very well that I get home in the same time now that it would formerly take me to go from where I live to Pittsburg, a distance of about thirty miles, or nearly so. When we take all these things into the account, I think there is no reason that we should complain, either of the monopoly of railroad companies or of the exclusive claim on the part of the States to control the corporations within their limits. All that could have been asked of a State in the first place was to say to the people, "You may travel over the State and you shall travel over the State free from any burden whatever, except perhaps for police or sanitary purposes, but we will impose no burden on you which will put taxes in the State treasury." That was the most that anybody could ask, not that the General Government should enter a State and should parcel out franchises which belong to it as a part of its reserved rights and give them to corporations after the fashion contemplated by this bill.

Mr. President, I have had no apprehensions that this measure could pass, and have therefore sat silently by during the debate; but I beg leave to say, that if this measure is to pass the Senate, it is, even among the important measures which come before this body, the most important by far which has claimed our attention during this session, and will be fraught in the future with results that no man can calculate now. I hope that we shall all pause before we adventure ourselves upon an errand of this kind.

Mr. SUMNER. I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania that the measure before us is an important measure. Whether it is so transcendently important as he depicts I do not venture to say. But, sir, I believe it is a beneficent measure, and it is important from its very beneficence. The bill as originally presented was complete and simple. I think that met the idea which has been so ably presented by the Senator from Ohio. Were the bill adopted in that form it would be truly beneficent. It would prevent any State from becoming a turnpike gate to the internal commerce of the country. No State, I insist, has a right to take toll on the internal commerce of this great Republic, and it belongs to the United States, under the Constitution, to regulate that internal commerce. It was in the exercise of that power, under the Constitution, and also of other powers, as, for instance, the power to regulate the post office, and also the military power, that this bill was conceived. I say, sir, in every respect it is a beneficent measure. It has been to-day ably and conclusively vindicated by the Senator from Ohio. On other occasions I have at length considered it. I feel now that there is no occasion for any further elaborate discussion. I regret, sir, with the Senator from Ohio, that the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire has been fastened upon it. I wish it were in our power now to get that amendment off and restore the bill to its original force and virtue. But even with that amendment, allow me to say, the bill is better than nothing. It does something. It goes forth and does battle with that monopoly in at least one State of the Union which was in view when the bill was first presented. It is also a precedent for the future action of Congress, and it will open the way to all that the Senator from Ohio so earnestly desires. I shall be glad hereafter to act with him in carrying out the original purposes of this bill, so that no State shall be able to set itself up in the way of the internal commerce of the country. But considering that the amendment has already been made, that it has been attached to the bill, that we have now passed the stage when it would be advisable to open the discussion of that amendment again, I hope that the Senate will proceed to the final passage of the bill. I have said that though shorn of much of its virtue it is better than nothing; it will do much good. It is even in its present form essentially a beneficent measure. Therefore I hope that it will be adopted.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, it is the right of every State to construct its own system of internal improvements. It is also the duty of Congress to regulate commerce among the several States; and if one State intervening between two other States stops the commerce between those two other States, the Congress of the United States has the power to open it through the obstructing State. That, I think, is a plain principle; but the power of Congress in relation to internal improvements in an obstructing State so as to open commerce between two other States adjoining the obstructing State is a concurrent power with the power of the State obstructing over its own system of internal improvements. Here is the State of New Jersey. It has a system of internal improvements for itself. Those improvements may be used, and have long been used, for the purpose of facilitating trade between States, it lying between them. The question is this: has Congress the right, under the power to regulate commerce, to enter into the State of New Jersey and seize upon all the system of internal improvements which that State has constructed for the purpose of facilitating trade and intercourse, and to regulate the system itself? I say Congress has no such power as that; but at the same time neither the State of Pennsylvania, nor the State of New Jersey, nor any other State has the power to obstruct commerce among other States, those States lying between those other States.

What, then, is the extent of the legitimate power to regulate commerce as between those other States and the State of New Jersey or Pennsylvania intervening between the other States? It is simply this: if such obstructions be interposed Congress has the power to open up its own system of internal improvements for the purpose of carrying on trade among the several States. Suppose New Jersey by her legislation was to adopt a system of laws that would interdict the States west and east of her from the use of her system of internal improvements for the purpose of commerce among the several States. She might, and I think would, have the power to do so; but that, at the same time, would not leave the difficulty without a remedy. Congress, under its power to regulate commerce among the several States, would have the right to go into the State of New Jersey, or the State of Pennsylvania, or any other State, and construct works of internal improvement necessary to facilitate and to continue the commerce among the different States of the United States.

I think that gentlemen confound the matter. Here is a separate concurrent power on the part of the State of New Jersey and on the part of Congress. New Jersey has the right and the power to establish her own system of internal improvements. She has the right to construct her canals and her railroads. Those canals and railroads may be useful, and may facilitate the commerce between the West and the States east of New Jersey; but because they may be appropriate to such purposes that does not vest Congress with the power, nor has Congress the authority under the power to regulate commerce among the several States, to enter into the State of New Jersey and take possession of and regulate, according to the will and the legislation of Congress, the whole system of internal improvements of the State of New Jersey.

If New Jersey will persist in throwing unreasonable obstructions in the way of the trade of the States east and west of her, the appropriate and constitutional remedy which Congress may employ is to itself establish and construct works of internal improvement across the territory of New Jersey or any other State, that will not only regulate, but facilitate, promote, and stimulate trade among the different States of the United States. If the present condition of things was such that New Jersey was offering obstacles to the trade between the West and New York, so far as that trade was to pass over her territory, she may do so to the extent of imposing her own rates of toll and making her own regulations upon her canals and upon her railroads. But because she exercises her power to that extent that does not authorize Congress to enter into her territory and take possession of those canals and those railroads and establish different tolls and different regulations upon them from what New Jersey by her own authority has established. If, however, the obstruction is so great as to require the exercise of the authority of Congress under its power to regulate commerce among the several States, the only way in which Congress can exercise that power legitimately is by establishing its own lines of communication, either in the form of railroads or canals, or some other form, by which to regulate and facilitate commerce among the several States.

But, sir, I utterly deny that the original purpose of this bill is constitutional or comes within the legitimate and constitutional power of Congress. The power vested in Congress by the Constitution to regulate commerce among the several States is not a power that will absorb the power of a single State to establish its own system of internal improvements. Such a power on the part of Congress to regulate commerce will not authorize Congress to interfere, in my construction of the Constitution, with the internal system of improvements of any particular State whatever. With this view of the power of Congress on this subject, I think the bill, with the purpose of taking possession of the works of internal improvement of that State, or of any other State, establishing rates of toll and the transfer of freight upon them, or making regulations to exclude the power of the State over its own internal system of improvements, is altogether an unauthorized power when it is claimed for Congress; and that, if Congress is desired to act upon the subject at all, to act legitimately and within the pale of the Constitution, it must act in the form of opening up new works of internal improvement, constructed under its own authority.

I recollect that this question came up thirty years ago in the politics of that day. The State of Kentucky had a large trade to the State of South Carolina. It had to pass that trade over the territory of Tennessee; and in the conflicts of politics between the North and the South, and between the West and the South, it was threatened that the roads and channels of communication for that trade over Tennessee would be closed to Kentucky and to Kentucky traders. It might have been legitimate for the State of Tennessee to close those roads and channels of trade within her own territory; but whenever the State of Tennessee had proceeded to the exercise of that power, then the power of Congress, under the clause regulating commerce among the several States, would have authorized Congress to open new roads and new channels of commerce over the territory of the State of Tennessee for the purpose of regulating trade between Kentucky and other western States and the southern States.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time. It was read the third time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Believing that it is not in the power of Congress to enact it, I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I propose to vote against this bill, and I wish to state a simple reason why I shall do so. I concur generally, and almost particularly, with the remarks made by the honorable Senator from Kentucky. I cannot see any reason why, if a State undertakes an enterprise which of itself facilitates commerce and adds a new avenue for it, creates that which did not before exist, and imposes certain conditions, which conditions in themselves may be somewhat burdensome, it having thus created a new avenue, that very fact, when it becomes an avenue of commerce, places the whole thing under the control of the Government of the United States, to regulate, restrict, or destroy it in any way that it sees fit; because the power goes to the whole extent if it applies at all. The State of New Jersey and the State of Maryland, with reference to these charters, have put in a very selfish and odious condition, one that they ought to be ashamed of and ought to abandon, in my judgment; but by the very fact of authorizing these railroads and building them, they created valuable property and increased the facilities of commerce in the country. It belongs to them; it is within their own limits; and because it thus becomes an avenue of commerce, I cannot see how that gives all power over it to the Government of the United States any more than if they made a turnpike, any more than if they established a line of coaches to be used for the transfer of passengers and the carrying of packages, &c., in any way. I have been unable to come to the conclusion that we had any constitutional power to meddle with that which belongs to the State exclusively, and which it alone had a right to control. That is the simple reason upon which I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think the honorable member, without meaning it, has disparaged the State of Maryland. The charter of her great road, which has inured so much to the benefit of the whole country, was granted at a time when the railroad system was hardly known. The charter upon the Washington road was granted soon after. It was very much opposed by those who were interested in the turnpike between the city of Baltimore and Washington. They went to the extent of supposing that the charter interfered with rights secured by what they imagined to be a contract between the State and themselves, protected by that clause of the Constitution of the United States which prohibits a State from impairing the obligation of contracts. It has never been denied, as far as my impression extends, that the States having authority to grant charters may exact a bonus. I suppose in Maine charters of that description have been granted upon the condition that the company would pay to the State something in the way of a bonus.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Never, under any circumstances.

Mr. JOHNSON. It has been done in nearly all the States.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not in the New England States. We do not levy a tax on people living out of the State.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am about to speak of that. Instead of exacting a sum in gross to be paid by these companies to the State as a compensation for the franchise, Maryland has provided that a certain proportion of the fare upon the passengers should inure to the benefit of the State; I think it is one fifth. They might, if they had thought proper, have exacted a sum in gross, which would have been equivalent, if the company had been able to pay it, to an annuity such as they receive by the tax of one fifth of the fares. But the company at that time had no means whatever to meet such a bonus; and it is to be recollected, too, that the State at that period was very much involved. Her credit had been very much impaired about that time, and it was incumbent on her to provide all the means that she could to meet her embarrassments and to place her credit in the condition in which it has almost ever since been. She resorted to a stamp act, being, I believe, the first if not the only State in the Union that has resorted to that tax, with a view to meet her engagements, and it answered the purpose.

Now, as she might have authorized—nobody, I suppose, will doubt that—the company to charge any amount of toll that they might think proper to charge, why is it that she has not a right, without subjecting herself to the supposition of interfering unnecessarily with the rights of the citizens of other States, to provide that she should, out of the tolls, be entitled to a certain percentage of those tolls in the way of compensation for the franchise? The franchise, it was supposed at the time these charters were granted, would be very valuable. I think the charter to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad was granted in 1836. The provision was that two dollars should be paid up on each share on subscribing, running it up to some six or seven or ten dollars; but it turned out to be a very unfortunate investment to the original stockholders. Every man of them who was not able to bear the loss, and who had any number of shares, lost almost everything he was worth, and it has not been until a comparatively recent period that the work has been a prosperous one. During the whole administration which preceded the existing administration of the road the stock was very low, and no dividends were declared. The State now is receiving, as a stockholder, her share of the dividends upon the amount of stock she holds; I think it is about half a million of dollars—I am not sure that I am right as to the amount—and she receives upon the passenger travel on the road from here to Baltimore one fifth of the amount which she authorized the company to charge. But she might have authorized the company to charge the entire sum which they now charge without exacting anything, and that would not have operated more prejudicially to the people of the other States than the provision by which she secures to herself a portion of those charges.

I concur with the honorable member from Maine in thinking that, looking to the relative condition in which the States stand toward each other, and, more especially, looking to the relation in which we individually stand to each other as citizens of a common country, so far from throwing in the way any impediment to intercourse, the best thing the States can do, if they are able to maintain themselves and at the same time do it, is to open all the avenues at once; but if they cannot do that, without securing some compensation for themselves, then it would seem to be better that we should have even that mode of intercourse than have no mode of intercourse.

I merely rose because I was apprehensive that what fell from the honorable member from Maine might be considered as justifying the inference that Maryland had done something that she ought to be ashamed of; and I think the honorable member used the word "ashamed." She is not in the habit of being ashamed of anything she has done. Her people may do wrong, and they may, in this instance, have acted, perhaps, erroneously; but that I doubt. I do not think she did, in the beginning; but, acting from a conviction that what she did she had a right to do, and, perhaps, continuing in that impression up to the present time, even the authority of my friend from Maine will not be sufficient to make her ashamed of the condition in which she stands now in relation to her sister States, and of the relative condition in which her citizens stand to all the citizens of the country, and, among others, to the citizens of the State of Maine. I think the citizens of that State, perhaps, do not pay a greater rate in traveling over the route from here to Baltimore than they pay at home. I do not know what is the limitation upon their charges. They have a limitation, of course. The charge here is three or four cents a mile, I believe—I forget the exact amount.

Mr. SHERMAN. About four cents; the fare to Baltimore is $1 50.

Mr. JOHNSON. It used to be $2 50.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a larger proportion than is charged in New England.

Mr. JOHNSON. But the honorable member forgets that Maryland was a slave State.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not forget that.

Mr. JOHNSON. He would seem to forget it, practically. If Maryland had been, as Maine has been from the first, a free State, she would have had a population now as numerous and as enterprising as is the population of the State of Maine.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How many Representatives have you?

Mr. JOHNSON. We have five now, counting three fifths of the negroes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is all we have.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know that; but you have not our negroes. The honorable member says that is all they have; but we ought to have more. He is in a very inhospitable part of the country. As far as climate is concerned, and as far as the wealth of the soil is concerned, I do not think his State altogether equal to the State of Maryland, to say nothing of our fine oysters and soft crabs, and last, but by no means least, terrapins and canvas-back ducks. [Laughter.] I think the honorable member from Maine, with all his attachment to his native State, just at this season of the year particularly, would like to spend two or three weeks in a portion of Maryland where he could get delicacies which are not to be found in the State of Maine. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIMES. They have cod-fish there.

Mr. JOHNSON. Cod-fish! That is enough to kill any stomach, and I do not think my friend deals much in that line. [Laughter.] They have everything that is wholesome—that is manifested in the appearance of her sons; and everything that makes gallant men—that has been exhibited in this war both upon the sea and upon the land; but give us fair play—and now we have it—and my friend from Maine will soon see, no matter what may be the rate of apportionment, that the Representatives of Maryland will outnumber the Representatives of the State of Maine.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I only wish to say to my friend that I had no idea by the simple remark that I made of bringing out such a course of observations as he has made all in very good nature. I concede that if everything else in Maryland were to be on the same level with her soft crabs and terrapins, I should think much better of the State, perhaps, than I do now. [Laughter.] But I did not mean to say anything in any way derogatory to that State; nor do I of any State in the Union. Maryland has very much to be proud of, and I hope she will have very much more to be proud of, and I think she will in the future. But, sir, with regard to this individual thing, I merely expressed my opinion that the act was a selfish one. It is levying contributions on the people of other States, wherever it is undertaken. It is what I call a mean thing; and if the State of Maryland is not ashamed of it, I repeat, I think she ought to be. That is only my opinion. I hope she will by and by, on reflection, become satisfied that it is not exactly the thing to do. But I do not think we have a right to meddle with it.

Mr. CRESWELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine whether in granting these acts of incorporation in the State of Maine, the State reserves the right to tax the companies and their business.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; we tax nothing but the shares. We tax railroad stock like any other property, and we tax the real estate held by the railroad company; that is to say, the buildings, &c., according to my recollection; but we do not tax the charter; we do not charge anything for the charter; we do not ask any bonus, or anything of the kind. We are glad enough to get men to build railroads there if anybody will undertake them. They are not very profitable. We tax the property of railroads precisely as we do any other property. For instance, if a railroad owns real estate it is taxed like any other real estate. If individuals own stock in a railroad company it is taxed like the stock of any other company, according to its value. I do not know of any other taxes imposed upon them.

Mr. CRESWELL. I supposed that was the case. I desire to add to what my colleague has said with reference to the disposition manifested by Maryland, that she has done a little more than merely grant privileges to persons who were willing to construct these roads. The State of Maryland herself has invested nearly thirty-six million dollars in the construction of these works of public improvement, and of that sum she has lost absolutely over twenty-seven million dollars. She has imposed no restrictions in the way of taxation upon the great line of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, which has now invested within her limits some twenty million dollars, save the imposition of one fifth of the receipts from passengers between the city of Baltimore and the city of Washington. In the normal condition of affairs that yields her the sum of from seventy-five to ninety thousand dollars a year, which is less than her usual rate of taxation would amount to by two thirds.

Mr. GRIMES. She does not tax the property of the company.

Mr. CRESWELL. She does not tax the property of the railroad company in any way except by the imposition of this one fifth of the fare between Baltimore and Washington. Not only that, but the State of Maryland has shown a disposition to abandon even that as rapidly as her financial interests will permit. She has pocketed, passed to profit and loss, the loss upon her internal improvements, of $27,000,000, and has already granted a charter to a road in competition with this very line of road, from Washington city to the Point of Rocks, upon which she has reserved no such tribute. All the travel of the western States, when this new line of road is constructed, which is now under construction, will pass from Washington to the western States without any such reservation of any portion of the fare.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then that shows that the State of Maryland is ashamed of it.

Mr. CRESWELL. Not at all. It only shows that the State of Maryland is willing to do even more than she has heretofore been able to do, with a view to promote travel and commerce between the States. She is not ashamed of it. She has a perfect right in lieu of all taxation to exact some such compensation as this.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Exactly. I do not feel inclined to go into this controversy, and if Senators do not like this expression I made use of I will take it back. Of course I do not want to say anything derogatory of any State; but with regard to that individual act, I think it was without consideration and unjustifiable. The Senator says they impose no taxes upon their roads. My objection is that they make up what they give to their own citizens or persons interested in that road by levying contributions upon the people of other States for going through their territory.

Mr. CRESWELL. The contribution is levied on all passengers, as well those of the State of Maryland as those of any other State, and on passengers from Baltimore city, a point within the State of Maryland, to the city of Washington, which is also within the old jurisdiction of the State.

Now, sir, I have only to add that if gentlemen understood what efforts the State of Maryland has made to maintain herself in the different contracts she has voluntarily made for the purpose of constructing these works of internal improvement, I do not think we should ever hear these expressions of "ashamed," &c., bandied about the Senate. No State in the Union has voluntarily submitted to greater burdens than has the State of Maryland. For twenty years and more, ever since these great works of internal improvement were started in the State, our people have literally groaned under a weight of taxation which to them has been almost insupportable. The question of repudiation was raised there once, but our people scorned it, and we submitted to taxation in every shape. In 1845 a committee was appointed of the ablest financiers of the State, who grasped at every means of raising money by taxation upon our people, and we have submitted to it. We have fortunately been able, by submitting to these extraordinary charges and burdens, to extricate ourselves from our troubles, and the State of Maryland does not owe one dollar to-day for any public work to which she does not respond regularly in the payment of the interest. I only say this in justice to my State.

Mr. SHERMAN. The friends of this bill still think that the provisions in it will be useful for the purpose declared in the preamble of the bill, and I therefore, in pursuance of my declarations, will vote for it; but I must confess that in my opinion the principle upon which the bill is founded will meet with difficulty the moment the bill comes before the courts. As a general principle, I do not think it is within the power of the Government of the United States to confer upon any corporation, the mere creature of a State, any power not granted by the act of incorporation. The very moment the United States undertakes to extend power to any corporation created by a State that is inconsistent with the act of incorporation, the act itself becomes void. It is a well-known principle of municipal law that no corporation can exercise a power not conferred upon it by its creator. It is simply a creature of law, and any attempt by a power outside of the State which created the corporation to confer upon it additional powers will only defeat itself. No corporation can exercise any power that is not conferred upon it by the State which creates it or by the power that creates it. That is a principle of law that I believe any corporation now existing attempting to exercise or do anything under this law that they cannot do under their charter will meet at the very outset. Still, as Senators think that it may have some good effect, I shall vote for the bill.

I desire also to say a word on account of an expression I dropped the other day in the Senate in regard to the State of Maryland. I am satisfied that the Baltimore and Ohio road is not subject to the criticism I made here the other day, that it attempted to use its power to prevent communication between Washington and the West, because since I made that statement I have had information furnished me on the subject, and am entirely satisfied that the Baltimore and Ohio road are now doing all they can, in connection with an existing corporation in the State of Pennsylvania, to open up new channels of communication from Pittsburgh to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. If the State of Maryland will go one step further and authorize the construction of a railroad from Washington directly toward New York, and also authorize the construction of a railroad from Harper's Ferry, or from Martinsburg, across the State of Maryland in that region of country, I think it will do all that any State could reasonably demand of it.

Mr. CRESWELL. To what point does the gentleman desire a road?

Mr. SHERMAN. From here to the Point of Rocks.

Mr. CRESWELL. That has been already authorized.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said that I wished to withdraw a remark that I made in reference to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

Mr. CRESWELL. And now the gentleman speaks of a road from Martinsburg to some other point.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator was not listening to what I said when I rose, and therefore I will repeat that I withdraw a remark I made in reference to the Baltimore and Ohio road the other day, and I believe that road is endeavoring to facilitate communication to the points I desire most to accomplish; that is, to make a line of road from its road to Pittsburgh. If the State of Maryland will go one step further and authorize the construction of a railroad, so far as it can, across the State of Maryland, from this point toward Philadelphia, and open up a new line of communication in competition with one of her existing lines, I think she will have done all that any of the States could demand of her.

The State of Pennsylvania, a great, powerful, and wealthy community, has stood more in the way of the railroad system than probably any other State, with perhaps the exception of New Jersey. We in the West are not affected so much by what is called the New Jersey monopoly as we are by the policy of the State of Pennsylvania. Those who travel from here to the New England States, passing through New Jersey, are constantly affected by it and constantly complain of a single road in New Jersey which has a monopoly of all the railroad travel. The complaint that has been made with us has been that the State of Pennsylvania has concentrated in a single corporation all the powers conferred by their law upon any railroad. The Senator from Pennsylvania says that Pennsylvania is a very prudent State and will not charter new companies until they are shown to be profitable. I can only say that if the State of Pennsylvania will allow other communities and other people to build railroads in that State where they think they will be profitable, they taking all the risk, there will be no further complaint made of that State. But until then, as long as she confers upon one corporation all the powers she grants to any railroad, there will be continual complaints; and when she endeavors to compress into one single channel of communication all the vast commerce of the West there will be continual complaint.

Mr. COWAN. I do not wish to make any extended remarks in reply to the honorable Senator in his strictures upon Pennsylvania; but I expect, toward the latter part of the week, or perhaps the beginning of next week, when the affairs of Sir Morton Peto & Co. are wound up, the honorable gentleman will be better informed; and I have no doubt he will take it all back, as he has done in the case of Maryland.

Mr. SHERMAN. In reply to the allusion to Sir Morton Peto, I will say that there was another remarkable case where one of its own corporations and other persons connected with an important railroad, the Atlantic and Great Western railroad, were prevented by the State of Pennsylvania from expending perhaps twenty million dollars in that State in the construction of a new line of railroad. The companies had actually been organized for the purpose of constructing a new line of communication along the northern border of the State of Pennsylvania, in which several of the existing corporations of Pennsylvania were largely interested, and the State of Pennsylvania refused to allow the necessary corporate franchises and privileges to construct that road, and through the agency of their courts they defeated the efforts of existing corporations to do it. I am happy to say in regard to Sir Morton Peto, who is a gentleman certainly of very remarkable enterprise and ability, that he has already recovered from his troubles; and I hope that yet, if the State of Pennsylvania will not stand in the way, he will aid the people of this country in constructing a new line of communication connecting the Atlantic and Great Western railroad with the city of New York.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, resulted—yeas 22, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cragin, Edmunds, Grimes, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Morrill, Norton, Riddle, Sausbury, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Dixon, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nesmith, Sprague, Wright, and Yates—8. So the bill was passed.

PRINTING OF A BILL.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five thousand copies of the report of the Committee on Mines, explaining certain proposed amendments to Senate bill 257, together with a like number of copies of said bill, with proposed amendments, recommended by the committee, be printed for the use of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed an enrolled bill (S. No. 237) granting a pension to Mrs. Martha Stevens; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

LUMBERING ON THE ST. CROIX RIVER.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senate to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 208. It is a short bill, and will take but a moment.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 208) to protect American citizens engaged in lumbering on the St. Croix river, in the State of Maine. It provides that the produce of the forests of the State of Maine upon the St. Croix river and its tributaries, owned by American citizens, and sawed in the Province of New Brunswick by American citizens, (the same being unmanufactured in whole or in part,) shall be admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time prescribe.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the bill in section one, line seven, by inserting after the words "the same being unmanufactured in whole or in part" the words "and having paid the same taxes as other American lumber on that river."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 29, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

PENSION BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were taken up from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

An act (S. No. 261) for the relief of Mrs. Anna G. Gaston;

An act (S. No. 275) for the relief of Cornelius Crowley;

An act (S. No. 291) granting a pension to Mrs. Rebecca Irwin;

An act (S. No. 298) granting a pension to Jane D. Brent;

An act (S. No. 299) granting a pension to Jane E. Miles;

An act (S. No. 314) for the relief of Sarah J. Purcell;

An act (S. No. 326) granting a pension to Harriet B. Crocker;

An act (S. No. 327) granting a pension to Mrs. Katharine F. Winslow;

An act (S. No. 329) for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Kaetzel;

An act (S. No. 328) for the relief of Abigail Ryan; and

An act (S. No. 339) granting a pension to Benjamin Franklin.

CIRCUIT COURT IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER stated as the first business in order the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, being Senate bill No. 184, to define more clearly the jurisdiction and powers of the circuit court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to move to amend this bill by striking out the first four sections, and I will state to the House the reason for that motion. Those sections are merely a reenactment of the existing law, except in one particular; that is, providing that appeals from justices shall be heard by the court in banc. The inserting that provision was manifestly an error on the part of the Senate.

The amendment was to strike out the following:

That the justices of said court shall hold a common-law court, an equity court, an admiralty and maritime court, and a criminal court for said District.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That said justices shall hold sessions in banc at such times as they shall designate in their minutes; and at said sessions they shall have power, and it shall be their duty to allot said courts among themselves as they see fit, by orders to be entered of record in their minutes, but so as to assign each of said courts to be held by one justice; to make all appointments assigned to said court by law; to remove officers appointed by it in such manner as may be prescribed by law; to hear and decide all questions of law which may be reserved at the trial of any cause in either of said courts; to hear and decide all such issues of law, demurrers to evidence, questions of law arising on special verdict, or special or agreed case, motions in arrest of judgment, motions for a new trial, or other motions as may be adjourned to the court in banc, by an order on the minutes of the court in which such matter arises; to hear and decide all appeals from the final decisions of either of said courts; to hear and decide all appeals from the orphans' court and from justices of the peace; to fix the times of holding the stated and special sessions or terms of said courts, and cause said times to be entered upon their minutes; to cause jurors to be summoned to serve in the said common-law and criminal courts, whenever jurors are required by the exigency of the business therein; to make all such rules of procedure as they may deem best adapted to a fair and speedy administration of justice in any of said courts, and alter and amend the same at pleasure.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That in the common-law court there shall be monthly sittings for the trial of issues of law, and for taking judgments by default, and all other matters not involving or requiring a trial by jury, which sittings shall commence on the first Tuesday of every month, except during the stated terms or the recesses of the court. And for the trial of issues of fact there shall be at least three terms every year, at times fixed by the justices at their sessions in banc to be entered in their minutes.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the equity court and the admiralty and maritime court shall be deemed always open for filing libels, bills, petitions, answers, pleas, and other pleadings; for issuing and returning all process and commissions; for making and directing all interlocutory motions, orders, rules, and other proceedings whatever, preparatory to the hearing of all causes therein; and also for the trial and final decision of causes, in case the parties consent to such trial, or the time of preparation has elapsed, and the cause has been set, and has stood for trial ten days.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted,

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the remainder of the bill. The first section provides that writs of attachment and garnishments shall be issued by the clerk of the supreme court of the District, without any authority or warrant from any judge or justice, whenever the plaintiff, his agent or attorney, shall file in the clerk's office, whether at the commencement or during the pendency of the suit, an affidavit, supported by the testimony of one or more witnesses showing the grounds upon which he bases his affidavit, and also setting forth that the plaintiff has a just right to recover against the defendant what he claims in the declaration, and also stating either, first, that the defendant is a non-resident of the District; or, second, that the defendant evades the service of ordinary process by concealing himself or by withdrawing from the District temporarily; or, third, that he has removed or is about to remove some of his property from the District so as to defeat just demands against him; and shall also file his (the plaintiff's) undertaking, with sufficient surety or sureties, to make good all costs and damages which the defendant may sustain by reason of the wrongful suing out of the attachment; provided, however, that if the defendant, his agent or attorney, shall file an affidavit traversing the said affidavit, the court shall determine whether the facts set forth in said plaintiff's affidavit are true, and that there was just ground for issuing said writ or warrant of attachment; and if the court shall deem the facts do not sustain the affidavit, he shall quash the writ of attachment or garnishment; and this issue may be tried by a judge at chambers on three days' notice. And the thing attached shall not be discharged from the custody of the officer seizing it until the defendant shall deliver, either to the officer or to the clerk, to be filed in the cause, his undertaking, with sufficient surety or sureties, to satisfy and pay the final judgment of the court against him; and in case the defendant be found liable to the plaintiff's claim, in whole or in part, the final judgment shall be that the plaintiff recover against the defendant and his surety or sureties; and if the defendant fail to execute such undertaking the court may sell the thing attached whenever it is satisfied that it is the interest of the parties that it should be sold before final judgment.

The next section provides that from and after the passage of this act the annual salaries of the chief justice and associate justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, instead of the amount now fixed by law, shall be as follows: for the chief justice $4,500, and for each of the associate justices $4,000.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I will simply state, for the benefit of the House, that the Committee on the Judiciary have given this bill a very careful consideration and recommend its passage as amended, believing it to be a just and proper bill. Unless there are some special objections to it which members desire to state, I do not propose to discuss it, but will call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANNA E. WARD

Mr. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back House bill No. 459, granting a pension to Anna E. Ward, with the amendment of the Senate, in which the committee recommend a non-concurrence.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "month" the words "to commence from and after the passage of this act, and to continue.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Claims, made adverse reports on the petitions of Thomas S. Pinger, Thomas Hunt, and John H. Schowler; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. MARTHA STEVENS.

Mr. STILWELL. I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report back Senate bill No. 237, granting a pension to Mrs. Martha Stevens, with an amendment. The amendment is to strike out "twenty dollars" and insert "seventeen dollars," being the amount allowed for a first lieutenant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then read the third time and passed.

Mr. STILWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Appropriations House bill No. 37, making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending 30th June, 1867, with the amendments of the Senate to the same.

First amendment:

Strike out "one" and insert "two" in line fifteen, page 1, so that it will read:

For increase and expense of library, $2,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment:

Strike out on page 2, line twelve, the words "fifteen hundred" and insert "ten thousand;" so that it will read:

For repairs of officers' quarters, $10,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Third amendment:

Insert on page 2, after line seven, the following: For reflooring Academy buildings and barracks, $5,000.

For the purchase of fuel for warming mess hall, shoemaker's and tailor shops, $2,000.

For materials for quarters for subaltern officers, $3,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

Strike out on page 2, after the word "dollars," in line twenty-seven, the following:

Provided, That no part of the sums appropriated by the provisions of this act shall be expended in violation of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office and for other purposes," approved July 2, 1862.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was non-concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

Add the following new section:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That no person who has served in any capacity in the military or naval service of the so-called confederate States during the late rebellion shall hereafter receive an appointment as cadet at the Military or Naval Academy.

The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the House request a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back bill of the House No. 255, making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repair of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1867, with the amendment of the Senate thereto, with the recommendation that the amendment of the Senate be non-concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Page 1, after line seventeen, insert as follows: For Fort Popham, Kennebec river, Maine, $50,000.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the House request a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

CLAIM OF GALES AND SEATON.

Mr. STEVENS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Claims be instructed to inquire whether anything, and if so, how much, is due to Gales & Seaton for books said to be contracted for, and report by bill or otherwise.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANK ACT.

On motion of Mr. DEFRIES, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Banking and Currency was discharged from the further consideration of the resolution of the House of the 25th of January last in regard to an amendment of the national bank act, and the same was laid upon the table.

HIRAM PAULDING.

Mr. DODGE, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back bill of the House No. 457, for the relief of Hiram Paulding, rear admiral United States Navy; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM G. LEE.

Mr. McKEE, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee of Claims a bill for the relief of William G. Lee; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROLLINS. I demand the regular order of business.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour having commenced, the House resumes the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Freedmen's Affairs (H. R. No. 613) to continue in force and to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees," and for other purposes.

Mr. ELIOT. I rise for the purpose of calling the previous question on the pending amendments and the bill. I suppose the House is prepared to act upon them, and I ask the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. NIBLACK demanded tellers on ordering the main question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. NIBLACK and ELIOT were appointed.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes sixty-six, noes not counted.

So the main question was ordered.

Mr. CHANLER. Is it in order to move to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. CHANLER. Then I make that motion, and demand the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 23, nays 93, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Chanler, Dawson, Eldridge, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Edwin N. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Kuykendall, Le Blond, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taylor, and Trimble—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Blaine, Bromwell, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Defries, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, James Humphrey, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Latham, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, Raymond, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Seefeld, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spaulding, Starr, Stevens, Thayer, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—93.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Banks, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Delano, Denison, Driggs, Farnsworth, Finck, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hayes, Hill, Hogan, Hotchkiss, Asabel W. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Marshall, Marvin, McIndoe, Miller, Moulton, Newell, Neill, Patterson, Phelps, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Smith, Stilwell, Taber, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Windom, Winfield, and Wright—67.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The first amendment is one offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS,] to add a clause at the end of the second section and to strike out all the remaining sections of the bill; but the other amendments, being to perfect the parts sought to be stricken out, will be voted upon first. The first in order is the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD.]

The amendment of Mr. SCOFIELD was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "then" in section seven, line nine, as follows: "and shall provide sites and buildings for purposes of education whenever such associations shall, without cost to the Government, provide suitable teachers and means of instruction, and he shall furnish such protection as may be required for the safe conduct of such schools. And said property shall be and remain the property of the United States until sales thereof shall be authorized by law;" and insert in lieu of the words stricken out the words "and afford them all proper protection;" so that the section will read as follows:

Whereas we recognize the necessity and duty resting upon the Government, and resulting from the condition of freedom, of aiding freedmen to receive that needful education which oppressive prejudices, laws, and customs denied them when held in slavery: Therefore,

Be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of this bureau shall at all times cooperate with private benevolent associations of citizens in aid of freedmen, and with agents and teachers, duly accredited and appointed by them, and afford them all proper protection.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I propose to modify my amendment by inserting instead of the words "and afford them all proper protection" the following:

And shall hire or provide by lease buildings for purposes of education whenever such association shall, without cost to the Government, provide suitable teachers and means of instruction, and he shall furnish such protection as may be required for the safe conduct of such schools.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, is it in order for the gentleman to modify his amendment after the previous question has been seconded?

The SPEAKER. The amendment cannot be modified, except by unanimous consent, after the previous question has been seconded.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object to the modification.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Oh, let this come in.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. You call the previous question on us, and then ask me to let this come in. I insist on my objection.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SCOFIELD, it was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done after the House has commenced executing it. It is stated on page 143 of the Digest that "it is not in order to move a reconsideration of the vote on ordering the main question when it is partly executed."

The question recurred upon the amendment offered by Mr. SHELLABARGER, which was read as follows:

Add at the end of section six the following:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect the right of any person to recover in the proper courts any title or right of possession which such person may have in any of the lands held under said field order.

So that the section will read:

That whenever the former owners of lands occupied under General Sherman's field order, dated at Savannah, January 16, 1865, shall apply for restoration of said lands, the Commissioner shall refuse the surrender of the same: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect the right of any person to recover in the proper courts any title or right of possession which such person may have in any of the lands held under said field order.

Mr. ELIOT. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. DAVIS, which was read, as follows:

At the end of section two add the following:

And the powers conferred and the duties enjoined by the act hereby amended shall be applicable to all persons named or referred to in this section; and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

So that the section will read:

That the supervision and care of said bureau shall extend to all loyal refugees and freedmen, so far as the same shall be necessary to enable them as speedily as practicable to become self-supporting citizens of the United States, and to aid them in making the freedom conferred by proclamation of the Commander-in-Chief, by emancipation under the laws of States, and by constitutional amendment, available to them and beneficial to the Republic. And the powers conferred and the duties enjoined by the act hereby amended, shall be applicable to all persons named or referred to in this section; and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Strike out all the remaining sections of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I call for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 85, nays 86, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Bergen, Chanler, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Eldridge, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Kuykendall, Latham, Le Blond, Marvin, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Ross, Sitgreaves, Stilwell, Strouse, Taylor, Trimble, Henry D. Washburn, and Whaley—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Blaine, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Deftrees, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jenekes, Julian, Kelley, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, McClurg, McKee, McRuer, Mereur, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—96.

Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, William B. Washburn, Welker, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—86.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Dawes, Delano, Denison, Driggs, Farnsworth, Finck, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hayes, Hill, Hotchkiss, Hulburd, James Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Laffin, Marshall, Marston, McIndoe, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Newell, Neill, Phelps, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Smith, Taber, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Windom, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—62.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the vote,

Mr. NIBLACK stated that his colleague, Mr. KERR, was detained from the House by illness.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, stated that Messrs. WINDOM, CONKLING, and HOTCHKISS were absent, by order of the House, taking testimony.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and demand the previous question. I do it in order to give the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] an opportunity to offer his amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SCOFIELD moved to strike out all after the word "them" in the ninth line, section seven, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

And shall hire or provide by lease buildings for purposes of education whenever such association shall, without cost to the Government, provide suitable teachers and means of instruction, and he shall furnish such protection as may be required for the safe conduct of such schools.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would inquire whether the Government is to buy the school-houses for the schools.

Mr. SCOFIELD. The amendment provides that, instead of buying sites and erecting buildings, they may temporarily hire buildings to be occupied by teachers to be furnished by private benevolent associations.

Mr. LE BLOND. Does not the amendment contemplate that sites are to be purchased by the Government?

Mr. ELIOT. No, sir; just the opposite.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ELIOT demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 96, nays 32, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Blaine, Bromwell, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Dawes, Deftrees, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jenekes, Julian, Kelley, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, McKee, McRuer, Mereur, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—96.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Chanler, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Eldridge, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Ross, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taylor, Trimble, and Wright—32.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Delano, Denison, Driggs, Farnsworth, Finck, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hayes, Hill, Hotchkiss, Hulburd, James Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Laffin, McIndoe, Miller, Moulton, Newell, Neill, Phelps, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Smith, Spalding, Taber, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Windom, and Winfield—55.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 342) for the relief of Ira B. Curtis, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

APPOINTMENTS TO MILITARY ACADEMY.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, joint resolution of the Senate No. 136, relative to appointments to the Military Academy of the United States, was taken up from the Speaker's table, the amendments of the Senate non-concurred in, and a committee of conference asked.

RAILROAD IN MISSOURI AND ARKANSAS.

On motion of Mr. CULLOM, by unanimous consent, Senate bill No. 223, to revive and extend the provisions of an act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point upon the Mississippi opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi river, approved February 9, 1853, and for other purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

JOHN A. COAN.

On motion of Mr. McKEE, by unanimous consent, the papers in the case of John A. Coan were withdrawn from the files of the Committee of Claims, copies of the same being left.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour having expired, the first business in order is House bill No. 543, which was made the special order for this day after the morning hour, being a bill to restore to the States lately in insurrection their full political rights.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Unless the members of this Congress who represent the loyal people of this country approach the proposition before us, providing for the restoration of the late rebel States, in a proper spirit and with mutual concessions, I fear we shall fail to accomplish the great work committed to our hands. I desire to approach its consideration with charity for all and malice toward none. I know that I approach it in a forgiving spirit and with a thankful heart. With thankfulness, because the din of war has been hushed and the national conflagration extinguished. In a forgiving spirit, because I know how much there is to be forgiven if we would reunite dissevered and broken ties, secure the perpetual unity of the nation, and bind up its millions of bleeding and broken hearts.

In all the votes which I have given or may give on the propositions for reconstruction, in all I have said or may say, I shall keep steadily in view the one great desire of my heart, which outweighs and overshadows all others, and before which the petty schemes of parties and of men dwindle into insignificance and appear to me criminal. That desire is to see the States recently in rebellion restored to all the rights, privileges and dignities of States of the American Union at the earliest day consistent with the national safety, and upon such terms as shall secure the power, unity, and glory of the Republic.

How can this most desirable result best be accomplished? In answering this interrogatory the first question which presents itself to every reflecting mind is this: has the Government of the United States as at present organized the constitutional power to demand or exact from the people in the late rebel States any conditions prior to the recognition of their recently reorganized State governments and the admission of their Senators and Representatives in Congress? If so, is it expedient to exact of them the terms or conditions proposed by the committee of fifteen, or such conditions of a like character as may finally be agreed upon by the two Houses of Congress, as conditions precedent to their resumption, as States, of all constitutional relations to the national Government which were severed by their acts of rebellion and war?

I claim that we have the power, and that it is not only our right but our duty to demand such conditions as the majority of the loyal representatives of this Congress may deem requisite for the safety and security of the nation. I believe we have the constitutional power, because I believe the States represented in this Hall during the war and now are the Government. If I did not believe this I could not vote for any of the propositions before the House or any proposition of a like character.

From the first I have held that when the people of the late rebel States abolished their constitutional State governments and confederated together in violation of the national Constitution and organized hostile State governments and a national confederate government, and maintained those governments by force of arms until the rebellion became so formidable as to claim the prerogatives of a national de facto government, and to have conceded to it by the United States and the great Powers of Europe belligerent rights, that from that hour constitutional State governments ceased in each of the States so confederated together, and until governments are reorganized in each of them in subordination to the national Constitution, and recognized by this Congress, there can be no constitutional State governments in such States.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him who he intends shall form the State governments—the people of the States, or who?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I propose that the loyal people of these States shall reorganize these State governments and administer their governments under such rules and restrictions as the Congress of the United States, representing the people of the loyal States, shall require.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Then I understand the gentleman to say that he is willing that the loyal people shall form State governments, or shall continue their State governments and protect and elect Congressmen as part of their duty. Do I understand him aright?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Under such rules and restrictions as this Congress shall require.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. That is an after-clap.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope I can go on without any more of these interruptions. From the outbreak of the rebellion I have sought to have all the Departments of the Government adopt and act upon this idea. I have held that the sovereignty of the nation was in the people who reside in the States which maintained constitutional State governments, recognizing the national Constitution as the supreme law of the land, and the Government which it created as the one to which all citizens owed a paramount allegiance. I have held that the sovereignty of the nation could not be impaired or destroyed within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States by the action, or the refusal to act, of any one or more States. In other words, that the people in the States which maintained their constitutional relations to the national Government were the only depositaries of the national sovereignty and the only constitutional governing power in the nation.

Holding these views, I insist that the people who maintained constitutional State governments, who, during the entire war, were represented here, and who are now represented here, the people who maintained this national Government and put down the rebellion, have a right under the laws of war as conquerors to prescribe such conditions as in the judgment of the majority of this Congress are necessary for the national safety and the national security. This is the right of the conqueror under every law, human and divine. If this be not the true theory, then, indeed, is our national Government a rope of sand.

Entertaining these ideas, at the extra session of Congress in July, 1861, I drew up a bill embodying them, but by the advice of friends I did not present it until the regular session in December. On the 12th of March following, by the direction of the Committee on Territories, I reported to this House "a bill to provide temporary provisional governments for the districts of country in rebellion against the United States." That bill, on the motion of my then colleague, (Mr. Pendleton,) was laid upon the table by a vote of 65 to 56, a number of Republicans voting with the Opposition, and a still larger number not voting at all.

At the first session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress, upon consultation, it was thought best to have a committee on the rebellious States, and the late Henry Winter Davis offered a resolution for the appointment of such a committee. The committee was raised, and he was appointed its chairman.

After the committee was appointed, of which I was a member, I again introduced the old bill, with such modifications and additions as time had suggested. That bill which was reported passed both Houses of Congress, but did not receive the sanction of President Lincoln, and therefore failed to become a law.

At the second session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress I again introduced the same bill with some modifications, and by direction of the committee I reported it to this House. After a number of efforts to modify it so as to secure a majority vote, it was lost, and we were left at sea on this great question of reconstruction. And to-day we are reaping the fruits of our stupidity and folly. I allude to these facts to show how steadily the national mind has been marching up to this idea, that the men who remained loyal to this Government, who maintained constitutional State governments, and who during the war administered this Government are the Government.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHLEY] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I would rather the gentleman would ask me his questions after I get through my argument.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish simply to ask the gentleman to give us his definition of a loyal man.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. If the gentleman will ask me after I get through I will answer his question.

Mr. WRIGHT. Very well; I will ask the gentleman then.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I was saying that I allude to these facts for the purpose of showing how steadily the national mind has been approaching this idea. And when this joint committee on reconstruction, composed of the ablest men in the nation, made their report the other day, they recognized the same idea, to wit, that the constitutional governments in all the rebel States were abolished; that during the war and now they were not in constitutional relations with the national Government. And the man, whoever he may be, who stands up and says they are now in constitutional relations to the national Government utters that which he knows to be untrue. The man who stands up and says that during the entire war the rebel States were entitled to be represented here lays down a proposition which would undermine and sap the very foundations of the Government. If these rebel States had the right to be represented here and had been represented here during this war, this Government would have been bound hand and foot, and we would have been incapable of resistance.

This, then, being the idea adopted by the committee of fifteen, I can support this bill. I know that the proposition submitted by that committee falls far short of what I expected, far short of what the loyal men in the South had a right to expect, far short of what the men who sacrificed so much to preserve this nation had a right to expect. But if I can get nothing better I shall vote for their proposition, as I have already voted for the proposed constitutional amendment which was sent to the Senate the other day. When that proposition was up I desired to offer an amendment to it. But the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] who had charge of the measure had entered a motion to recommend, and would not allow the amendment to be offered. But I now send it to the Clerk's desk, as the amendment I then desired to offer. It may do no good to send it to the Senate now, as I learn since I got on my feet that the amendment which we sent over has received, with an amendment to the third section, the sanction of a majority of the true Union members of that body, and will, undoubtedly, pass that body.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE —.

SEC. 1. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

SEC. 2. No State shall deny the elective franchise to any of its inhabitants, being citizens of the United States, above the age of twenty-one years because of race or color; but suffrage shall be impartial. And on the 4th day of July, A. D. 1876, all citizens of the United States above the age of twenty-one years, not convicted of crime or excluded from the right of the ballot by act of Congress or by the law of any State because of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, shall be electors in each State and Territory of the United States; and on and after the 4th day of July, A. D. 1876, all natural-born citizens of the United States thereafter becoming twenty-one years of age, and all aliens who may thereafter be naturalized and are above the age of twenty-one years and can read and write the English language, shall be qualified to vote for electors of President and Vice President of the United States, for members of the Congress of the United States, and for Governors and members of State Legislatures.

SEC. 3. Representation shall be apportioned among the several States according to the respective number of inhabitants in each.

SEC. 4. No payment shall ever be made by the United States or any State for or on account of the emancipation of any slave or slaves, or for or on account of any debt contracted in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States.

SEC. 5. The Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I do not desire to take up the time of the House in discussing this proposition, as I understand the Senate has practically agreed to sustain the proposition on representation which was sent them from this House a short time since. It will be noticed, that in prescribing the qualifications of electors, I omit the word "male" and use the words "all citizens of the United States above the age of twenty-one years." I did this purposely, as I am unwilling to prohibit any State from enfranchising its women if they desire to do so. The Senate having struck out the third clause and inserted another, this amendment will serve no other purpose than to show what I desired to offer the other day.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment which I desire to offer to this bill—an amendment upon which I shall ask a vote, and to which I desire the attention of the House. House bill No. 543, as reported by the committee, requires the adoption of the constitutional amendment proposed before any State, no matter when it may be ratified, shall be admitted here, thus putting it in the power of the northern States, if they desire to do so, to exclude States which in good faith ratified this constitutional amendment and amended their State constitutions and laws so as to comply with all the conditions we make. I desire, then, to have the bill reported by the committee so amended that whenever any State lately in insurrection and rebellion shall have ratified this amendment in good faith, and shall have modified its constitution and laws in conformity therewith, that its Senators and Representatives shall be admitted into Congress; that is, that the loyal men of Tennessee and Arkansas now elected shall be admitted; but that as to the other States, they shall, before being represented in Congress, after the adoption of this amendment and the modification of their constitution and laws, elect, or reelect, if you will, Governors and all other State officers, members of the Legislature, Senators of the United States, and members of this House.

Why do I ask for this provision? Because these governments, set up by the President of the United States, set up over the heads of loyal men, have every one of them elected traitors to official positions in those States, have elected traitors to this House, have elected traitors to the Senate. I insist that this provision shall be applied to them, so that when their constitutions and their laws are modified in accordance with the proposition which we lay down, the loyal men of those States shall, under the amended Constitution and laws, vote for the officers which are to be recognized by the Government of the United States. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I propose to offer:

The Clerk read as follows:

That whenever any State lately in insurrection shall have ratified, in good faith and irrevocably, the above recited amendment, and shall have modified its constitution and laws in conformity therewith, and after such ratification and modification of its constitution and laws shall have elected a Governor and the State officers provided for in the constitution of such State, including the State Legislature and Senators and Representatives to the Congress of the United States, under such limitations and restrictions as may be imposed by the constitution and laws of such State when amended as herein prescribed, the Senators and Representatives from such State, if thus elected and qualified, may after having taken the oaths of office required by law, be admitted into Congress as such: Provided, That neither the State of Tennessee nor Arkansas shall be required to reelect a Governor and State officers or a State Legislature or Senators or Representatives to the Congress of the United States; but whenever either of said States shall have ratified the above recited amendment, and shall have modified their constitutions and laws in conformity therewith, their Senators and Representatives now duly elected and qualified may be admitted into Congress on taking the oaths of office required by law.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. It will be observed, Mr. Speaker, that, by the adoption of this amendment, every State which adopts in good faith the proposed amendment to the Constitution and modifies its constitution and laws in conformity therewith, and after such modification elects a Governor and members of the Legislature and Senators and members of this House, it shall have its Representatives admitted here. An exception, however, is made in the case of Tennessee and Arkansas, which now have loyal Governors and other State officers and loyal Legislatures. Those States would not be required, under this amendment, to reelect their officers, but the Senators and Representatives already elected, if they can take the oath, would be admitted to seats in Congress, and their present State officers would be allowed to continue in their present positions.

I think this modification a very necessary one. Let gentlemen look over the South and see the character of the men who have been elected as Senators. In almost every instance, where they are not out and out open-throated rebels, who ought to be incarcerated in prisons or exiled from the country instead of approaching this temple of liberty; in almost every instance, I say, where there has been any concessions made to loyal men the Legislatures have elected moderate men for the short term and the most malignant rebels for the long term. Sir, look at Georgia: they would not elect Joshua Hill, but elected Alexander H. Stephens; and so of nearly every rebel State. If the southern people are stupid enough to suppose that such men as Alexander H. Stephens will ever be admitted into the Senate or House of Representatives they might as well be undecieved now. Hence, I say that in view of the fact that the loyal men have had no voice in those reconstructed governments, have had no voice in their legislation, have been dumb and silent under the sway of these traitors who were placed in power over them by the Executive, the loyal men of those States should have a fair opportunity to select men who will truly represent them under the Constitution and laws when modified in accordance with the constitutional amendment proposed by Congress.

I also have an amendment which I intend to offer when the other bill comes up, but will not take up time by reading it now. I will send it to the reporter and he can insert it with my remarks.*

Let us look, Mr. Speaker, at the condition in which we find the country. I hold in my hand the propositions reported by the committee of fifteen. I need not read them. They have been carefully examined by every member. All over the land, North and South, a cry is raised against the report of that committee. I ask gentlemen if they can put their hands on a single page of human history where, after a rebellion has been put down of the character of the one we had to deal with, they can find the conquerors making propositions so mild, so conciliatory, and so merciful as these made by the committee of fifteen—propositions as applicable to the conquerors as the conquered. Yet we find men in this Hall, men all over the South, men holding high positions in the Government before the rebellion, and high positions in the rebel government, who

* Amendment to be proposed by Mr. J. M. ASHLEY to House bill No. —, declaring certain persons ineligible to office under the Government of the United States.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert as follows:

That no person who has acted as president or vice president or member of either house of the congress of the so-called confederate States of America, or as head of any department or bureau thereof, or as military or naval officers above the grade of colonel or master in the navy, or as governor of either of the so-called confederate States or member of the legislature thereof, or member of any State convention who voted for an ordinance of secession, or any person who in a foreign country acted as an agent of the so-called confederate States, or who have treated officers or soldiers or sailors of the Army or Navy of the United States, captured during the late war, otherwise than as lawful prisoners of war, or any person who was an officer of the Army and Navy of the United States, or who was educated at the Military or Naval Academy of the United States, or who was head of any department or bureau under the Government of the United States, or who was a member of the Thirty-Fifth or Thirty-Sixth Congress of the United States, or judge of any court thereof, or who since 1856 acted as a foreign minister or agent of the United States, or who resigned any office, civil or military, in any State or under the Government of the United States and accepted office under any rebel State government, or under the government of the so-called confederate States of America with intent to give aid and comfort to the rebellion, shall ever be eligible to any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States: Provided, That any person included in the above named classes, who before the 1st day of January, A. D. 1865, ceased to give aid and comfort to the rebellion, and labored to restore the authority of the United States in the State in which he resided, shall be exempt from the provisions of this act; and any one claiming the benefit of this provision may make application to the district court of the United States for the district in which he resides, and the judge of said court is hereby authorized and required to hear and determine all applications for exemptions under the provisions of this act, and if the judge before whom any such hearing is had shall be satisfied from the evidence before him that the person claiming exemption did cease to participate in the rebellion or give aid and comfort thereto, and labored to secure a restoration of the authority of the Government of the United States, on or before the 1st day of January, A. D. 1865, he shall cause a record to be made of that fact in a book to be kept by the court for that purpose, and the judge shall cause a certificate to be issued to the person so claiming exemption, setting forth the facts as found by the evidence, whereupon the person so receiving such certificate, shall be restored to all the privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States in the several States.

have the effrontery to tell the people of this country that they will not accept such conditions. If they will not and we permit them to dictate their own terms, is not this a practical surrender on the part of the conqueror to the conquered? Suppose our position had been reversed; suppose the anti-slavery men of this country had gone into a rebellion as the South did, without a pretext, without cause, when they had a majority in this and the other branch of Congress, simply because a pro-slavery man had been elected President. Suppose this to have been the case, that State after State had seceded, had captured the forts of the United States, and had made war on the Union for four years, destroying half a million of lives, as well as running up a debt of over $3,000,000,000 for posterity to pay. I say suppose this to have been the case, do you believe any such proposition would have been made by those men when they had conquered as have been made by this Government, nay, proposed by this very House? Do you suppose that leading anti-slavery men, like Garrison, Phillips, Beecher, Greeley, and Gerrit Smith, would have been sent for by a pro-slavery Executive to be counseled with and sent home as provisional governors to organize States over the heads of the only loyal men in those States? Do you think there would have been any such stupid performance if the North had been in rebellion? No, sir, we would have been stripped naked, as was said by Henry A. Wise the other evening at Alexandria.

My friend from Iowa in front of me [Mr. Price] hands the paper containing the extract I am quoting, and I will read it:

"If I had triumphed," said Governor Wise, "I should have favored stripping them naked. [Laughter.] Pardon! They might have appealed for pardon, but I would have seen them damned before I would have granted it. For myself, the boot being on the other leg, I take no oaths; I ask no pardons! [Prolonged cheers.] I give you that brigade—the old, the lasting, the enduring Wise brigade. [Cheers and applause.]"

Do you suppose if the rebellion in the North to which I have referred had been put down, any traitor would have been permitted to walk in Boston and utter such treason against the Government? No, sir; and yet we are denounced in this Congress as a rump Congress, as Jacobins, as sanguinary men. Why? Because we ask, in restoring the governments of the southern States, that our friends shall have a fair share in the administration of their State governments, and that the leading traitors shall be punished.

Sir, under the Administration, as matters are now going, not a single, solitary traitor will be punished. Rebel soldiers that were in prison have all been liberated, while the soldiers of the grand Union Army who are in prison for the slightest offenses remain, and you cannot get them pardoned out. These are unpleasant facts, but I could not pass them and do my duty without referring to them.

What do we ask? The loyal men of the nation ask that in the restoration of the rebel States the men who were our friends and allies during the rebellion—the loyal men—shall be clothed with the power of the local and State governments of the South. Is this asking too much? If this is not accorded to us, if these men are to come back here, the loyal oath to be repealed as is recommended, and no conditions are to be exacted; if these men are to come back here next year and take possession of the Government, so far from treason being punished and made odious it will only prove to have been a passport to favor and to power.

Sir, has it come to this? Can the unselfish heroism and bravery, the devotion and sacrifices of our soldiers and the loyal men and women of the nation so soon be forgotten? Are the men who conducted this nation safely through the most terrible war recorded in history to admit, now that the rebellion is over, that they are incapable of administering the Government in time of peace? Are the men who fought the opponents of this Government on the battle-field and at the ballot-box for the last four years, and everywhere vanquished
